Sir, we have been at a loss, frequently, in deciding whether you were doing more evil or more good in the world; whether you were not doing more to further the cause of Satan, than that of the Lord. "Hope deferred maketh the heart sick."

"The church and world amalgamate,
A union worse than that of state."

All who walk with God are serious, taking their Lord for their example, and walking by Scripture precepts and warnings.

But are we to renounce all mirth, and be dull and melancholy? Answer: Seriousness and solid happiness are inseparable.

Is there not time for all things? Answer: There is no time for sin and folly. "Every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment." "If any man among you seemeth to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this man's religion is vain. James 1: 26. We are not unaware of the value of a cheerful religion. We respond to the reasonableness of the command to "rejoice evermore." And yet we read that the "joy of the Lord is your strength," and that our rejoicing must be in God to make it a religious joy. It is not a religious joy, where professedly religious men indulge in gratifications that are worldly, sensual, and frivolous.

A passion for amusement wastes time, enfeebles the body, dissipates the mind, destroys usefulness, and leads to great expense. "He that loveth pleasure," says Solomon, "shall be a poor man."

"Fathers, mothers, when your sons
Look to you for daily bread,
Dare ye, in mockery, load with stones
The table that for them is spread!
How can ye hope your sons will live,
If ye, for fish, a serpent give?"

THE SCARLET BEAST.

J. E. CLARK.

We expressed as our opinion in a former article, that the scarlet-colored beast of Rev. 17, is a symbol of the papal civil power just prior to its destruction, or the last form of that power; that it ascended out of the bottomless pit, and is presented in the seventeenth chapter under the seventh vial, just as the judgment is to be executed upon its rider. The rider of this beast is described as a corrupt woman distinctly named—Babylon the Great, and marked as a power that had shed the blood of the saints, and martyred the followers of Jesus. She is described (ver. 18) as being "that great city which reigneth over the kings of the earth." It is manifest, however, that the walls, streets, bricks and mortar, which go to make up a city, a dwelling place, never reigned over anybody.

When it is said that the woman is that great city that reigneth over the kings of the earth (the land), it is clear the meaning is, the power symbolized by this corrupt woman has its seat in that great city—Rome. This power is mystically Babylon, and takes its name from Babylon of the Old Testament. That power was tyrannical, and oppressed God's people, and ruled over all the earth. We shall find by reading Revelation that mystical Babylon has the same characteristics. Ancient Babylon thought herself invincible. So with mystical Babylon. For she "saith in her heart, I sit a queen and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow." Yet God saith "her plagues shall come in one day; death, and mourning, and famine; and she shall be utterly burned with fire; for strong is the Lord God who judgeth her." Rev. 18: 8.

The signs of these times are truly indicative of the soon coming of our blessed Lord. The political and ecclesiastical state of our world speaks volumes. The mournful condition of the Papacy shows the utter helplessness of that once mighty hierarchy. Babylon is fallen, is fallen, and let all the world rejoice. "Rejoice over her, thou heaven, and ye holy apostles and prophets." Rev. 18: 20. Let all the nations sing—Glory, and honor, and power, unto the Lord our God, for his righteous judgments on that corrupt and wicked power which did corrupt the earth with its fornication. Blessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb. Soon, I believe, that joyful morning will dawn, which shall know no night, nor sorrow, but one eternal day.

GREAT PEACE.

G. E. LEE.

Well has the Psalmist said—"Great peace have they which love thy law; and nothing shall offend them" (Ps. 119: 165), as all can testify to be true, who do really love the law of their Creator. It is not little peace, occasionally, but great peace, continually. It is not a peace that must necessarily leave us when tempted, tried, and cast down, but bears us up high above the stormy billows, and enables us to look up to Him who has promised never to leave nor forsake his children in time of trouble. It is not a peace that will cause sleepless nights on account of a troubled conscience, or fears that we shall be stripped of our worldly possessions, but we shall calmly "rest in Jesus," knowing that all is well so long as we are faithful to our trust. It is not a peace that will admit of any doubts or fears as to whether we are saved or not, but we shall know of a certainty that "now are we the sons of God," and are truly heirs to a "glorious inheritance."

It is not a peace that will allow us to exalt ourselves and condemn our neighbors, but we shall "first cast out the beam from our own eye, and then we shall see clearly to cast out the mote from our brother's eye." It is not a peace that will allow our hearts to be filled with wrath, when reminded of our wayward steps, but rather we shall be thankful for kindly reproof, and rejoice that we have not been left to stray in by and forbidden paths, for "nothing shall offend" us, if we sincerely love to walk in the way of righteousness and wisdom; for "her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace." Prov. 3: 17.

There is a great difference between loving God's law, and fearing his law; a great difference between enjoying religion, and enduring the restraint that comes from obeying his commandments. We may have doubts in our minds whether it is right to do this, or that, to go here, or there; yet we know at such times we are not in possession of that peace which it is our privilege to have, if we would but "trust in the Lord and do good." We must not say or do evil, but "do good," if we would have peace; and if we desire harmony among our families, neighbors, and friends, it would be well for us to "follow after the things which make for peace, and things wherewith one may edify another." Rom. 14: 19.

How often do we say or do things that are not unto edification, and which many times cause others much inward grief, that we are wholly unconscious of, or apparently seem to be so, and yet how vain are our excuses when we attempt to justify ourselves in the course we have taken. It may be that we attribute it to our natural disposition or temperament, or that we had so much to attend to at the time that we were easily excited, and gave hasty vent to our feelings. Well, if such is our "natural disposition," let us exchange it at once for an unnatural one, by "putting off the old man with his deeds, and putting on the new man." Then, after we have put on the "new man," we shall be "in Christ . . . . a new creature"; and thus by having the spirit of Christ, we shall bear the fruits of the Spirit, and abound in love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; against which there is no law. We may have the "form of godliness," and justify ourselves in all our daily walks of life, yet if we do really "live in the Spirit," we shall also "walk in the Spirit," and show to the world that we not only have the form, but the power thereof.

Let us take great heed lest we deceive ourselves. We profess to believe the kingdom of God is just about to dawn upon us, but are we fit to dwell in such a high and holy place? Are we in a condition to receive the crown of glory? Do we feel worthy of such a gift? Have we confidence that we shall see the Lord, and that he will present us with such a great and glorious reward? It is certain if we do not "follow peace with all men, and holiness," we cannot expect to see him, much less receive a reward that we are not worthy of. Rather let us crucify the flesh, and endure afflictions, for the promise is sure that "he which endureth to the end shall be saved"; but it is vain for us to hope that we shall be ——"borne to Paradise,

On flowery beds of ease."

O let us be faithful a little longer, and may it ever be our crown of rejoicing, that Jesus is able to, and will fulfill all that he has promised; and instead of being cast down amidst tribulation, let us cheer up, for soon the day of gladness will dawn, and

"If trials here below
Bow down the heart in sadness,
'Tis only for the night;
We shall happy, happy be,
We know there is cheer ahead,
The past is cold and dead;
Better days will dawn,
A welcome sight for thee."

"We know the darkest night brings sunshine on the morn,
And after death's dark gloom, much brighter lights appear;
For there we soon shall meet upon the golden street,
The sweetest, heavenly music, we then, we then shall hear.

Don't you see, don't you see, the better land's before us,
Brighter days will dawn on you as well as me;
For there we soon shall meet upon the golden street,
We'll tune our harps in Zion, and swell the jubilee."

THE SPIRIT OF PRAYER.

The spirit of prayer is an habitual sense of dependence upon God, followed by a habitual longing after God, and a habitual rising of the desire to God. Of a person thus exercised, it may truthfully be said God is in all his thoughts. He lives unto God. He dwells under the shadow of the Almighty. In the hour of prosperity the heart rises in thankfulness to the giver of all good; in the hour of adversity, it bows under the chastening rod; in the hour of perplexity, it is ready to implore the divine guidance; and in the hour of danger and peril to seek the divine protection. God is in all the thoughts, and in the midst of business, which may for the time require the undivided attention, the soul finds intervals to send up its silent aspiration to Heaven, and in answer receives the assurances of the divine favor. While the mind is thus exercised with this habitual spirit of prayer, the first thoughts in the morning go up to God, and the last thoughts at night; and if we wake but a moment "in the night watches," our thoughts spontaneously rise to heaven. There is in the heart thus exercised a habitual sense that "thou God seest me." How careful it causes us to be of our words and actions, how watchful over our thoughts and tempers. Reader, have you this spirit of prayer? Do you enjoy the consciousness of divine favor, which is infinitely more precious "than much fine gold?" Does God see that you desire it more than you desire gold? Do you think about it more than you think about gold? Does God see that your affections are "on things above?" Where is your treasure? If it is in heaven, there will your heart be also. If your heart is not there, if your affections are not there, it is because your treasure is not there; and if you have no treasure there, you are poor indeed!

But how shall we obtain, in larger measure, this spirit of prayer? By watching unto prayer. By cultivating this sense of dependence. By imploring the aid of the Holy Spirit. By "looking unto Jesus." By resolving, in the strength of grace, to do these things, and commencing the work this moment. Many of our pious resolutions remain a "dead letter," simply because we do not enter upon their performance now. "If we know these things, happy are we" if we "do them."—Western Advocate.

DISCUSSION AT LISBON.

Our discussion at Lisbon, N. H., with Eld. Deering, was one of special interest. We had a discussion with him at Richmond, Me., some years since. He is now pastor of a F. W. Baptist church at Pittsfield, N. H. He is a ready speaker, and appears to be fond of debate. We discussed the following questions, prepared by himself:

1. "Does man possess a rational, intelligent part or entity, that will continue its conscious existence after the death of the body?"

2. "Will the wicked be so punished at the judgment as to result in the utter extinction of all consciousness, and to all eternity?"

We spent six sessions, of two hours each, on the first question; and four on the second. The audiences were large and very attentive. Some fifteen ministers were present during the discussion. This is the home of Brn. A. Damon and I. H. Shipman. Bro. Damon has preached here considerable during the past year, and several have embraced the blessed hope. We had a pleasant interview with Bro. Shipman; also, Brn. N. Wheeler, L. C. McKinstry, A. Hoyt, O. D. Eastman, and A. Gordon, who preach the gospel of Christ.

Lisbon is a pleasant village on the Ammonoosuc river, some ten miles north of the Wells river junction, on the R. R. leading to the White Mountains.

Our opponent presented the usual Scriptures supposed to teach that man has a personal, intellectual, conscious entity in himself, that continues to live after the death of the body. He admitted that there is only one conscious, accountable entity, connected with man, which is to be judged, rewarded and punished. As we found the Bible declaring in a very plain manner that those who are now dead in the sea, and in the grave, are to come forth and be "judged;" therefore, it is not true, according to the Bible, that the accountable being, called man, who is to be judged, is alive between death and the resurrection. He is asleep in death, and wholly unconscious. To him, no time passes between the moment he fell asleep and the one when he awakes. So far as he knows, he crosses the stream of death that separates this life from the next, "in the twinkling of an eye."

Elder Deering labored hard to persuade the Bible writers to assist him in sustaining the affirmative of the first proposition, and the negative of the second; but they all utterly refused, and left him with no other proof but his own assertions, and the opinions of uninspired men. The Lord gave his truth a glorious triumph, that greatly cheered the hearts of many of his children.

The Elder denied that the bodies which are placed in the graves will ever be raised from the dead. It is now becoming very common for ministers who believe in the immortality of the soul to deny the resurrection of the dead. Such are in great danger of sinking into the mire of Spiritualism, and thus be ruined for ever.

During our discussion with the Elder, the truth looked more precious than ever; and we felt that we had great reason to thank the Lord that we had seen the light now shining so plainly on his word, showing beyond all doubt that man is a mortal being, that the wicked will all be destroyed; and that only the righteous will live eternally.

Elder Deering claimed that all spirits go to sheol at death. We inquired if Christ was there now? If not, as the Bible teaches, then when christians die they do not go to be with Christ. If he is there, then he has not yet risen from the dead, and all are "perished," as taught by Paul. We called attention to the fact, as stated in the Bible, that all in sheol, or hades, are entirely unconscious; because the Scriptures declare there is "no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave [sheol] whither thou goest." When this was presented, the Elder undertook to impeach the author of the book of Ecclesiastes; but we found Jesus teaching the same as Solomon in relation to those in hades or sheol. He taught John to write: "The sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell [hades, the grave, margin] delivered up the dead which were in them, and they were judged, every man according to their works."—Rev. 10: 13. Inasmuch as the one to be "judged" was dead in hades, it follows that if the spirit goes there at death, and was the accountable, conscious entity before it entered sheol, it is dead while there, and will not know any thing till the resurrection of the dead takes place, at the coming of Christ. In harmony with this, Jesus says: "Marvel not at this; for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; 'they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." John 5: 28, 29. Inasmuch as the "good" and "evil" entities, or beings, are in the grave, and are to come to life at the resurrection; it follows that they are dead while they remain there. Paul said he had "hope toward God, . . . that there shall be a resurrection of the dead both of the just and the unjust." Acts 24: 15. Here, again, we find "just" and "unjust" attached to what is dead; therefore that which is dead in sheol, hades, the grave, is the moral, intellectual personality, who did the sinning or was righteous, before he went there; but while there is dead, having no "knowledge nor wisdom." The Elder could find no Scripture to contradict these plain passages.

He claimed that we have new bodies once in seven years, or less; and therefore, if the identity was in the physical organism, the wives and husbands we have now are not the ones we had seven years ago; and that we have no right to punish a man for what was done over seven years since, because his identity is entirely changed, if it inheres in the body. He said Adam had many bodies during his life time upon earth; therefore his identity was in his spirit, which never died. We then called his attention to Gen. 5: 5, which reads: 'And all the days that Adam lived were nine hundred and thirty years, and he died." We inquired what it was that lived nine hundred and thirty years? Something called "Adam" lived nine hundred and thirty years, and then died. That same one lived "an hundred and thirty years, and begat a son in his own likeness." Gen. 1: 3. So the Elder was obliged to admit one of two things, either of which was fatal to his proposition. If he admitted that the body lived nine hundred and thirty years, then his theory, as to the entire change of the body in once in seven years, was utterly demolished; if he claimed it was the spirit of Adam that lived nine hundred and thirty years, then that was what died at the end of the period; consequently, could not be immortal. He passed over the subject in silence, refusing to give it consideration. This was probably the easiest way to meet the difficulty.

In harmony with the Bible, we introduced the testimony of L. De Frowne, LL. D., the most noted physiologist in the world, who published a work in England last year on the subject. He says: "Man is composed of vegetable and animal matter; therefore is partially subject to change daily; for new matter is forming, and neutral matter is passing through the absorbents. Some say that man is made new in a certain number of years; but this is not so; if it were, we should not retain the same organization. But the new matter, when formed, unites with the old, whereby the same being, and the same organization is retained." Vol. iii., sec. 11, 12, 13, p. 34.

C. Cutter, LL.D., says that "man cannot be totally changed and retain the same organization, but in the change the new particles unite with the original matter." Vol. 4, sec. 18–25, p. 675.

Says Draper LL. D.: "Man is daily going through a change, by formation of new particles, but the change is never total; neither could it be, and retain the same organization, or person." Vol. 9, p. 779. The same from Tower and Fraendbock, vol. 8, p. 611.

If we put new shingles or clapboards on to a house, there is quite a contrast between the two. The one looks new, and the other looks old. This injures the harmony. If a piece of choice furniture is injured, so that a new piece must be inserted, it would be the perfection of art to make the new look just like the old, so that the change should not be noticed. We have known much labor and money spent to accomplish this result, so as to preserve the original beauty and harmony. The Savior has well said: "No man putteth a piece of new cloth into an old garment; for that which is put in to fill up taketh from the garment, and the rent is made worse." Matt. 9: 16. This law is strictly observed in the repairs of the human constitution. If the person is but a child, then the system prepares from the food taken, matter adapted to form a child's constitution. If the person is forty years of age, and a particle is needed in the place of another, the system then prepares one in nature, size, and looks, just like the forty-year old particle that must be removed because it is worn out. If the man is ninety years old, and a worn-out particle is to be replaced, it is not done by one that is new, like a particle of a child's body, but one that corresponds in every respect with the one that is removed; thus the man ninety years of age is kept harmonious. The constitution of the man ninety years of age can only make ninety-year old particles from his blood. If it were not so, then we should see new spots on old people, like new shingles just put on to an old house.

With this arrangement, we see how Adam lived nine hundred and thirty years, and then died. His whole constitution was nine hundred and thirty years old in its nature and appearance; and every particle added the year of his death, was like those which had been in him nine hundred and thirty years. This law holds good in all men and animals. By this means the identity is preserved.

Our opponent denied that man's identity was in his physical organism, because it changed once in seven years; but claimed that the identity was in his mind, which did not change like his body. But we presented facts to show that our thoughts, like our blood, or like the water in a river, are changing perpetually. If a man looks upon the Mississippi river to-day, and again to-morrow, does he see the same river? The same banks are there, but the water is not the same. So we may look upon a man to-day seated in his easy-chair, and to-morrow visit him again in the same situation. How shall we identify him? by his thoughts, or his physical constitution? His thoughts are entirely changed from what they were at the first interview. Yesterday, he might have been an able reasoner; to-day he is idiotic, or insane. Yesterday he had a strong memory, to-day he has forgotten his own name. Yet he is the same man, and would be readily identified by his physical constitution. We never identify our friends by their thoughts or mental powers. Without the material organism, there could be no thought or personal identity. This fact seems too plain to admit of controversy.

Shortest Route to Europe.—Now the European and North American rail-road is opened between Eastern Maine and St. John, N. B., it will be said we can go to Europe in a week. The road is to be extended to Halifax. This new road is an important enterprise for the commercial interests of both Europe and America.

Lisbon.—The meetings on the Sabbath following the discussion were seasons of special interest. Before the morning sermon, we had an excellent love-feast. The Spirit of the Lord was upon us. We found the saints had been much strengthened and comforted by the discussion. Those who had been unsettled, after hearing the discussion, had become satisfied that the Bible teaches the sleep of the dead and the destruction of the wicked. The results of the debate were highly satisfactory to our friends. Large and attentive audiences were present all day and evening.

Jesus is Coming.—We never felt better satisfied that Jesus is coming soon than at the present time. There is a combination of evidence that is overwhelming. We do not see how the careful student of prophecy and history, who observes the signs of the times, can come to any other conclusion. Heaven, earth and sea, unite their voices to proclaim the glad hour at hand. The bride is getting ready. Dear reader, are you clothed with Christ's righteousness, all ready to meet the blessed Savior?

☞ By some mistake "Part 2nd" of Bro. Geo. Thomson's article on "Rich Man and Lazarus" is prematurely given to our readers this week. "Part 1st" will be published in next paper, then the conclusion of "Part 2nd."

Personal.—Bro. B. P. Stevens called at our office this morning (Oct. 30th), on his way home to South Butler, N. Y. He is still quite weak, and we judge will be unable to labor for some time to come. We hope the brethren and sisters will pray for him, and remember him after a godly sort. He would say to those who have administered to his comfort, that they will hear from him as soon as he is able to write. C. G.

NAPOLEON'S PROSPECT.

If Napoleon III. is to assist in fulfilling, as we believe, the prophecy in Rev. 17 11—"And the beast that was, and is not, even he is the eighth, and is of the seven, and goeth into perdition"—we think we have good reason to conclude that his defeat, surrender, and imprisonment at Chiselhurst, correspond with the Elba of Napoleon I. His St. Helena banishment to "perdition," is yet to come. Says a close observer:—

"Chiselhurst may be Louis Napoleon's Elba, for even now the 'spectre' is stalking through France on the way to a return to the Imperial throne. 'Every one thinks it and knows it, but no one dares to say it,' is the manner in which letters from Paris refer to the increasing sentiment in favor of a Republic conducted after the manner of M. Thiers' experiment, and increases more from disaffection among the Republicans themselves than from any fondness for Bonapartism. Such, at least, are the reports of various observers in France."

Napoleon I. was evidently a type of the III. Thus far the Third Napoleon has followed in the steps of the First. The final step is yet to be taken, and then comes "perdition." Events are rapidly approaching a crisis of terrible results. A change of gigantic magnitude must come soon; and observing men of the world, who pay no attention to prophecy, are convinced that some great event is at hand.

FROM THE POPE.

The following is the reply of the Pope to an address of the Catholic students of Rome. He says: "Divine justice weighs heavily upon us, and permits the enemies of the church to exalt their pride." He confesses he is in "tribulation." This address of the Pope to the students was made Oct. 7th. He says:—

"I thank you for the noble sentiments you have expressed, and for your affection and devotion. It is true that the divine justice weighs heavily upon us, and permits the enemies of the church to exalt their pride, to resist himself, to persecute His ministers, and to reduce the Vicar of Christ to the state which you have so truly described. And yet I cannot deny that in the tribulation the Lord gives consolation, so that it may be borne. I freely confess that, unless the grace of God had sustained me, I must have sunk under so many bitter griefs. At this present moment consolation comes to me through your faith, your concord and your good will; faith, concord, and good will that cause you to pursue your religious education, and to place yourself in opposition to all that has been so rudely introduced into this city. It is a fact that in none of the cities of Italy where the Revolution has penetrated, has the weight of the opposition, its perfidy, and its vengeance been as severely felt as at Rome. And the reason is evident; it is because the devil well knows that Rome is the seat of Catholicism; he knows that from this city as from a centre radiate the beams which go to enlighten the utmost bounds of the earth; from hence emanate the doctrines of truth and justice; from hence go forth the spirit and the might that come from God. This is why the devil's hand is heavier here than elsewhere. On this very account also you have gained the greater merit by your disinterestedness and self-denial." In conclusion, the Pope added: "May Almighty God bless you and prosper you in your studies, and grant you much success in the liberal professions which you have chosen, and make you an honor to them, and worthy members of society."

INTERESTING FROM THE EAST.

Almost every day we receive some new evidence to favor the glorious hope of soon seeing Jesus. The following from the New York Independent, Oct. 19th, contains interesting intelligence:—

"Extraordinary statements of a stir in the East have been current lately. 'In Damascus,' it is said, 'not less than three thousand Mohammedans have avowed a desire to become christians. They have regular prayer meetings,' and pray to the Lord Jesus Christ that he will reveal himself as their Savior, and lead them into truth and light.' The British consul, to whom the matter has been brought, is represented as 'taking the greatest interest in this wonderful appearance'; and the missionaries are reported as saying that it increases every day.' 'There is also a movement among the Jews. Many, like Nicodemus, faithful inquirers, are coming to Mr. Frankell, asking him to guide them to the Savior. The Druses are now looking for their Savior's coming from China. In Persia, also, a great spiritual movement, in looking forward to the coming Savior, is evident. All these wonderful things, compared with the Holy Bible, mark the day-break of a better time for the East. These are golden days in which we are privileged to be employed in the Lord's work.'

We quote these statements from a letter appearing in the London Record, and addressed to the Secretary of the Ladies' Society for the Religious Improvement of Syrian Women. It is considered trustworthy. We wait its confirmation with interest."

TARES GATHERED FIRST.

"Bro. Sheldon:—How do you harmonize the claim that the saints are to be caught up to meet the Lord in the air before the wicked are destroyed, with the order given by Jesus, "Gather ye together first the tares, and bind them in bundles to burn them; but gather the wheat into my barn"? Matt. 13: 30."

We discover no discrepancy, for the term "first" here employed simply shows that the destruction of the wicked will take place before the wheat is gathered into the heavenly garner, which will be after "he shall thoroughly purge his floor," but not before the saints are caught up to meet the Lord. Thus the tares are to be burned first, or the wicked to be destroyed first, simply in the sense of being destroyed before the saints enter the promised land, which entrance will be after it is "purged," or cleansed by fire, in which fire the wicked will be consumed. But the wicked are not to be burned first in the sense of its occurring before the saints rise to meet the Lord in the air, for it is not till the Lord shall "be revealed from heaven, with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God," that sinners are to be destroyed. Christ comes to reap the wheat, then to destroy the crop of tares from the field, then to store the wheat safely in his glorious garner, after "he shall thoroughly purge his floor." In other words, it is the divine plan to first burn the tares, and then give the kingdom to the saints; but while the tares are being burned, the saints will be in their celestial chambers. W. S.

BREATH OF LIVES.

Not unfrequently are we met with the claim that the original warrants this rendering in the record of man's creation—"Breathed into his nostrils the breath of lives," instead of life; and then the claim is set up that man possesses two lives—one mortal life and one immortal life.

1. If this were true, and, if the immortal life were a personality, the mortal life must also be a personality, thus making two invisible personalities in each human body.

2. But to the astonishment of the advocates of the two lives for each man, they will find that the original just as positively attributes the "breath of lives" to the animal creation, as to man. Gen. 6: 17. Have the animals two lives apiece, one being an invisible animal, living on after the stroke of death? Let those who circulate this kind of theological currency accept their own coin, or acknowledge that it is counterfeit, and cease circulating it for time to come.

3. The simple truth is, God gave man and beast a succession of lives, in the sense of power to transmit life to their offspring, instead of working a new miracle every time a child is born, to infuse life into it. It is an inherent element in both man and beast, being transmitted; but is not a personality in either case. W. S.

"HOW ARE THE DEAD RAISED UP?"

Because the philosophy of the resurrection cannot be explained, the doctrine is being extensively repudiated by the would-be-wise theologians of the day; but this principle fully carried out would unsettle faith in every miracle recorded in the Bible; for the resurrection itself is nothing less than a miracle.

No miracle ever has been or ever can be explained, except on the principle of the unlimited power of God, which is incomprehensible to man. The admission of God's power to work any miracle, is a concession of his power to miraculously raise the dead; for if he really has any miraculous power, who shall limit it because of inability to measure it? Well might Paul propound the question—"Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you that God should raise the dead?"

And in response to the query of the skeptic—"How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" Paul responds—"Thou fool, that which thou sowest is not quickened [made alive] except it die"; so the resurrection will make alive a body that has died, instead of liberating a deathless body from a dying body. "But that which thou sowest [in sowing grain], thou sowest not that body that shall be [at the harvest], but bare grain [unclothed grain], it may chance [to be a sowing] of wheat, or of some other grain: but God giveth it a body as it hath pleased him, and to every seed his own body [in a clothed state—not naked grain]. . . . There are also celestial bodies, and bodies terrestrial. . . . So also is the resurrection of the dead. It is sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption. . . . It is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body"—the saints body clothed with immortality. W. S.

"WITHOUT REPENTANCE."

"Does Paul mean to teach that some men can be saved without repenting of sin, in Rom. 11: 29—'The gifts and calling of God are without repentance'"?

We think not, because (1) as God is "no respecter of persons," if he could save one sinner without repentance, he could as easily save every sinner on the same principle; but (2) the apostle is not here speaking of sinners, but of "a remnant according to the election of grace" (v. 5), who are "beloved for the fathers' sakes," not on the principle of blood-relationship, but in consideration of the fact that "they which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham"; and that remnant were just as really entitled to the benefits of "the gifts and calling of God," as though others had not fallen; for they are "without repentance" on the part of God—that is, God will not repent of his great plan because some have spurned his arrangement, but will live out his contract with the "remnant according to the election of grace," and the "broken off" branches can never share in the benefits of the divine plan except by being grafted in again by faith, and that involves repentance.

God will not repent of his "gifts and calling" for the sake of saving any class of men, and Christ came to call "sinners to repentance"—not to save them without repentance. While God is "no respecter of persons," he is a "respecter of character; hence, he will not repent of his "gifts and calling" to the faithful ones who are of faith, though they be but a "remnant according to the election of grace." God's plan is not to be repented of, though the many repudiate it. W. S.

THE LORD'S SUPPER.

A brother who has embraced the truth on the coming kingdom, and the life and death theme, writes thus:—

"I hold my membership with the Christian church. . . . . It is a custom with the church of which I am a member to meet every first day to break the loaf, and partake of the wine, commemorative of the Lord's death. As I am unacquainted with the customs and usages of the Advent brethren, will you please inform me of your customs in this matter? How often do you meet for that purpose? Do you hold it to be an institution to be attended to every Sabbath? At what time of day—at evening, or at any hour of the day? Do you have a discipline separate from the Bible?
J. Hamilton."

REPLY.

1. We break bread on the first day of the week, but not every first day, as we find no such injunction.

2. We eat the Lord's Supper at supper time, and not at breakfast time. We surround a table, instead of passing the elements around the house. We have as much right to substitute sprinkling for baptism, because it is more convenient, as to omit the table on the plea that it is not convenient, or to eat the Supper in the morning because it is not convenient to gather at night. God's plan must not be perverted to suit our convenience.

3. We content ourselves with the original discipline of heaven—the Bible—and do not think that man can better it. Christ is the only legislative Head of the church. W. S.

THE FLAG OF TRUTH.

Let it float. Never trail it in the dust in the presence of its enemies. Never conceal it for fear of displeasing foes. It is God's flag—let it float to the breeze. Cheer it, by speaking earnest words in its favor, in the spirit of love. Honor it every where, and at all times, by acknowledging it to be the flag of your choice. What if men do scoff at it, and prefer tradition's flag? It is our business to keep the true flag floating. Who will hold up the truth if its friends do not do it? Shall we wait till men respect the truth before we present it to them, for fear they will disrelish it? If the apostles had acted on this principle, christian theology would have been obliterated eighteen centuries ago. Let us have the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, and keep it in sight. W. S.

FROM KANSAS.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:—It has for some time seemed duty for me to write you through the Crisis. May God direct. O that I might drop the oil of consolation on some desponding heart. Often have I been cheered and strengthened when reading of the trials and victories of those who love the appearing of Jesus. We, too, have reason to be very thankful to our heavenly Father for the many blessings we enjoy on the beautiful prairies of Kansas. There are a few waiting ones here. We are doing all we can to scatter the seeds of truth. Pray with us that it may bring forth fruit abundantly. We have been here about a year and a half, laboring for the Lord what we could. Our circumstances are such that my husband has been able to devote only part of his time to preaching, having to depend entirely upon our own labors for the necessities of life.

We have met sad reverses in worldly prospects; have been persecuted, our names cast out as evil; but, thanks be to God, his grace has been sufficient for us. There comes floating to our hearts a gentle, loving whisper—"My children." If we have this blessed assurance, nought that others can say will molest our peace with Christ. Though we have had trials that have caused the heart to ache, we have always had this faithful promise—"Happy are ye when they shall revile and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake. Rejoice and exult, because great is your reward in heaven; for so they persecuted the prophets that were before you." Matt. 5: 11, 12. (Rev. Trans.)

We have tried faithfully to discharge our duties. The Lord has owned and blessed our labors; some have found the truth and rejoice in it. There is an increasing interest for reading matter; the silent preachers are at work, and we trust yet some precious souls may be snatched from the burning. We need more tracts for distribution, but we have not the means to purchase. We feel to trust all the ways and means in the hands of the Lord. Bro. J. V. Himes visited us last spring, and also in the summer; preached the word faithfully. May God give him strength in his declining years to proclaim the blessed hope. This is all the help we have had.

O that the Master would send faithful men with hearts full of the love of Jesus among us. This is truly a great mission field. Let us all endeavor to be faithful, humble, earnest christians, cheered and encouraged as the signs proclaim that Jesus is soon coming to reward his tried and faithful ones. Pray for us, dear brothers and sisters, that we may be among the number of the redeemed at Christ's coming. Your Bro. and sister waiting for Jesus,
H. J. & F. E. Munson.

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield Camp-ground, August 22d, 1871, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

Correspondence.

From Sr. Ellen Dufell.

Dear Brothers and Sisters in Christ:—I feel it a duty I owe you to add my feeble testimony for the truth. Through the kindness of a friend, I have had the beloved Crisis to read for the past year. Very precious has it been to me. I prize it next my Bible. I read and re-read its precious words, then send to those who have them not, trusting it may do them good, and learn them the way to better understand the teachings of Jesus.

There are none here but myself and aged companion who earnestly love this blessed hope of Jesus' soon coming. We seldom have any preaching on the coming of Christ. Sometimes a dear pilgrim calls at our house, and breaks to us the bread of life. "Silver and gold have I none," not even scrip; but I am rich in the love of God, and happiness the world knows nothing of. I rejoice to hear that the dear brothers and sisters in other places are preparing for the last day, laying aside ornaments, dressing more plainly, and dedicating themselves more fully to the Lord.

I labored long for holiness of heart. Thank God that he has heard me. Never shall I forget the first of Sept., 1871. That day I dedicated all to my Savior, and lay like an infant in its mother's arms. My peace is like a river. Sin has no more dominion over me. I feel to say continually, Praise the Lord; bless his holy name; let all the earth give thanks. I believe Jesus is soon coming, but oh how unprepared is the world around! The churches asleep, and shepherds going astray. My prayer is that God would send faithful servants into his vineyard. The harvest is ripe, ready for the reaper. I hope to be found ready when he comes, doing my duty faithfully. For five years past, I have scattered tracts and papers, as I had opportunity; and I hope it may be like bread cast upon the waters, gathered after many days.

Bro. Whitaker, Taylor, Louderbas, from Philadelphia, and Bro. Babcock from Newfield, have visited us at times, and held meetings, and some have been led to believe, but fear to openly espouse the truth. O the fear of man! what a snare to the soul! Thank God, I am freed from it. O glorious thought! we shall soon see dear Jesus. I never felt more like serving him than now. My heart is full of his love. Jesus all the day long is my joy and song. Press on, dear brothers and sisters. May we all meet in the kingdom.

The Story of Peshtego.

DETAILS OF THE TERRIBLE DISASTER.

A correspondent of the New York Tribune, writing from the spot where lately stood the thriving village of Peshtego, furnishes some graphic details of that terrible disaster, some of which we here subjoin:

In the glory of this Indian summer afternoon I look out on the ghastliest clearing that ever lay before mortal eyes. The sandy streets glisten with a frightful smoothness, and calcined fragments are all that remain of imposing edifices and hundreds of peaceful homes. This ominous clearing is in the centre of a blackened, withered forest of oak, pine and tamarack, with a swift river—the Peshtego—gliding silently through the centre from northeast to southwest. Situated seven miles from the Green Bay, on the Peshtego river, the town commanded all the lumber trade of the northern peninsula, and grew rapidly into importance as a frontier mart of Chicago. Built by an enterprising but lately singularly unfortunate Chicago sufferer, Wm. B. Ogden, the town has had but one purpose, to make money for its founder and keep up the lumber interests. The banks of the Peshtego team with a rich and various growth of timber, and a trade of years stood always in prospective to her busy people. The great Northern Pacific Railroad was to be tapped by a road even now building to the place where Peshtego was, and every hamlet and town in northern Wisconsin envied and admired the wonderful little city. . . .

The fire had raged up to the very outskirts of the town weeks before that fatal Sunday and the fires set outward to fight the enemy. Everything inflammable had apparently been taken out of harm's way on that memorable Sunday.

THE FIERY HURRICANE.

The sharp air of early October had sent the people in from the evening church services more promptly than usual, although numbers delayed to speculate on a great noise and ado which set in ominously from the west. The housewives looked tremblingly at the fires and lights within and the men took a last look at the possibilities without; for many it was truly a last glimpse. The noise grew in volume, and came nearer and nearer with terrific crackling and detonations. The forest rocked and tossed tumultuously; a dire alarm fell upon the imprisoned village, for the whirling blasts came now from every side. In one awful instant, before expectation could give shape to the horror, a great flame shot up in the western heavens, and in countless fiery tongues struck downward into the village, piercing every object that stood in the town like a red hot bolt. A deafening roar, mingled with blasts of electric flame, filled the air and paralyzed every soul in the place. There was no beginning to the work of destruction; the flaming whirlwind swirled in an instant through the town. There was no diversity in general experience; all heard the first inexplicable roar; some aver that the earth shook, while a credulous few avow that the heavens opened, and the fire rained down from above. Moved by a common instinct, for all knew that the woods that encircled the town were impenetrable, every habitation was deserted to the flames, and the gasping multitude flocked to the river. Here below the western bank they roasted in the hot breath of flame that hovered above them, and singed the hair on each head momentarily exposed above the water. Here despairing men and women held their children till the cold water came as an ally to the flames, and deprived them of strength.

Meantime the eastern bank was densely crowded by the dying and the dead. Rushing to the river from this direction the swirling blasts met the victims full in the face and mowed a swath through the fleeing throng. Inhalation was annihilation. Scores fell before the first blast. A few were able to crawl to the pebbly flats, but so dreadfully disfigured that death must have been preferable. All could not reach the river; even the groups that fell prone on the grateful damp flats suffered excruciating agony. The fierce blaze playing in tremendous counter currents above them on the higher ground, was sufficiently strong to set the clothes aflame, and the flying sand, heated as by a furnace, blistered the flesh wherever it fell. All that could break through the stifling simoon had come to the river. In the red glare they could see the sloping bank covered with the bodies of those that fell by the way. Few living on the back streets succeeded in reaching the river, the hot breath of the fire cutting them down as they ran. But here a new danger befell. The cows, terrified by smoke and flame, rushed in a great lowing drove to the river brink. Women and children were trampled by the frightened brutes, and many, losing their hold on the friendly logs, were swept under the waters. . . .

Although the onslaught of fire and wind had been instantaneous, and the destruction almost simultaneous, the fierce, stifling currents of heat careered through the air for hours. These currents were more fatal than the flames of the burning village.

The tornado was but momentary, but was succeeded by maelstroms of fire, smoke, cinders and red hot sand. Wherever a building seemed to resist the fire, the roof would be sent whirling into the air, breaking into clouds of flame as it fell. The shower of sparks, cinders and hot sand fell in continuous and prodigious force, and did quite as much in killing the people as the first terrific sirocco that succeeded the fire. The wretched throng neck deep in the water, and the still more hapless beings stretched on the heated sands, were pierced and blistered by these burning particles. They seemed like lancets of red hot steel, penetrating the thickest covering. The evidence now remains to attest the incredible force of the slenderest pencils of darting flame. Hard iron-wood plow-handles still remain, perforated as though by minnie-balls, and for the main part unburnt. When the hapless dwellers in the remote streets saw themselves cut off from the river groups broke in all directions in a wild panic of fright and terror. A few took refuge in a cleared field bordering on the town. Here flat upon the ground, with faces pressed in the sand, the helpless sufferers lay and roasted. But few survived the dreadful agony. The next day revealed a picture exceeding in horror any battle-field. Mothers with children hugged closely lay in groups, the clothes burned off and the poor flesh seared to a crisp. One mother, solicitous only for her babe, embalms her unutterable love in the terrible picture left on these woeful sands. With her bare fingers she had scraped out a pit, as the soldiers did before Petersburg, and pressing the little one into this, she put her own body above it as a shield, and when the daylight came both were dead—the little baby face unscarred, but the mother burnt almost to cinders. . . . After the burning heat of the night, a numbing chill followed, and the water soaked group crawled over dead bodies and hot sands to the only blazing building in all the waste about them. Groups of dead were found within a stone's throw of the water. The ghastly throng huddled, shrieking and bewailing about the flaring embers, and the terrible roll of the missing was soon called from end to end of the ashen waste. On Sunday night something over two thousand people were assembled within the confines of this industrious, prosperous city; the dreadful morning light came upon a haggard, maniacal multitude of less than seven hundred. As the molten sands cooled off, the woful work of recognition began. Peering into blackened faces, mothers, fathers, brothers tremblingly sought missing ones. . . . Through the solid growth of timber a clean swath of blackened stumps and roots marked the course of the fiery tempest. The roads were cumbered with roasted cattle, and frequently with the carcasses of bears and deer, while the ditches and cleared fields were strewn with smaller game and wild birds. Nearing the vicinity sadder relics were found, for those who penetrated outward through the wall of flame met equally fierce flames in the clearest places. Remote dwellers on the high roads, warned of the great danger, with their families safely packed on their great farm wagons, made northward through the highways for security; but the flames engulfed them in the heart of the woods, and the fragments of stout vehicles, burned to the irons, now strew the road hither from Marinette, the last town on the Northern Wisconsin border. Among the pines scores lay, not burnt, but smothered to death. Through this underbrush thirty bodies were picked up, more or less injured by fire. In a great many instances the human remains were distinguished from animals by the teeth alone. One horror-struck relative recognized the relics of his nephew by a pen-knife imbedded in an oblong mound of ashes.

The material loss is estimated at $3,000,000, the greater part of which falls on Wm. B. Ogden, who suffered simultaneously greater losses in Chicago. But undaunted by his accumulating misfortunes, that energetic man instantly sent an agent on to rebuild the mills and shops, and gather a new people in the place if possible. There are four hundred dead authentically accounted for; there are beside half as many missing who cannot be accounted for, and probably never will be. Many of the mill hands and Company employees were utter strangers in the place, and the majority of them, something like one hundred, trusting to the stout walls of the Company's building, perished en masse.

Interchange of Postal Money Orders.—The convention for the interchange of postal money orders between Great Britain and the United States having been duly ratified, will go into effect on the 2nd day of October, and the Post-office Department has now completed preliminary arrangements for its practical operation. Of the 2,455 money order offices of this country, 570 have been authorized to issue postal orders on the Postmaster at New York City, for payment in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and to pay orders issued by him for sums certified by the Post-office Department in that country for payment in the United States. These officers have been selected in all the States and Territories, with a view of accommodating the localities where the greatest number of such foreigners reside as will be likely to make use of them. All exchanges are to be made through the two government exchange offices in New York and London. In this country applications can be made only for the equivalent in sterling of a certain sum of money in United States currency, which latter amount may be deposited at the local office, as transmitted to New York, and there converted in pound sterling on the day of its receipt. This draft is made payable by the British authorities in any designated locality of the kingdom. No single order will be issued for more than $50; but persons desiring to remit larger sums can obtain additional money orders. The rates of commission on these money orders will be as follows:—An order not exceeding $10, 25 cents; over $10 and not exceeding $20, 50 cents; over $20 and not exceeding $30, 75 cents; over $30 and not exceeding $40, $1; over $40 and not exceeding $50, $1,25.

The loss the family sustains is great, but their sorrow is mingled with sweet memories of household words and kindly acts flowing daily out from a christian life. Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

London, Oct. 25. The Morning Post, regarded as a semi-official organ, pronounces the rumor regarding the establishment of a regency, in consequence of the Queen's prolonged illness, as entirely devoid of foundation.

COURT THEATRE BURNED.

Darmstadt, Oct. 24. The Court Theatre took fire this afternoon and is now wrapped in flames. A heavy easterly wind is blowing and it is feared the fire will spread to adjacent buildings.

9 P. M. The fire is rapidly spreading. The theatre is entirely destroyed and a strong wind carries the flames and sparks westward into the upper town. The arsenal is in danger, and the troops of the garrison have evacuated it.

London, 27. Queen Victoria contributed £500 for Chicago. The fund at the Mansion House last night was £41,500. The Mayor of Bristol has received £1600.

THE VICTIMS OF THE EXPLOSION.

Thirty of the thirty-three men in the mine at Seaham, where the explosion occurred yesterday, are dead. The pit is on fire and another explosion is feared. There is great excitement among the miners and their families.

London, Oct. 26. The entire reorganization of of the Russian army for the training of the people to arms raises the total field and landwehr forces for war to 1,600,000 men and 81,000 officers. Sixty-six regiments of Cossacks are not yet included. There is created further a reserve force, which in case of invasion is equivalent to making every man a soldier on a peace footing, of 750,000 men and 55,000 officers. The new artillery adds one thousand guns to the old force. This enormous change in the military forces of Russia is masked under the mere creation of a landwehr called local forces, which nominally leaves the old army intact.

PROTEST OF THE POPE.

Rome, Oct. 28. An allocution of the Pope is published in which while he recognizes the Bishops appointed by the Italian Government as possessing the requisite qualifications, he solemnly protests against the measure of the Holy See. He also condemns the course of Dr. Dollinger and such as are following his example in warring against the decisions of the Ecumenical Council.

London, Oct. 28. The Mansion House fund for Chicago amounts to 42,250 pounds, Belfast subscription to 5000 pounds, and liberal contributions have been received from towns in Ulster.

DOMESTIC.

Salt Lake City, Oct. 28. Chief McKean this morning passed sentence upon Thomas Hawkins, the polygamist, as follows:

"Thomas Hawkins: I am sorry for you, very sorry. You may not think so now, but I shall try to make you think so by the mercy which I shall show you. You came from England to this country with the wife of your youth. For many years you were a kind husband and a kind father. At length, however, the evil spirit of polygamy tempted and possessed you. Then happiness departed from your household, and now, by complaint of your wife and the verdict of a law abiding jury, you stand at this bar as a convicted criminal. The law gives me a large discretionary power in passing sentence upon you. I might imprison you twenty years and fine you $1000. I cannot imprison you for less than three years, nor fine you less than $300. It is right that you should be fined, among other reasons, to help defray the expenses of enforcing the laws; but my experience in Utah has been such that were I to fine you only I am satisfied that the fine would be paid out of other funds than yours, and thus you would go free, absolutely free, from all punishment; and then those men who mislead the people would make thousands of others believe that God had sent the money to pay the fine; that God had prevented the court from sending you to prison; that, by a miracle, you had been rescued from the authorities of the United States. I must look to it that my judgment gives no aid and comfort to such men. I must look to it that my judgment be so severe as not to seem vindictive, and not so light as to seem to trifle with justice; that this community begin to learn that God does not interpose to rescue criminals from the consequences of their crimes, but that on the contrary he so orders the affairs of his universe, that sooner or later crime stands face to face with justice, and justice is the master. I will say here and now that whenever your good behavior and the public good shall justify me in doing so, I will gladly recommend that you be pardoned. The judgment of the Court is that you be fined five hundred dollars, and that you be imprisoned at hard labor for the term of three years."

NO EXCITEMENT MANIFESTED OVER THE RESULT.

Contrary to all expectations there was little or no excitement in the court room. The attendance was large, but generally all maintained a proper decorum. The United States Marshal and detectives were fully prepared for any emergency. Notice of an appeal to the Supreme Court was given by the prisoner's counsel.

PROMINENT MORMONS ARRESTED FOR MURDER.

Daniel H. Wells, Mayor of the city, Hosea Stout, formerly Attorney General of the Territory, and Wm. Belden of Kimball's Hotel, Parley Canon, were arrested to-day by U. S. Marshal Patrick upon an indictment of the grand jury charging them with murder. Tom Fitch made application to admit them to bail, which application is to be heard Monday morning. The prisoners were placed in a carriage and taken to Camp Douglas. Some slight excitement prevailed at the Marshal's office while the accused were there waiting for conveyance to camp. Some policemen said they should not go to prison if they did not wish to, and one or two women called out to the officers to take them if they dared, and they would fight them with a vengeance. The officers, however, were firm, and nothing serious happened. The alleged crime consists in the killing of Richard Yates and a man named Bucky several years ago. A warrant was out for the arrest of Orson Hyde, one of "The Twelve Apostles," upon the same charge, but he eluded the deputies who were sent to arrest him. He was pursued to the southern part of the territory.

WARRANTS ISSUED FOR THE ARREST OF BRIGHAM YOUNG AND OTHERS.

Warrants are out for the arrest of Brigham Young and his son Joseph A. Young on a charge of murder, in having ordered the killing of Richard Yates.

The indictments on all these murder cases are understood to be founded upon the testimony of Bill Hickman, who was once what is termed by the Gentiles a Danite, or secret agent of the Mormon authorities. Yates visited the Mormon Camp during the rebellion ostensibly to sell powder. The Mormons regarded him as a spy, and some weeks afterward arrested him and placed him in the custody of Hickman to be taken to Salt Lake City. D. Wells then commanded the Mormon troops, and Hosea Stout was the Judge Advocate. On the way to Salt Lake he killed Yates. As Hickman says: "My orders were from Brigham Young and Joseph A. Young, and at the instigation of D. Wells and Stout." Hickman is also confined at Camp Douglas. He went with the officers to Echo Canon, and after pointing out where he had buried Yates, assisted them in disinterring the remains.

ESCAPE OF BRIGHAM YOUNG.

Salt Lake City, Oct. 28. It is stated in official circles that Brigham Young left Tuesday evening for the south. Yesterday he was said to have been 130 miles south, and his course is still onward. It is not known to what point he is bound. Many think that he intends to leave the country, but others think that he will find refuge in St.

George village, 300 miles from here, and about 15 days from the court. It is certainly doubtful whether he will appear for trial, and it is also doubtful whether he will be seen again here until the trouble is over.

ANTI-POPERY LECTURER DRIVEN FROM SCRANTON.

New York, Oct. 26. A Scranton, Pa. dispatch states that Rev. Arthur Denton was ordered out of a school house, yesterday afternoon where he intended delivering an Anti-Popery speech. He intended delivering a speech in the evening in Odd Fellows' Hall, but hundreds of Irishmen congregating to prevent him he left town in the evening by order of the Chief of Police.

A letter from Grand Rapids states that three hundred families in Holland, Ottawa county, Mich., were burned out, losing houses, crops, clothing, etc., and even the crops in the fields were burned.

Milwaukee, Wis., Oct. 24. A dispatch from Beloit says that there are large fires in the woods seven miles east of there. Barns, stacks, etc., were burned near Roscoe. Other fires are reported, and the city is filled with dense smoke.

New York, 24th. It is stated that extensive fires are burning in the woods near Cumberland, Maryland, and fears are entertained that the flames may reach the bituminous coal-fields. The mountains in that region have been enveloped in smoke for several days.

San Francisco, Oct. 24. George Q. Cannon, a Mormon Leader in this city, taking counsel on the prosecutions now progressing at Salt Lake, says if the convictions continue the Mormons will burn all they have and make another exodus as they did from Illinois.

A terrible fight is going on at Los Angeles. A fight having occurred in the Chinese quarter, officer Baldwin attempted to arrest a Chinaman for shooting another. He was resisted, and called on Robert Thomson, a citizen, to assist him. The Chinese, on both sides of the narrow street, opened fire on both. Thompson fell, shot through the breast, and died immediately. Officer Baldwin was shot through the shoulder, but succeeded in getting on horseback, and escaped. A Mexican boy was also shot through the leg.

A mob soon collected and the greatest excitement prevailed. They attacked the whole Chinese quarter, but were resisted by the Chinese. Five hundred armed men surrounded the Chinese quarters to prevent any from escaping. Fifteen Chinamen were hanged by the mob and their houses set on fire; the fire, however, was extinguished.

9 P. M. Order at Los Angeles has been partially restored by the authorities, and no more bloodshed has taken place. Several Chinamen have been arrested and lodged in jail.

Oct. 25. The riot at Los Angeles was more disgraceful than at first reported. The mob was composed mostly of native Californians, and the dregs of society. All the Chinese hanged were first frightfully beaten and maltreated. One was only eight or nine years old. In addition to sixteen persons hanged, two men and one woman were found shot dead, and another person was discovered in jail in an insensible condition. Only one of the hanged has been identified as being engaged in the shooting of the officers. The others are supposed to be innocent, the guilty ones having escaped before the mob assaulted their houses. The old vigilance committee has been reorganized to prevent a repetition of the rioting.

THE WAR AGAINST THE KU-KLUX.

New York, Oct. 27. A Spartansburg, S. C. letter of the 23d states that seventy-five Ku-Klux were arrested in that county. Their testimony implicates leading men of all classes. Warrants are out for a hundred more, including a member of the Legislature and one minister. Hundreds are fleeing to escape arrest.

A DESPERATE BAND OF KU-KLUX.

New York, Oct. 25. A Richmond special contains a letter from the Adjutant General of North Carolina, stating that he recently had a private interview with the leaders of a gang of banditti in Robeson county. They desired a free pardon to quit the country, and gave many excuses for the murders they have committed. He offered them a fair trial and good counsel to defend them at Court, but they would not surrender. The inhabitants of the whole country are in league with or fear them. The small force with the Adjutant General did not warrant attacking them at present.

New York, 25th.—A Niagara Falls special states that the woods in Tamarack Swamp, seven miles southeast of Lockport, have been burning since Monday morning, and several houses, barns, crops and stock have been destroyed, and it is feared the fire will spread to Batavia. The farmers are fleeing with their stock and furniture. The fire east of Albion is reported subdued, but another broke out five miles north of that place. The loss since Sunday at Albion is $50,000. Ten houses, two flour mills, and fifteen hundred cords of wood were burned there. The fire on Black Creek, between Fort Erie and Chippewa, Ontario, is still burning, but is confined to the woods. The country there is very thinly settled.

The Forest Fires in Wisconsin—Terrible Destruction of Life and Property—Aid for the Survivors.

Mr. A. B. F. Kinney, who is employed as a travelling agent for the firm of Dillingham & Co., manufacturers and dealers in paper, twine and bags, at 59 Congress street, has just returned from a tour through Northern Wisconsin, the scene of the late terrible fire visitation, and from him we learn some additional particulars in connection therewith. In the first place, Mr. Kinney says no adequate or even approximate description of the extent and terrible destructiveness of the fires in Wisconsin and Michigan has as yet reached the East. Had it not been for the Chicago fire, he feels assured these fires would have been regarded as the most destructive and calamitous of our day, and as it is, the loss of life, and the suffering entailed far exceeds, in his estimation, the Chicago holocaust. He was at Green Bay last Saturday, and conversed with many of the survivors of the catastrophe at Peshtigo, Oconto, Marathon, and Shawana alone, he estimates the number of people now houseless and homeless at 10,000. Of these, hardly a person but has lost one or more relatives, while many of the survivors are suffering from injuries more or less severe. All are in immediate want, and unless aid is sent them in no stinted measure the suffering, now fearful to contemplate, must be augmented during the coming cold weather to an incomputable extent

The survivors of Peshtigo describe the approach of the fire tempest as terror-inspiring to a superlative degree. The heavens appeared to be literally on fire, and none of the inhabitants felt a doubt but that the end of the world as foretold in the Apocalyse was at hand. Nevertheless, the instinct of life overcame their belief, and there was a general stampede of all capable of locomotion for the lakeside. But so swiftly ran the flames that many perished on the way, while others only reached the temporary shelter of the water with fearful burns on head, face and body. In this terrible race the women and children suffered worst. Their light clothing would catch the blaze, a scream of terror and despair, a fall to the burning earth, and another freed spirit. Five hundred of the seventeen hundred inhabitants thus perished, many more were drowned after reaching the lake by being run over by the cattle, who also sought the water to escape the fiery element, and full five hundred of the survivors are now suffering from injuries then received. The accommodations of Green Bay have been exhausted by the sufferers, and many of them have been sent to Oshkosh, fifty miles away. So intense was the heat that those in the water had the hair singed from their heads, while the rafts of logs to which they were clinging caught fire in many places. So heated became the air that all who breathed it were injured. Indeed, the injuries from this cause are so severe that the physicians say that only the utmost care can bring many through the winter.

Mr. Kinney narrates many individual experiences with the fire, some inexpressibly sad. In some instances whole families were sacrificed; in others part would escape almost by a miracle. Most of the inhabitants of the burned region were originally from the New England States. They tilled their farms in summer and went into the logging camps in winter. Their buildings were cheaply constructed, but contained all of their worldly goods, and worst of all, were almost invariably uninsured. Last season was a bad one for their lumber operations, owing to the absence of snow, and they were much crippled in consequence. Now they are bereft of everything—home, kindred (in many cases,) and almost country, for where were once beautiful farms, fenced and wooded, there is left only a blackened waste.

Mr. Kinney thinks inasmuch as there is no danger of immediate suffering in Chicago, that a portion of the funds raised for the relief of that place might be properly diverted to the aid of these Wisconsin sufferers, who stand in much greater immediate want. He suggests that contributions be forwarded to the care of Gov. Fairchild of Wisconsin, who will see that they reach the right destination. It is impossible, he assures us, to exaggerate the extent of the calamity that has befallen that late happy and prosperous region, or to avert more than in part the suffering it has entailed.—Journal.

A Curious Memento.—Mr. W. D. Bancker brought from Chicago a curious memento of the great fire. Among the ruins of the Western News Company's establishment, where an immense stock of periodicals and books was reduced to ashes, there was found a single leaf of a quarto Bible, charred around the edges. It contained the first chapter of the Lamentations of Jeremiah, which opens with the following words: "How doth the city sit solitary that was full of people! how is she become as a widow! she that was great among the nations and princess among the provinces, how is she become tributary! She weepeth sore in the night, and her tears are on her cheeks; among all her lovers she hath none to comfort her." And that was the only fragment of literature saved from the News Company's great depot.—Transcript.

Louis Napoleon Explains.—The following letter addressed to Sir John Burgoyne, was published in the English papers of the 11th instant:

"Wilhelmshohe, Oct. 29, 1870.

My Dear Sir John: I have received your letter, which has given me great pleasure—first, that it is a touching proof of your sympathy for me, and also because your name recalls the happy and glorious time when our armies fought together for the same cause. You, who are the Moltke of England, will have understood that our disasters arose from the fact that the Prussians were ready sooner than we, and that, so to speak, they surprised us in a shameful state of disorganization. The offensive having become impossible, I resolved to put myself on the defensive; but, hindered by political considerations, a retreat was retarded and soon became impossible. Returning to Chalons, I had wished to lead the last army that remained to us to Paris; but again political considerations forced us to make that most imprudent and little strategical march which ended by the disaster of Sedan. See in few words the unhappy campaign of 1870. I think it right to offer you these explanations, because I wish to retain your esteem. In thanking you for your kind remembrance, I renew to you the assurance of my warmest regards.

Napoleon."

The American Bible Union.—At the meeting of the American Bible Union in New York on Wednesday the Secretary stated that he had received a letter from Rome asking for a supply of Italian Bibles, but only one could be found in the society's stock, and there is no money on hand to print any more. He had also received a letter from Mexico requesting a million copies of the Spanish edition; this also must wait until funds are gathered to have new editions printed. A committee was appointed to send Bibles to the negroes at the South. During the twenty-one years of the society's existence it has circulated nearly a million copies of the Bible. The work of revision is progressing.

Beards or No Beards.—The new Archbishop of Paris intends to permit his clergy to wear beards. This important matter is one touching which usage has widely varied, and the different infallibles who from time to time have occupied the Papal chair have conflicted strangely in their decrees concerning it. Near the close of the seventh century the Pope held that the use of the razor was indispensable to salvation. Two centuries later Pope Nicholas declared that, "as all the apostles, and notably St. Peter, had worn beards, it was the bounden duty of their successors to imitate them." A century after the decree was again changed, and Roman priests were compelled to shave. To avoid execution at the hands of the Commune, the priests, as a matter of prudence, let their beards grow; and as Paris has been, and doubtless will be, the theatre of ready-made revolutions, it is likely that the Parisian priests will, from henceforth, go bearded.

New Building Material.—A church is now being built in Mumford, N. Y., the material of which is obtained from a swamp near the village, and is composed of petrified leaves, roots, twigs, muck, etc., together with limestone. The blocks taken out are of various sizes, and are easily worked by masons to the requisite proportions. They are dressed so as to leave the matter of which they are composed exposed to view, as the imprint of the leaf, or rather the leaf itself. The stones are light brown, though they vary in color sufficiently to relieve the eye.

In Brief.

—— Indianapolis has sent her big campmeeting tent to Chicago for a hotel.——The New York and Boston Express Company have forwarded each day two extra cars with goods for the sufferers at Chicago and the Northwest.——The San Francisco contributions for Chicago reach $150,000. Portland, Oregon, sends $10,000.——Forty-two insurance companies have succumbed to the Chicago fire.——It is rumored that Napoleon, on leaving Corsica, will go to Paris.——Chicago is now called "the modern Moscow."——About 18,000 men are engaged clearing away the ruins in Chicago.——The Baptist church in Rome has been prosecuted before the civil courts, at the instigation of the priests, on the plea that its meetings are immoral, and ought to be prohibited. The "immorality" consists in attacks on the papacy. ——A very ancient copy of the Pentateuch, thought by Tischindorf to have been written before the Christian era, is in the possession of Rev Dr. F. S. De Haas. At the beginning of the year 1850 the Jesuit body throughout the world numbered about 4000. Ten years afterward they had increased to 7000, and the latest returns now give them as 8837. Of these, 2551 are lay coadjutors, 2417 students and 3869 priests.——It is said that the Bonapartists intend to agitate the impeachment of the Government of the 4th of September, the dissolution of the National Assembly and a plebiscitum to decide a future form of Government.——December first the Northern Pacific Railroad will be completed 257 miles west of Duluth. There are 1500 miles to finish after that. ——At the recent reform council in Munich, where six thousand of the Old Catholics met for deliberation, no women were admitted, even as spectators.——A young lady in Oil City, Penn., while wringing out a dress, ran a needle through the palm of her hand, and died in five minutes.—— Miss Lillie Peckham, a prominent young advocate of woman suffrage, died recently at Milwaukee from the prostration produced by a Turkish bath. Within a few months she had been chosen pastor of a Unitarian church in Iowa.——In speaking of the energy of the Chicago people, one writer says: "Instead of sitting down to lament, her people are building busily, and the snow is sure to whiten roofs and not ruins only."——At Prairie du Chien last Wednesday, the citizens hung three men caught setting fire to a livery stable. One of them confessed his guilt, and said they were all pledged to burn Prairie du Chien and La Crosse.——The Chicago papers are defending wooden pavements, which they say had no agency in spreading the late conflagration, and remain almost uninjured in sections where everything else was destroyed.——A large fire has broken out, and is now in progress in the woods of Western Maryland, mountains in that vicinity are said to be one complete sheet of flame at night, and immense destruction of property is feared, especially among those people who have habitations in that vicinity.——A young ladies' seminary has been started in Egypt, under Government patronage. The teachers are all European women.—— Four thousand persons have apostatized from the Orthodox Russian Church in Warsaw, and reverted to the Mohammedan faith.—— The coal mines of Alaska bid fair to give a new value to our new possessions there. The coal beds are extensive and of good quality, generally bituminous, but often of the purest anthracite.——Rev. Robert Collyer told his congregation in Chicago that he "would stay by his people; he did not think they could find a cheaper parson. He had preached one year for seventy-five cents, and could do it again if necessary. He could support himself for the present by lecturing, and as a last resort he could still make as good a horse-shoe as any blacksmith in Chicago."

A Royal Teetotaler.—The Madrid correspondent of the London Times says that the young King Amadeus never drinks anything but water. Though unpledged, he is a staunch teetotaller. The King rises every day at six, the Queen at seven. Their table is served in a most frugal manner. The King's charities average $17,560 a month, and he bears the whole expense of his present tour through the country, though hitherto the cost of such excursions has been defrayed by the State.

Let every church be represented by delegates or letter. It is expected that every minister who is a member of the conference will be present or send a letter. O ye faithful in Christ, while the shadows of the judgment are gathering around us, and the incipient wail of the last day were begin to startle the slumbering multitudes, let us rally to strengthen ourselves in christian union, and lift our united voices in warning to save our perishing friends.

The church in Manchester extends a hearty invitation to all to come, and will do all in its power for their comfort and accommodation.

LINES.

Written for her Indian Priest.

JANE PORTER.

Four periods the world has seen,
God's wonders each has shown;
First, mighty waters tried to win
Man from his gods of stone.

The Patriarchal then begun,
Some good men then did shine;
With might great Pharaoh was undone,
And Israel moved in line.

The Levitical then burst forth,
Its rays from Sinai came;
Gold images of greater worth,
Man worshiped all the same.

This Period closed with awful death
Of Christ, the Son of God;
Man worships still his gods of earth,
And bends not to the rod.

This great High Priest of death did rise,
He taught them holy ways;
His body our great sacrifice,
The dawn of brighter days.

This Period draws near its close,
Evil has had its day;
God soon with goodness will descend—
Reanimate the clay;

Our spirits then will daily grow
More lovely, more divine,
New graces then the soul will show,
And round the body twine.

LETTER FROM CALIFORNIA.

A Unitarian Sermon: "Goodness" said to be identical with "Religion."—Some words on the Question—"Was Adam the first Man?"

San Francisco, Oct. 9th, 1871.

Yesterday morning I attended at the Unitarian church in this city. The Rev. Dr. Horatio Stebbins is the pastor, and he preached. It is a beautiful edifice; and I never sit in one of its pews and look upon its "fair walls," without a sense of pleasure derived from the symmetry and lightness of the interior architecture and decorations. The music is always what is termed "fine"; but I cannot either comprehend or enjoy the "sacred operatic." Its general, sensual, opiatic effect, when organ and voice are on the minor key, I realize; but old-fashioned congregational singing is in accordance with my tune-capacity and tastes.

The introductory anthem or chant having been "performed," the Rev. Dr. advances and prays. The soft, elegant metaphors of a Unitarian prayer are very pleasing to the natural ear. A classic ascription of praise, following an eloquent enumeration of attributes, and then the Father is implored to "inspire our hearts to obey those promptings which lead to acquiescence in his will," etc. There is a great nourishment of self-conceit in a genuine Unitarian prayer. I never become absorbed in one of these declamatory petitions, without finding out (for a moment) that I am one of the best fellows in the world. There is no Christ-relying faith in such prayers.

A noble hymn is sung in an unknown tongue, and then the Rev. Dr. comes forward with his saintly covered Ms., unfolds the velvet binding, in the midst of the pulpit Bible, and says: "My text is in Galatians. 'For the fruits of the Spirit are love, joy,' etc." The hour's discourse is a labored effort to show that "religion" and "goodness"—and he said "goodness" comprehended all that Paul named as the Spirit's "fruit"—are identical. Disclaiming any intention to sneer at such terms as "professor of religion," he took the fact of their use to distinguish excellent people from certain other excellent people; and he insisted, all excellence is the same. Though of a lower order, the goodness of man might reverently be said to be of the same nature as the goodness of God. Every excellent act was a religious act. Morality was not, as some virtually claimed, excluded from the heavenly commonwealth. And so on. Never any mention of the work of the Spirit, or the merits of Jesus.

The rhetoric was unexceptionable; but a really thirsty soul would starve under such "droppings of the sanctuary." So utterly a Christless sermon I never heard before.

In the afternoon I heard an Episcopal minister at Trinity church recite an argument intended to show that all the inhabitants on this globe descended from our parent Adam; which reminds me that I have heard and read similar arguments from Advent ministers. Now I do not believe such arguments,—do not see their conclusiveness; and if you give me liberty, I will say what I do believe, as firmly as I hold to the unconscious state of the dead.

Investigations by scientific men, within the last half century, have demonstrated, I think, that hundreds of thousands of years before Adam's creation there were races of men upon the earth. They were inferior to our race, whose head is the Adamite. Two of these pre-Adamite races, at least, remain in children at our time: the Negro and the Mongol. I believe in the Scripture ape. Of the generations from Adam to Noah, literally, such belief is inconsistent with discovered facts in geology, ethnology, and philology.

I am clear that Scripture itself, rightly interpreted, declares that there were pre-Adamite races of men. Some of your readers are aware that there are two words in Genesis that are used to signify "man,"—one Adam, the other ish. They are both translated man in our version. It has been shown that ish is used in the original generically; Adam is used in a particular sense. (See McCausland's Adam and the Adamite.) "God said, Let us make Adam in our image." "So God created the Adam," or the Adamite (ha-Adam). "When the Adamite began to multiply," etc. "It repented the Lord that he had made the Adamite." "And the Lord said, I will destroy the Adamite." "When the sons of the gods came in unto the daughters of the Adamite." Again in the Psalms, the high and low, the mean man and the great man, are terms translated out of Adam and ish. I believe it is said with sufficient warrant that "the intermarriage between the daughters of the Adamic race and the idolatrous men called servants or sons of the gods, seems to be given as the moving cause of the flood."

The statements, facts, and the argument, proving or said to prove the diversity of race-origin are, of course, very voluminous. I have so far referred to this matter here, because I believe that Advent preachers are, as a rule, so free to accept the truth, wherever it is developed, that they will, as a rule, concede the force and sufficiency of the "testimony" for pre-Adamite races, and note its harmony with Scripture,—if once their attention is solicited and paid in this direction. Its importance, for investigation, each one can judge for himself. We want the whole truth. C.

P. S.—See article in Oct. No. of Scientific Monthly, entitled—"Was Adam the first man?"

— Our conscience is as a fire within us, our sins as the fuel; therefore, instead of warming, it will scorch us, unless the fuel be removed, or the heat of it be allayed by penitential tears.

WANTED.

Immaterialistic Adventism for California, is thus advertised in the Advent Herald, of Boston, Mass., Sept. 27th:—"Bro. Wm. Mack, writing from Petaluma, Cal., expresses this desire:—'We earnestly hope some laborer from the east may be led by the Spirit to this coast to herald the glad tidings of the kingdom without mixing up with that glorious hope legalism or materialism. May God send such here in his own good time.'"

From this I learn that some in California want more preachers of immaterialism than they already have there,—who will give them allegorical interpretations of the Scriptures respecting the Lord's coming in his kingdom, and the resurrection from the dead; without, also, Sabbatarianism. Can this request come from an Adventist? Or is it that of one in the professed evangelical orthodox school? I had supposed there were enough there already to teach and to preach immaterialism, and that this was mostly the faith of the whole country. What is wanted, then? Let us see.

1. They want the Platonic doctrine respecting Deity heralded in that land, which is this—"The invisible God of Plato resembled an idea rather than a substance."—Gibbon. "What is God? God is a spirit, and has not a body like men."—Catechism. "God, absolute, has no corporeality, no shape or lineament of shape."—Prof. Huntington. "No tangible, palpable, actual substance."—Ib.

2. They want an immaterial Christ coming in his kingdom, heralded as "the glad tidings of the kingdom"; for "that glorious hope" it is desired should be preached "without" being mixed with "materialism." They want therefore the doctrine already advocated largely from the American pulpit, and by its star preacher, heralded there, which is—"That there is to be a literal visit of Christ to the earth again, they may believe who are wedded to physical interpretations of Scripture. I do not so read the word of God."—H. W. Beecher.

To avoid "physical interpretations of Scripture" concerning the Lord's real coming, as a material being, whose metaphorical interpretations shall we adopt as the true one? The spiritualists who claim the Lord's coming is in the present modern developments and revelations, and what is being effected by them? or the professed Evangelical and Orthodox churches, that it is to be in the displays of the saving power of the Spirit in the conversion and moral regeneration of mankind and the world; or "a power of Christ upon the earth, that may fitly be called his second coming"? or that given in the Jewish Messenger by Dr. Adler, on Dan. 7: 13, 14—"The Son of man denotes, not an individual, but a people, and the 'people,' symbolized by the Son of man are the House of Israel"?

3. They want an immaterial kingdom heralded in that land, by "some laborer from the east," who will proclaim such a kingdom to be set up "under the whole heavens"; for the "glorious hope" and "glad tidings" must be heralded without "materialism."

This, then, they want preached probably—"A glorious period of development, that is to make the world's history as bright as noonday."—H. W. Beecher. And this "development" to constitute "a new heaven and earth," without "a restitution" or a material conflagration of the globe, and its renewal.

4. They want heralded in California, and "earnestly hope" for it, "the glad tidings" of the resurrection of the dead without "materialism" being mixed up with "the glorious hope." Do they want a spiritual resurrection advocated then, without the resurrection of the defunct material body; and that "the soul is a simple essence, uncompounded, incorporeal, without form, possessing neither interior nor exterior surface, cannot come in contact with matter, intangible, can neither be seen nor felt;" that "it is indissoluble, indestructible, immaterial, a part of God, consequently is immortal"?—Drew. Also, that "the spirit is without figure, form, color, impenetrability, exterior, divisibility, gravitation, attraction, or repulsion; cannot be cut to pieces with saws, knives, or axes; cannot be effected by material fire"?—Mr. Lee.

They want heralded there, most likely, Adventism, with the doctrine that man has within him another undying man, seated in the brain somewhere, the complete counterpart of the outward human organism, possessing organs of sense; which makes its exit from the cranium at death unharmed, so immaterial, neither the microscope or the telescope assisting our natural vision can by any possible means see it; and that this immaterial being is ferried, in the case of the just, by Charon across the river of death into elysian fields, or some fabled immaterial Paradise, or to the Hellenistic, Pharisaic, Jewish "Abraham's bosom," in a subterranean region in the interior of the earth, "the place of the custody of souls from the foundation of the earth."—Josephus.

I am going to the Pacific coast to "herald the glad tidings of the kingdom," but I can not go and herald any such nonsense in this enlightened nineteenth century, with the word of God in my hand, nor corrupt the word of God with either Jewish or heathen fables.

A GOOD FIRE.

F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

Years ago, before the invention of these latter-day conveniences, people used to keep fire for a long time. We have heard of cases where, for fifty years or more, the fire was kept so that it never went out. In one case, after sixty-three years, the fire went out for the first time. Perhaps the hands had grown old and feeble, the eyes dim, and from the infirmities of age, the fire was not as constantly watched and fed, and so at last it went out.

You know what we wish to represent by this. It is the life of God and Christ in the heart. How often this seems to burn low, and faint, and the light grow dim, and at last is seen no more! "Ye did run well," but what has hindered you? Why is the light quenched, and the fire gone? But there are other kinds of fire; the fire of wrath, and malice, hatred and revenge. There are some who kindle a fire, and try to walk in the light of it, when after all it is a "strange fire." Walking by the light of such a fire, they must at last "lie down in sorrow."

But how shall we have a fire of the right kind? How can we kindle the fire? We cannot begin with large green logs, or even green sticks of a smaller size. Get the best seasoned wood you can find, have it split up very fine, and a few shavings will be useful; with all the needed materials prepared and laid in order, strike the match, and soon the fire will blaze and burn, and produce heat, and do all that you need to have done by that agency. Are there not many who read this, that long to have the holy fire kindled in their heart, in their home, in their neighborhood?

Do you ask how shall we do it? It must be done by the power of God, and that is within your reach if you can pray. Ask for the Holy Spirit, and ask in faith, believing that your Father in heaven is "more willing to give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him" than you can be to give good gifts to your children. You may invite the most faithful of your christian friends to unite with you in prayer. You will soon have a good fire started, and the light will shine out, and by and by perhaps green sticks will begin to burn. Sinners will go where there is a light of the right kind, and a fire of God's love brightly burning.

Hungry people will go where they can find good food. People that are perishing with cold will gladly draw near to a good fire. And if you have the bread of life and the fire of love in your heart and home, and in your meetings, poor perishing sinners will soon find it out, and some of them will "eat of that bread," and grow warm by the fire which glows and burns and shines for their benefit; and these saved ones will in turn shine brightly in your crown of rejoicing "in that day." Now who will begin this good work, and kindle this good fire to-day? Some are doing it, others have done it, and still others ought to do it, and must do it or perish. The time is short. "What thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might."

NIGHT SONG.

MARY I. HERRON.

Sorrowing and suffering on my bed of anguish,
Lying in ceaseless pain, can I but moan,—
How long, O Lord, wilt thou leave me to languish?
Bearing my heavy burdens now alone,
Sadly alone!

Sleepless all the long night-time, lonely and fainting,
Drink I the cup my Father sends to me,
Filled oft to running o'er from sorrow's fountain,
Drained now to its bitter source; ah, me!
The agony!

But piying the accents, I oft hear above me,—
Lean now, my child, on my faithful breast;
Be thou of good cheer! thou knowest that I love thee;
Patience a little while, then cometh rest,
Sweet, sweet rest!

I give to thee this suffering and heart-hunger;
Under the chast'ning rod bend thou thy will;
Lovingly I send it—not in hate or anger—
That I may make my dear child purer still,
Yea, purer still!

So speaks the Father, in divine compassion,
Bringing me comfort when so sore distrest;
Changing my murmuring to resignation,
For surely what I need He knoweth best—
He knoweth best!

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The R. I. and K. Ct. Conference met with the church at No. Foster, R. I., Oct. 4th, at two P. M. A goodly number of brethren were present, and a conference and prayer-meeting was enjoyed. In the evening preaching by J. W. Thomas. Thursday, ten o'clock, met for business. No officers being present, Bro. E. Bellows was chosen chairman, and N. A. Angell clerk pro tem. The reports of the treasurer and last meeting were not presented.

Report of churches. West Gloucester, Bro. J. Eldridge delegate—In a low condition. Covenant meeting good, but small attendance. Sunday School interesting. Preaching by Bro. Eldridge and Bellows. Bristol, Bro. J. W. Thomas reports—Meeting more fully attended than other churches in this place, according to number of members. Much prejudice is manifested against the truths of the Bible. Wants to see a deeper work of grace. North Scituate, Bro. D. V. Corey reports—Church in a better condition than at last conference. Five names of members have been erased, and one added. Conference meetings are better. Preaching every Sunday. North Foster, Bro. Wm. P. Durfee reports—The church is not what he should like to see it. But few come to Sunday school or meeting, which is rather discouraging. Preaching by Bro. H. C. Hopkins and others. Lafayette, by letter—Still alive; while some are cold and in the background, others are ready to work for the Lord. Conference meetings are interesting. Preaching by Sr. E. Crumb, Brn. E. R. Wood, E. Bellows, and others. Rocky Brook, by letter—Not much change since last reported. The Sunday school is large and interesting. Putnam, Ct.—Preaching once a month. Love the truth better than the fashions of the world.

Preachers' Reports.—C. H. Sweet, located at Bonny Eagle, Me.—A few have been converted. Met with some infidels and opposers. Feels encouraged to go on. H. C. Hopkins,—labored at No. Foster and Rockland. D. V. Corey—preaches at No. Scituate and Central Gloucester. J. Hill—labors at Hopkins' Mills and Pascoag. E. Bellows gave an interesting account of R. I. campmeeting. Many were interested, and some converted. Preaching at different churches. J. S. Collins—health been poor; preaches in several towns; baptized one. J. Eldridge—preaches two Sundays in each month at West Gloucester, one at East Gloucester. A. B. Warner—preaches at Curtis Corner and Rocky Brook. J. W. Thomas—preaching at Bristol.

An invitation was extended to preaching brethren to become members of the conference. Brn. J. Hill and A. B. Warner became members, and were ordained for the ministry.

Resolved, that we hold a Ministers' Conference, to meet semi-annually in connection with this conference. Brn. E. Bellows, A. Durfee, and J. W. Thomas, were chosen a committee to form a constitution and appoint time of meeting. The business occupied part of two days.

Interesting discourses were preached by Brn. E. Bellows, A. B. Warner, J. W. Thomas, and C. H. Sweet. Adjourned to meet at call of chairman.

PURITY OF THOUGHT.

Sin begins in the heart. If you keep your thoughts pure, your life will be blessedness. The indulgence of sinful thoughts and desires, produces sinful actions. When lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin. The pleasurable contemplation of a sinful deed is usually followed by its commission. Never allow yourself to pause and consider the pleasures or profit you might derive from this or that sin. Close your mind against the suggestion at once, as you would lock and bolt your doors against a robber. If Eve had not stood parleying with the devil, and admiring the beautiful fruit, the earth might have yet been a paradise. No one becomes a thief, a fornicator, or a murderer at once. The mind must be corrupted. The wicked suggestion must be indulged and revolved in the thoughts, until it loses its hideous deformity, and the anticipated gain or pleasure comes to outweigh the evils of the transgression.

Your imagination is apt to paint forbidden pleasure in gay and dazzling colors. It is the serpent's charm. Gaze not upon the picture. Suffer not the intruder to get a lodgment. Meet the enemy at the threshold and drive it from your heart. As a rule, the more familiar you become with sin, the least hateful it appears; so that the more completely you preserve your mind from unholy and wicked thoughts, the better. Avoid the society where obscenity or blasphemy is heard. Cultivate the society of the virtuous. Read nothing that is unchaste or immoral. Make a covenant with your eyes. Familiarise not your mind with the loathsome details of crime. Never harbor malicious or envious thoughts. Direct your thoughts towards pure and holy subjects. Contemplate the character of the spotless and perfect Son of God. Keep your spirit untainted, your thoughts uncontaminated, so shall your life be virtuous. As a man thinketh, so is he. Take care of the thoughts, and the actions will take care of themselves.—Ex.

THE PASTORAL WORK.

C. O. MARSTON.

Few gifts (Eph. 4: 11) are of more vital importance to the church than the pastoral gift. We need pastors to "feed the church of God" and to take the spiritual oversight of the flock. This work is attended by responsibilities, onerous duties, severe trials, and exquisite pleasures, of which none but the faithful pastor can form any adequate idea. Experimental knowledge is always the best. I have often heard people speak of the ease of the pastor's office. Such persons know nothing about it experimentally. The man who faithfully discharges the obligations of the pastoral office will need a natural gift of industry. His calling is spelled toil. No faithful pastor can be lazy or dronish. It requires a live man to fill the place creditably. Besides the regular routine of duties to be performed weekly or daily, as the case may be, there are multitudes of incidental or occasional duties constantly coming in to fill up his vacant time. Visiting and comforting the sick ones; seeing after and encouraging the weak ones; hunting up and helping along the inquiring ones; all of this and much more constantly demands the attention of the pastor who would be a faithful steward in the Lord's house.

He has regular duties also that must be attended to. He must study. No man can be a faithful incumbent of the pastoral office and habitually neglect his study. And my experience in this has been that the more system we can have in prosecuting the pastoral work the better. Have so much time allotted each day for each branch of the work. So many hours for study; so many hours for visiting.

There are many anxieties of mind experienced by the pastor with which his parish are wholly unacquainted. If his members could realize how many heart-aches he has, how many wakeful nights he spends, how many solicitous tears he sheds, in his jealous watchcare over the merchandise of God committed to his trust, methinks there would be less fault found with his remissness in duty.

Dr. Reed says—"Then there is the responsibility of the pastor. You are now taking the oversight of the people. You will certainly not be answerable for the actual salvation of all who may here come beneath your charge; but you will be answerable for employing your best efforts towards their salvation. You are to feed them with knowledge and understanding. You are to declare to them the whole counsel of God. You are to administer to them every service of religion. If any remain ignorant, it must not be that you have not instructed them; if any remain obdurate, it must not be that you have neglected to warn them; if any perish, it must not be that you have not sought to save them; or it will be required at your hands, blood for blood." How all this fills the heart of the faithful pastor!

But there are also pleasures and joys attending this good work. Greville Ewing thus beautifully remarks—"To be enabled so to speak that many believe; to speak to the edification, exhortation and comfort of christian brethren; to search the Scriptures; to preach the gospel, and administer the ordinances of the church; to give ourselves wholly to these things, to spend and be spent in them; to be friends, and counsellors, and ensamples of the flock; to be spiritual fathers in Christ, and to see or hear that our children are walking in the truth;—these are the joys which revive us in all our labors." Paul says:—"We seek not yours, but you." "Now we live, if ye stand fast in the Lord." "What is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming?" 1 Thess. 2: 19.

— He that is desperately inclined to his own will, is ever most near to the wrath of God.

— It is an evidence of great hardness to be more concerned about our sufferings than our sins.

— He that hath God, hath all things; and he that hath him not, hath nothing.

— Constancy is a virtue, but obstinacy is not.

— Modesty and humility make up the brightest crown of great performances.

— A great deal of sin comes in at the eye.

— Love reposes at the bottom of pure souls, like a drop of dew in the chalice of a flower.

— If God were not more mindful of his promises than we are of his precepts, we were undone.

☞ A christian builds his fortitude on a better foundation than stoicism; he is pleased with everything that happens, because he knows it could not happen unless it had first pleased God, and that which pleases him must be the best. He is assured that no new thing can befall him, and that he is in the hands of a Father who will prove him with no affliction that resignation cannot conquer, or that death cannot cure.

PLEDGE OF THE TRY COMPANY.

We, the Undersigned, hereby pledge ourselves to abstain from Tea, Coffee, Tobacco, and all Intoxicating Drinks as a Beverage.

TRY TO BE GOOD.

I once read of a good christian lady who started a little mission Sunday school for poor children, in the "far west." Among her scholars was a poor, little, wild, rude girl, who had never heard of God, and the blessed Jesus, or the kingdom of heaven.

One day this kind lady had been talking to her scholars of Jesus, and the holy, happy place to which he would take all good children. Poor little Lizzie listened eagerly while the teacher talked of the shining streets, the great blood-washed throng in white robes, with golden crowns and harps; and as she contrasted her own miserable home—where she often saw rude, drunken quarrels, and heard fearful oaths—with that blessed place, she longed to be there.

But she knew that only good children could go there, and she felt that she was not good; so she knew not what to do. Finally she thought that good people prayed. So the next Sunday, when her teacher prayed, she said over the words after her in a low tone. The teacher asked who had been talking.

"O, ma'am!" said poor little Lizzie, "I was not talking, I was trying to pray."

After the school was over, the teacher talked with her, and Lizzie told her teacher that she had "been a naughty, wicked girl, but wanted to live with Jesus, and be like him, and she had been trying to be good, and do right in every thing, just as hard as she could, all the week."

The good lady taught her a simple prayer, and told her how to believe on Jesus, and obey him, that she might be ready to go with him through the pearly gates into the heavenly city; and she went away happy.

Dear children, are you all trying, like little Lizzie, just as hard as you can, to be good? And do you pray to Jesus, and long to see him, and be like him? M. E. I. Herron.

DO WHAT YOU CAN.

Don't think there is nothing
For children to do,
Because they can't work like a man.
The harvest is great,
And the laborers few;
Then, children, do all that you can.

You think, if great riches
You had at command,
Your zeal should no weariness know;
You'd scatter your wealth
With a liberal hand,
And succor the children of woe.

But what if you've naught
But a penny to give?
Then give it, though scanty your store;
For those who give nothing
When little they have,
When wealthy will do little more.

It was not the offering
Of pomp and of power,
It was not the golden bequest;
Ah, no! 'twas the mite
From the hand of the poor,
That Jesus applauded and blest.

Then don't be a sluggard,
And live at your ease,
And life with vain pleasures beguile;
But ever be active
And busy as bees,
And God on your labors will smile.

Child's Companion.

THE APPLE BLOSSOM AND THE DANDELION.

It was a bright and sunny May day; the wind was still cold, but "The spring is come," was said softly from bush and brake, from field and stream, and a little apple tree which stood close by gave back the words in the gentlest of whispers.

The little apple tree had one single bough just breaking into blossom, and so covered with its beautiful fresh buds it was a perfect picture to behold. It knew this quite well, so that it was not in the least surprised when a grand carriage which was passing along the road drew up before it, and the young princess who sat in it said it was the loveliest apple blossom she had ever seen. So some of her attendants broke off the bough, and shading it with her silken parasol, she carried it home with her to her father's castle.

The apple blossom had never dreamt of such a place as that. There were lofty halls and rich sitting-rooms, of which the clear white curtains fluttered at windows opening on beautiful prospects, the whole air fragrant with the scent of hot-house flowers placed in costly vases of elegant design and delicate workmanship. In one of these, on the table of a state drawing-room, was the blossom placed. I am sorry to say it began to be very much lifted up with its change of condition, and full of pride and self-conceit. Many people kept passing to and fro through the room, and every one had something to say about it as they looked admiringly a bough.

"What a difference there is between plants!" said one, which of course the apple blossom took as a compliment to itself, and it held its head higher than ever. The vase stood at an open window which looked down into a garden, and also into a field, so that there were many plants, both wild and cultivated, within sight, and with which it could compare itself.

Some were very ordinary and common. "Poor rejected plants!" said our friend, in its contemptuous pity; "there is indeed a difference! How unhappy you must feel!—at least, if you have feelings like us of the upper classes. But there must be a difference, otherwise we should be all alike." And as it made this deep remark, it fixed its attention upon one particular kind of flower with which the field was covered—that which grows everywhere, even between the stones of the pavement; that which nobody cares for, nobody gathers, because it is so common: I mean the dandelion.

"Poor despised creature!" cried the apple blossom; "it is no fault of yours that you are so common, but you always have been, and you always will be. But as it is with men, just so it is with flowers—there must be a difference."

Something echoed back the word "difference;" it was the sunbeam, and it kissed the apple-blossom, and then the yellow petals of the dandelion, for the sunbeam makes no difference between rich flowers and poor flowers; it loves them all alike, and reckons them all as brothers. The apple-blossom had never thought of the great God's love for all his creatures, small as well as great, but the sunbeam knew better; he had come down from the very source of light, so of course it was all clear to him. "You do not see very far nor very well, my friend" he said. "Which is the poor weed I heard you pitying just now?"

"The dandelion," was the reply. "Nobody binds it into nosegays—everybody tramples it under foot; it is much too common, and when it comes into seed, it flies about hither and thither like little bits of wool, and sticks to people's clothes; a weed it is, and a weed it must remain. How thankful I am that I am something better than that!"

At that moment, just let loose from school, a little troop of children rushed into the field, the youngest of them so small that they had to be carried, and when the elder ones put them down amongst the yellow flowers, they clapped their little hands, gathered them quite full and kissed their treasures in their sweet simplicity. The elder children broke off the hollow stalks close to the roots, bent them round to make circles, then others the same, till, one within the other, a long green chain was fashioned. That was for the neck; then there must be one to fall over the shoulders, then one for the head. What a show of green links and chains! But the biggest ones of all gathered the stalks of which the flowers had done blooming, and which were crowned with feathery heads just ready to float away on the wind. If with one breath they could blow these quite away, they were sure to have new clothes before the end of the year; at least, so their grandmothers foolishly said.

"Do you see all this?" said the sunbeam; "do you see their beauty and their honors?"

"Yes, for children!" replied the apple blossom, with contempt.

Then an old woman came into the field, and with an old knife-stump she grubbed up a quantity of the roots, to make a kind of coffee, and the rest she would sell to the chemist for medicine, and be able with the money to increase her scanty stock of comforts.

"Beauty is better than all this," said the apple blossom, as sulky as he could be. "Only the chosen ones come into the kingdom of beauty, and there is a difference between plants, just as there is a difference between men."

But the sunbeam spoke of how God loved everything that he had made, and how he had left none without some evidence of his bounty and his providing care.

Just then a group of persons entered the room, and amongst them the young princess who had gathered the apple blossom and placed it where it stood. But what could that be in her hand? It was a flower, or what might be a flower, for it was quite hidden by three or four large leaves placed round it, and another over it to make a kind of cap, so that not a breath of wind could get at it. Not even the apple blossom was carried so carefully by the lady's hand as this hidden treasure, whatever it might be. Very cautiously the large leaves were soon removed, and there—yes, really there; who would have believed it?—was the feathery seed-crown of the hated dandelion! It was this which she had plucked and guarded so carefully that not a single feather which sat so lightly there might move from its place. Her loving care had been successful; it was quite perfect, and as she gazed on it she wondered at its beauty.

"See how marvelously God has formed this simple plant!" she cried. "I will paint it with the apple blossom, different as they are. One has received as much from its Creator's hands as the other, and equally are they children in the same kingdom of beauty."

And the sunbeam kissed the dandelion, and it kissed the apple blossom, and as it did so a deeper blush spread over its beautiful buds. Whether the apple blossom learned to be more humble for the future, I am not informed, but at any rate we can carry away the lesson that pride is a very ugly thing. It spoiled the beauty even of an apple blossom; how much more then, dear children, can it poison all the better feelings of your hearts if you let it live there unchecked.—Children's Hour.

Hygiene.

"This is for your Health."

"BODY MORE THAN RAIMENT."

It would seem as though many educators did not agree with the Great Teacher. They will spend much time in telling of the wonders of a little piece of woolen, linen or cotton fabric; they will dwell with an earnestness truly commendable on the different colors and shades of colors; they linger over the beauties of vegetable life, showing the way in which plants live and breathe; they even do not forget sticks and stones, giving their form and use; but not one word of that most necessary science—the preservation and health of the human body. Many who think it right and would teach it, are at a loss how to reach the minds of young children, or how to impress upon them even the most simple laws o' health.

Until something better is suggested, let us give rules, in the shape of maxims, and illustrate, as often as possible, by stories and questions, on the maxims given. Below are a few maxims, partly founded on Dr. Hall's rules for preserving health:

Always keep your person and clothes clean.

To your homes welcome sunshine and pure air.

Many die from eating too much.

Little eaten leisurely is better than much eaten in a hurry.

Don't drink until you are through your meal, and then nothing cold.

Eat plain, coarse food, rather than pudding, cake or pie.

Ripe fruits and berries are always wholesome.

Do not take much exercise before breakfast.

Do not go with an empty stomach into a sick room.

Do not eat or drink, after leaving a sick-room, until you have thoroughly rinsed your mouth.

Wash your teeth before breakfast and every time you eat.

Do not cut finger nails too close; keep them washed, not scraped, clean.

Keep your mouth shut, and breathe through your nose.

Pure air makes pure blood.

Take plenty of regular exercise in the open air.

When warm from exercise, cool off very slowly.

Do not read with your face to the light, nor while lying down.

Never go to bed with cold or damp feet.

Always eat and sleep with a happy heart.

CONVERSATION ABOUT EATING.

"Doctor, I am happy that we meet again. Our former conversations have afforded me great interest, and, I trust, profit. Can you give me a half hour?"

"Most cheerfully."

"Well, doctor, much has been written about the kind of bread which is most healthful. What would you advise?"

"Wheat, all things considered, may be reckoned the most nourishing at best."

"Would you prefer coarse or fine flour?"

"The bran, which is the part first separated from the fine flour, is the most nutritious part of the grain, and the plan which some adopt of leaving the bran with the flour, and thus make the bread with the whole flour, is the best and most healthful."

"How about digestion?"

"The coarse bread digests the more quickly. The woody fibres of the bran act mechanically in dividing and separating the mass of food, thus rendering it more readily penetrated by the juices or solvent fluids of the stomach. Coarse bread is, therefore, easier of digestion as well as more nutritious."

"What do you think of corn bread?"

"Indian meal possesses more oil, and is, therefore, more fattening and more heating than any other of our common grains. It is not, therefore, well to eat it largely in hot weather. It is, however, a good article of food, and corn cakes are not to be refused. It is good, but not equal to wheat bread."—Home and Health.

Sore Eyes.—Take a potato, and after quartering it, grate the heart as fine as possible, and place the gratings between pieces of cambric muslin. Place the poultice over the eyes inflamed, and keep it there fifteen minutes. Continue the operation three successive nights and a perfect cure ensues. It is worth trying by those afflicted with sore eyes. It is also strongly recommended for burns.—Home and Health.

☞ Dr. Hall assails the idea that men rest by doing nothing. He says the only healthful rest is to be busy. Men of force and industry will everywhere tell you, "It is the hardest thing in the world to do nothing."

"LAND AHEAD."

J. G. T. CRUSE.

Land ahead! a light is gleaming
O'er the dark and sullen waves,
While the world at large is dreaming,
Thinking not of Him who saves.
CHORUS.—But amid the tempest's roar,
Zion's ship is nearing shore;
Get the anchor o'er the rail,
Soon we'll cast within the vail.

Land ahead! sweet words, so cheering
To the tempest-tost and tried,
For the heavenly port we're nearing,
Home for which we oft have sighed.

Land ahead! "the night of weeping"
Yields to dawn of endless day;
Jesus comes to wake from sleeping
Jewels that are laid away.

Land ahead! our home of glory,
Pilgrims soon its shores will throng;
Then we'll sing "the old, old story,"
And will shout redemption's song.

RICH MAN AND LAZARUS.—Luke 16.

IN TWO PARTS.

GEO. THOMSON.

PART. 1. What it does not mean.

PART 1.

Any proper investigation of this controverted subject, must embrace the examination of prevailing opinions, and that with all fairness and candor. If we propose to pull down a man's house because it is unsafe, for the purpose of building him a better one, it is but right that we should show him why it is unsafe, and wherein it is defective. This we purpose to do with the subject in hand.

Many thousands, no doubt, honestly believe this to be a narrative of actual facts, and consequently representative of the future destiny of the just and the unjust. And this is not at all to be wondered at, when we remember that the doctrine of the soul's inherent immortality forms the basis of this belief. And when it is remembered also that this doctrine has been the faith of the church for centuries, and that men have imbibed it from early infancy, drinking it in from nursery rhyme, from the spelling book, all the way through to the classics; from the pulpit and the press; permeating all literature, whether it be religious, historical, or sensational;—with such religious and educational preconceptions, it is easy to picture the immortal soul of the rich man in hell, and the immortal soul of poor Lazarus in glory, and similar inferences may be drawn from other Scriptures, in the absence of a candid investigation. But there are hundreds who will investigate, and who will gladly exchange a bare inference for a positively-declared truth, when they are convinced that such inference contradicts a positive declaration of Scripture. With these introductory remarks, we will proceed to examine the popular interpretation of this subject, and in so doing, we pray that God may divest us of all prejudice in writing or reading. Let us be candid. Let us open our hearts for the reception of the truth.

We are told in the first place that this is not a parable, but a narrative of facts, which actually occurred in the case of two individuals, both of whom died; one was sent to hell, and the other to heaven, where they recognized each other, and a conversation occurred, proving one to be in conscious misery, and the other in conscious happiness. And furthermore, that those cases were representative; or, they were presented for the purpose of teaching the time and nature of future rewards and punishments. If this statement is true, what tremendous issues are dependent upon this narrative,—the weal or woe of millions. How careful the Savior would be not to weave into the narrative any ambiguity, lest some poor soul might be deceived or led astray. And how particular he would be to omit no feature of fact bearing on so momentous a subject. We should not only be informed that they were sent to heaven and hell respectively when they died, and that in one case there was enjoyment, and in the other suffering, but we shall be also told why they were sent there; otherwise, the narrative will utterly fail in proving a warning to any one. Let us now carefully examine all the details of this so-called literal narrative.

"There was a certain rich man, who was clothed in purple and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day. And there was a certain beggar named Lazarus, which was laid at his gate full of sores, and desiring to be fed with the crumbs which fell from the rich man's table. Moreover the dogs came and licked his sores." Here are the two characters, whom, it is claimed, stand as the representatives of millions. Here they are, on probation for heaven or hell. And yet not one word, either in commendation or condemnation, in reference to their moral character. The rich man might have been faultless in his dealings with his God, and his fellow man, for aught that is alleged against him to the contrary. He is simply charged with doing what thousands of the leading church members of the present day are doing, dressing well and eating all the luxuries at command. But who thinks of subjecting them to discipline, and expelling them from church on that account? They are the very class sought after, and generally make excellent managers of church festivals and oyster suppers. However it might have been in ancient times, the modern church would rather send twenty poor men to hell than one of their rich men.

And what of Lazarus? He is not said to be a believer in Christ. It is not said that he prayed. He is not credited with being pious. It is not even affirmed that he was virtuous, or even honest. This might or might not be true of him, but it was certainly not taken into the account. He was poor, extremely poor, a beggar; and for no other assigned reason he is dispatched to glory. He might have pilfered a little occasionally, as thousands of beggars have done and still do. He might have lied and profaned as thousands of beggars do, for aught that we learn to the contrary from the narrative (so called).

Now, to sum up on this point, all must admit that if this is interpreted according to the popular view, it teaches that the extremely poor are sure of heaven, while the rich are doomed to hell inevitably. Can it be that we have misunderstood the true import of the gospel? "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved. "He that believeth not shall be damned." Does it really mean that he who would be saved, must become a beggar, while the rich, who dress and eat well, are sure to be damned? Who dare preach such a doctrine?

But again, it is said that they both died, and the rich man was buried, but the beggar was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom. Now let me ask, do those who claim this to be a narrative, believe that Lazarus was carried soul and body to Abraham's bosom, and that the rich man, soul and body, went to hell? O, no! you will say, it was only the rich man's soul that went to hell, and the soul of Lazarus was carried to Abraham's bosom. But remember, there is not one word said about soul or spirit in the narrative. If it is a narrative of facts, we must stick to the text. We are not at liberty to infer something not found in the statement. If this is a narrative of actual facts, then the rich man went to hell soul and body; and Lazarus was carried bodily, or all that constituted Lazarus into Abraham's bosom. While many will not be willing to accept this inevitable conclusion, in view of the fact that they believe a future resurrection and judgment to be a prerequisite to the union of soul and body, either in happiness or woe, yet there are others who deny any future resurrection and judgment, associating those events with death. Such may be ready to admit the correctness of the conclusion, on the basis of this so-called narrative. However, we would suggest an easy test. Let the grave of some notorious sinner be opened some weeks or months after burial, and we think it more than probable that the body will be found there, unless it be stolen by medical students; and the same will be true in the case of the most pious. Thus we see the absurdity of claiming this to be literal.

But we proceed in the next place to examine the places to which those two personages were sent, and how they got there. "The beggar died and was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom." Where was Abraham's bosom? This is a very important query in this connection, this being a narrative of facts. Let us get our Bibles and Concordance. We find a brief history of Abraham's life, a record of his death and burial in the cave of Machpelah. Then Abraham's bosom was in the cave of Machpelah, and the angels carried the beggar to the cave of Machpelah. O, no! you say, it does not mean that. Why not, if is a literal narrative? O, that part is figurative, or parabolic; that means heaven. The beggar was carried by the angels to heaven. Who said so? Where is such an explanation given? Certainly not in the Bible. I am aware that Josephus in his discourse on hades, represents it as an unfinished place, where there is perpetual darkness, which is partitioned off into two apartments, into one of which the souls of the righteous are detained until the resurrection; this he calls Abraham's bosom. But Josephus does not claim to be inspired, and our religion is not founded on Josephus, but on the Bible. And supposing you accept Josephus as authority in this matter, you cannot get the beggar into heaven.

But concerning the rich man, it is said that he also died and was "buried" "in hell." Is it customary to bury the lost in hell? But perhaps the hell in this case, like Abraham's bosom in the other case, is figurative, and therefore means something else; perhaps the grave. But you will not consent to this. You will plead for the strictest literal hell in this case, with all its theological terrors. But I ask, by what logic (except the stern necessities of a theological idea) is the interpretation figurative in one case, and literal in the other? It is a well known fact, which cannot be successfully controverted, that the hell of this text is not the hell of future punishment. There are three Greek words rendered hell in the common version—gehenna, tartarus, and hades. Gehenna occurs twelve times in the New Testament, and usually refers to the future punishment of the wicked. But in no instance is that punishment said to take place at death. "The Lord knoweth how . . . to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment, to be punished." 2 Pet. 2: 9. Instances of hell from gehenna are found in Mark 9: 43, 45, 47. Tartarus occurs but once (2 Pet. 2: 4), where it is said that the angels who sinned were cast down to hell to be "reserved unto judgment." Hades is found eleven times, and is the Greek translation of the Hebrew sheol, which is found in the Old Testament sixty-five times, and is rendered "hell" thirty-one times, "grave" thirty-one times, and "pit" three times. Thus we see that in a majority of instances, this word is translated simply "grave," which it doubtless should have been in every instance. And no candid Bible critic, who prefers truth to theory, would for one moment insist that sheol is a place of conscious punishing. The stream cannot rise higher than its head. So neither is hades presented in the New Testament as a place of conscious punishing, except in parabolic figure, as in the case before us.

We would call the attention of our readers to two significant facts in this connection; one is, this same hades is rendered "grave" in 1 Cor. 15: 55, and very properly too; for had the translators here rendered it "hell," it would have appeared as though the saints passed through hell, as well as death, to get the victory. The other is, this same hades gives up all its occupants at the judgment, and is then destroyed in the lake of fire, together with death; which lake of fire is the gehenna or real hell of future punishment. Rev. 20: 13-15. But perhaps some will be disposed to refer to Josephus and his hades for proof of their theory. I commend the wisdom of such, as the evidence cannot be found in the Bible. I presume they have a right to seek it elsewhere. I would also recommend the Koran and the Book of Mormon to such, as being wonderfully fertile in the same class of evidences.

But we continue our examination of this subject in the light of a literal narrative. Although there was a great and impassable gulf between the two parties, yet they were near enough for recognition and conversation; and not only so, but they were cognizant of each other's condition. Lazarus knew that the rich man was suffering. The rich man knew that Lazarus was happy. As a matter of course, this being representative, those fortunate enough to get to heaven must witness the sufferings of the damned, and evermore listen to their moans and groans, and horrid imprecations. The American Tract Society published a tract (No. 277), from which we make the following extract. It is headed—"Eternal Misery of Hell."

"As God will aggravate the sufferings of the damned by displaying his glorious attributes, their hatred of him will be unbounded, their torment will excite their hatred, their hatred will aggravate their torment. Is not this the height of misery, to be filled with unmixed hate toward the perfect being, the supreme being, the sovereign beauty—in a word, to hate the infinite God? Doth not this idea present to your mind a state the most melancholy, the most miserable? One chief excellence of the glory of happy spirits is a consummate love to their Creator. One of the most horrid punishments of hell is the exclusion of divine love. O miserable state of the damned! In it they utter as many blasphemies against God, as the happy souls in heaven shout allelujas to his praise."

And according to this theory those blasphemies must ring in the ears of the saints to all eternity. Who would wish to be in heaven under such circumstances? This conclusion is inevitable, if this is a narrative of facts. But it is maintained by some that we shall be so constituted in heaven, that we shall not be unfavorably affected by those scenes. Hear what President Edwards has said on this point:—

"The woes of sinners in hell will not be a cause of grief to the saints in heaven, but of rejoicing. This rejoicing will be the fruit of an amiable disposition (?) and a perfect holiness, and conformity to Christ. . . . When they hear you groan and sigh, and gnash your teeth, these things will not move them at all to pity you. After your godly parents shall have seen you lie in hell millions of years, or ages, in torment day and night; they will not begin to pity you then. They will praise God that his justice appears in the eternity of your misery."

What are we to think of a theory which demands the extinction of the finest and tenderest feelings that the human heart is capable of—pity, compassion, sympathy? In the same proportion as a person exhibits in behalf of the suffering those blessed traits, do we exalt them in the scale of humanity. And the absence of those traits in this life makes men selfish, brutish, cruel. Let it be remembered that the authors of the above sentiments base those sentiments (full as they are of cruel bitterness and bitter cruelty) on the literal interpretation of the rich man and Lazarus.

Another feature in this subject we will notice, which has a tendency to intensify all that has been said on this point. The rich man prayed to Abraham—"Father Abraham, have mercy on me." Then the lost can pray out of hell, at least to father Abraham. But who would like to be in Abraham's place, to listen to the prayers of the damned to all eternity without being able to render them any assistance? But as God is no respecter of persons, others may hear prayer as well as Abraham. And so a pious father in heaven may be compelled to listen in vain to the earnest petitions of a son in hell, and that to all eternity! A mother in heaven may attempt to flee from the piteous importunities of a once loved but now lost daughter in hell, but all to no avail. A lost wife craving from the more favored and fortunate husband a drop of cold water to cool the parched tongue. The groaning and agonizing husband pleading with the saved wife for some alleviation of his sufferings, but all, all in vain! This picture is not overdrawn by any means, but it is the legitimate conclusion of the premise—the rich man and Lazarus a narrative of actual facts.

But some will endeavor to escape the absurdities consequent upon adopting the above premises in full, by arguing that it is partly literal, and partly parabolic. But we would inquire, Where is the line to be drawn? And where is the rule by which we are to determine which is parabolic, and which is literal? A rule may be manufactured from theories, but let one be produced from the Bible. There are prophecies, doubtless, which are partly symbolic and partly literal; but parables, we think, never. This is all literal or all parable. And furthermore, in treating it as a parable, we are not in any way necessitated to divide it, but stand ready to accept it as all parable. Dare our opponents on their part accept it as all-literal?

We have thus endeavored to show the absurdities and inconsistencies of the popular theory concerning this matter, when followed out to to their legitimate conclusions. But we have not yet presented the overwhelming Scripture evidences bearing on the doctrines claimed as being eliminated from this parable, namely, future rewards and punishments, and which prove most conclusively that the popular theory is incorrect. Perhaps we could not close this part of our subject more appropriately than by giving some positive proof texts in reference to the time of rewards and punishments. As we expect this to be read by many who are anxiously inquiring for the truth, such, we are confident, will be able to to judge of the relative value of a "thus saith the Lord," and a theological inference. But first, we give a scriptural account of the place called sheol or hades, where the rich man was (Eccl. 9: 10)—"Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave [sheol] whither thou goest." Hence, it must of necessity be a place of unconsciousness. If rewards and punishments are not meted out at death, when are they to be? Luke 14; 14.—"Ye shall be recompensed at the resurrection of the just." Isa. 40: 10—"Behold, the Lord God will come with strong hand, and his arm shall rule for him; behold, his reward is with him, and his work before him." See also Isaiah 62: 11. The following are so explicit, that none need err on this point.

Matt. 16: 27—"For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels, and then he shall reward every man according to his works." Matt. 25: 31-34, 41—"When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory, and before him shall be gathered all nations, and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats, and he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left. Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world . . . Then shall he say also to them on the left hand, Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels." Rev. 22: 12—"And behold, I come quickly, and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be." Rev. 11: 15, 18—"And the seventh angel sounded, and there were great voices in heaven saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever. . . . And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants, the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great, and shouldest destroy them which destroy [margin, corrupt] the earth."

As the word of God does not contradict itself, and these are plain didactic statements, it is very evident that the time for giving rewards is at the second coming of Christ, when the dead are resurrected, and living and dead are judged. And as the Scriptures nowhere affirm that future rewards and punishments are to be dealt out in instalments, it follows necessarily that there will be no rewards received at death.

One more important point in this connection is definitely settled by the Scriptures, that is, the place of rewards and punishments. Prov. 11: 31—"Behold, the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth; much more the wicked and the sinner." Psa. 37: 22—"For such as be blessed of him shall inherit the earth, and they that be cursed of him shall be cut off." Prov. 2: 21, 22—"For the upright shall dwell in the land, and the perfect shall remain in it. But the wicked shall be cut off, and the transgressors shall be rooted out of it."

In concluding this part of the subject, we submit to our readers, as a candid jury, if we have not shown, by a fair and critical examination, that this parable does not mean what tradition assigns it.

☞ Through a mistake, "Part 2nd" of this article was printed last week, the conclusion of which will follow in our next issue.—ED.

DEATH THE END OF THE WICKED.

F. M. CHAMBERLAIN.

"The wages of sin is death."—Rom. 6: 23.

In the course of a brief conversation with an aged and worthy deacon, the subject of "everlasting punishment" was alluded to; and as I had not time and opportunity to do justice to the subject then and there, I would ask the privilege of a place for that purpose in the columns of the Crisis. If the question of man's mortality could first be settled, there would be no difficulty in understanding those passages which refer to the future of the wicked. There is perfect harmony throughout the Bible, when rightly understood. The word of God says to the sinner, "Thou shalt surely die." Ezek. 18: 4. "The wages of sin is death." Rom. 6: 23. "Sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death." James 1: 15. If we adhere to the scriptural definition of the word death (and let the theological definition pass), we shall soon see what the end of the wicked is to be. "In death there is no remembrance of thee." Ps. 6: 5. "The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence." Ps. 115: 17. "For the living know that they shall die; but the dead know not anything, neither have they any more a reward." . . . "Also their love, and their hatred, and their envy is now perished." Eccl. 9: 5, 6. "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." Gen. 3: 19. Does the Bible anywhere speak of man, or of his soul, as immortal? We may hear of "never-dying souls," and "immortal souls," in modern pulpits, but these terms are not found in the Bible. That book always speaks of man as a subject of death. Not merely the body, but the whole man. "The soul that sinneth it shall die."

But we are asked, are not the wicked to be punished? Yes, certainly. But how? There are various agents used, which are mentioned in Scripture. "Upon the wicked he shall rain snares, fire and brimstone, and an horrible tempest; this shall be the portion of their cup." Ps. 11: 6. But the result of all this is death. To the wicked "our God is a consuming fire," and a consuming fire does not preserve the fuel upon which it feeds. The harmonious and uniform testimony of Scripture in regard to the wicked is that they shall utterly "perish," be "cut off," and "be as though they had not been." But my worthy friend, quotes the passage to which we are so often referred—Matt. 25: 45. "And these shall go away into everlasting punishment." The original Greek word kolasin, here rendered "punishment," means primarily, "a cutting off," and is so translated in the Emphatic Diaglott. This is then in harmony with all those other passages which speak of the wicked as being "cut off," "dying" and perishing. They shall be cut off forever, i. e. they shall perish forever. They "shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." 2 Thess. 1: 9. Surely this is "punishment," terrible punishment, but not eternal torment. Why should human tradition be preferred to the plain word of the Lord?

THE CALL.

Jesus calls us to his service—
Calls us to it now;
Bids us leave our sins and follies,
And the world's vain show;
Bids us do the work of duty,
Work, and watch, and pray;
Work for him who died to save us,
Work while it is day.

Shall his voice in vain address us?
Shall we still delay?
No, with earnest, faithful purpose,
We will now obey.
Selfish counsels firm rejecting,
No more led astray;
We will do the work of duty,
Work, and watch, and pray.

Jesus, Son of God, our Master,
Holy One, divine,
Heart and life we here surrender,
To be wholly thine.
Cross and crown and grace our symbols;
Cross to vanquish sin,
Crown to fix our gaze on home,
Grace to let us in.

PREACH JESUS.

J. W. THOMAS.

"Whom we preach."—Col. 1: 28.

Preach Jesus. He is the Savior. Men are lost; they need salvation; and none can save but Jesus. "Thou shalt call his name Jesus, for he shalt save his people from their sins." This is what men need, deliverance from sin. There is no other name given under heaven, nor among men, whereby sinners can be saved, except the name Jesus. He was promised in Eden. Patriarchs saw his day, and were glad. Prophets described with glowing eloquence his sufferings and death. Angels announced his birth, and sung with celestial melody to the wondering shepherds. He was the Son of God. John the Baptist heralded his approach. Multitudes thronged to hear him preach, and witness his miracle-working power. He healed the sick, gave sight to the blind, strength to the lame, speech to the dumb, hearing to the deaf, joy to the sorrowful, peace to the troubled, forgiveness to the guilty, life to the dead, and preached the gospel to the poor. O what a favored period was that when the Son of God traveled and preached among men.

Preach Jesus. The Bible is full of him. In all parts of the Scriptures he is to be found. Dimly in the beginning, more fully in the middle, clearly and completely at the close; but really and substantially everywhere. All the rays of divine truth connect and centre in him, like the rays of light in a focus. No man can preach the Bible, unless he preaches Jesus. Just as the rivers run to the sea, so do all the lines of promises and predictions lead to Jesus. Just as the sun is the centre of the solar system, so Christ is the centre of the system of Christianity. This radiance shines in every sacred text.

Preach Jesus. The apostles did. Their minds were full of him. Wherever they went, they proclaimed him. He was the sum and substance of their preaching. When Philip heard the eunuch reading the prophecy of Isaiah, he began at the same Scripture and preached Jesus. When he went down to Samaria, he preached Christ unto them. When Peter found the company assembled at the house of Cornelius, he preached peace by Jesus Christ. When Paul was converted and baptized at Damascus, he did not stop to confer with flesh and blood, but immortality. In the synagogue he preached Jesus, that he is the Christ, and ever afterward. Jesus was the theme of this great apostle. Hear him. "We preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus the Lord, and ourselves your servants for Jesus' sake." "I determined not to know nothing among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified." "Whom we preach, warning every man, and teaching every man in all wisdom; that we may present every man perfect in Christ Jesus."

Preach Jesus. But be sure first that you know him as your personal Savior. If Christ is in you the hope of glory, then you can preach him. Down with self, and exalt Jesus. Ministers are like the pole on which the brazen serpent was erected; they are useful so long as they hold up the object of faith. Hide behind the cross, and let the people see nothing but Jesus. Preach his life; preach his death; preach his resurrection; preach his ascension; preach his coming; preach his reign; preach all about him; keep preaching him. Preach him not only in the pulpit, but out of it; preach him in every thought, word and action. Preach him from house to house. Neglect no opportunity to preach Jesus. Do this, and thou shalt be a good minister of Jesus Christ, nourished in the words of faith and of good doctrine.

"My all to Christ I've given,
My talents, time, and voice;
Myself, my reputation,
The lone way is my choice."

THE PRESENT.

L. BOUTELL.

The present is a season big with vital interest to every member of the human family, and especially with the flock of Christ who have long been waiting, watching, and expecting the coming of the Lord. It is an interesting truth that the coming of the Lord is very near. And this brings unfeigned joy to every confiding heart who feels that blessed assurance that unites him to the Savior; and although surrounded by danger, perils, judgments, and fearful calamities, with paralysing lukewarmness, and he in the furnace, fearful he may fall before reaching the prize, yet with his "good hope" he can and does rejoice he is so near home.

This is the season called by the apostle "the last days"; the latest season of offered mercy; the last labor and conflict of the church of earth; the last storms and suffering to be endured. Soon all will be past forever. The characters of all will be eternally fixed. Here are the perilous times. Here are the strong delusions that the apostle warned the church should come, just prior to the coming of the Savior. Nothing but the love of the truth will save us here.

The worldliness, with its benumbing, controlling, and binding influence, is felt by us all, bringing in a sad indifference to our faith and hope, causing a sort of skepticism in the mind, so that we can hardly believe the plainest testimony. God speaks in the fulfillment of his plan; we see it and carelessly assent. God speaks again in thunder tones that the chariots and horsemen of his eternal reign of glory are about to be seen, escorting to his coronation festival the coming One to be crowned King over all the earth,—we seem to be stupified, our energies paralyzed. The call comes loud, and still louder, and still it is little heeded. The tidal waves and balls of fire from heaven in sweeping tornado are setting everything in a blaze with lightning velocity, causing death and ruin in their most horrid forms, and still the people heed nothing; and even we Advent believers do not realize that the Lord's coming must soon transpire. Every act is fraught with consequences. O think! dear brethren; arouse yourselves! Leave your dreams. Bring forth fruit meet for repentance. Return to your "first love," and awake to the duties of the present hour.

Why should any sink down into indifference upon the subject of the coming of the Lord? Why should any feel an uncertainty as to the nearness of that blessed event? Are the evidences of Jesus' coming less than they have been in years gone by? Is there not more scriptural authority for looking and watching for the soon coming of the Son of man? Surely the want of faith everywhere deplored is not occasioned by the want of real evidence. The passing of definite times has in no wise affected the scriptural and historical assurance that the advent of our Lord is at hand. All the evidences that have ever been exhibited, and much more, are crowded into the present, and the brief future will apparently bring about the gathering of the nations to the battle of the great day of God Almighty.

This is the right time. Are you doubting the evidence of the advent at hand? Which of all the evidences which bring the apostasy on the church is eating out the vitals of your faith? Which of the many currents that carry to destruction is bearing you down the gulf? Your feet have well nigh slipped; darkness and death are hemming you in, and soon there will be no way of escape. O heedless, careless disciple, awake! Let us all awake, and seek to feel the force of present truth. It is high time to know our state and standing with God. Let us in the name of the Lord come directly to the work of our high and holy calling. After the awful spasms and death struggle of the popedom, we are hearing its dying groans preparatory to its utter destruction by the brightness of Christ's coming. The termination of the prophetic periods also crowd us into a narrow circle, all pointing to the awful hour when trial and probation will be ended, and salvation's door of mercy and pardon be closed forever.

Brethren beloved, I beseech you to be up and doing. What is done must be done soon, and what is left will be forever undone. Shall we or anybody else be lost by our negligence or unfaithfulness? Shall we that sacrificed all and have borne the cross and suffered for these last-day truths, perish so near home? or shall we lay aside every weight, come out from among them, and cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of the Lord, and by being set apart be ready at all times to enter that glorious rest, the saints' own Eden home?

Weary pilgrims, have courage a little longer. Fight manfully. Stand up, a gazing-stock, if need be, and lay hold on eternal life.

THE conversion of Paul started from a higher point than some men reach throughout their lives. He did not begin with the inquiry, "Lord, wilt thou save me?" but, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?"

HE COMETH!

JAMES M. BROWN.

The day of the Lord hasteth. Do we realize the fact? Are we "looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God"? Are we "denying ungodliness and worldly lusts" and living "soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world, looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ"?

O, my Father! awaken us to a realising sense of the time in which we are living. The judgment at the door! A few more years at most, and probation ended. Destruction hastening on the sinner's track. Men crying "peace and safety." But sudden destruction is near. O Lord! who will give the warning cry? Sinner! "repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." Backslider! "be zealous and repent." "I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot. I would that thou wert either cold or hot. So then, because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot. I will spue thee out of my mouth. Because thou sayest, I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing, and knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked." Buy of Him "gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich, and white raiment that thou mayest be clothed, and that the shame of thy nakedness do not appear; and anoint thine eyes with eye-salve, that thou mayest see." Bride! make thyself ready, for Jesus will have thee without "spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing," but "holy, and without blemish." For to the bride he saith—"Thou art all fair, my love; there is no spot in thee."

Can we of a truth say, "I am my beloved's, and my beloved is mine"? Are we walking in all his way? Are we letting our light shine? Are we loving "not the world, neither the things that are in the world"? For "if any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." Or is our heart here? "Where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." Are we laying up treasures on earth? "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, ... but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven." Are we jesting and joking away our time? "But fornication, and all uncleanness, or covetousness, let it not be once named among you, as becometh saints, neither filthiness, nor foolish talking, nor jesting, which are not convenient, but rather giving of thanks." Are we the Lord's? "Lovest thou me more than these?" Shall we be found with our whole spirit and soul and body, preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ? "The very God of peace sanctify you wholly." "Faithful is he that calleth you, who also will do it." Brethren, be ready, that we may out of a pure heart fervently say, "Lord, thou knowest that I love thee." Lord Jesus, come quickly. Now, "every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure." Are we pure? "The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." "Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord." O! avoid the sins and follies, pleasures and pastimes, of the world. Give all for Christ. "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature; old things are passed away, behold, all things are become new." As we near the haven of rest, perils and dangers increase. The gay and giddy throng, fast sailing to the gate of death, would fain entangle our small craft and drag us on with them. Picnics and parties, festivals and fairs, invite us on. Fashion invites us on with winning smile. Pleasure, with strong but gentle hand, reaches forth after us. And on the huge banner wide flung to the breeze is seen emblazoned forth, that he who runs may read—Harmless amusement; christian fun and frolic; eat, drink, and be merry; my Lord delayeth his coming; love the world; lay up treasure here; we are rich and increased in goods; peace and safety; a "form of godliness" our pilot.

Savior! wilt thou our pilot be? On thee we place our trust. Guide us, we pray. Voyager! put thy trust in him. He will guide thee with his counsel, and afterwards receive thee to glory. Then put on the whole armor of God. Let us arouse ourselves. Jesus is coming! On us devolves the duty of sounding forth the unpopular truth. Let us use every opportunity to sound the message forth, and see that our lives do not contradict our profession. Awake! "Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him." O be ready! Watch Pray!

Sinners, come to him to-day. Repent! Believe! He loves you. Whosoever will, may come. But the day of probation is drawing to a close; the judgment is at the door; and then—oh, then—"many, I say unto you, will seek to enter in and shall not be able." Then accept him now. Secure eternal life. Mercy yet lingers. The cry is, Come! "The Spirit and the Bride say, Come; and let him that heareth say, Come; and let him that is athirst come; and whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." Will you come? "Choose ye this day." Repent! Be wise! "Yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry."

Littleton Common, Mass.

"LEADING MEN."—It is customrry to speak of sundry men in the church of Christ as "leading men"—that is, they go before others, and make and second the motions which others vote for. It should not be forgotten, however, that a man in a Christian church who really deserves the name of a "leading man," serves the church. He moves and goes in the right direction, and determines others in that direction. As Baxter well remarks: "Church greatness consists in being greatly serviceable."

JOHN WESLEY said: "I dare no more fret than curse and swear."

WHAT IS TRUTH?!

"Prove all things, hold fast that which is good."—1 Thess. 5: 21.

Is the soul of man a personality? a body? It is either a personality, or an attribute. Which? The question is important. What is not a personality has no attributes. Whatever is a personality is not immaterial, but has attributes, or properties. The soul of man is said to be immaterial; then it has no attributes. Are the moral and intellectual faculties of man, bodies, or attributes? If bodies, then each man has many. No one claims this.

Are there two intelligent personalities in each man? Nobody assumes it. Are there two moral personalities in man? No one believes it. Then we can easily find the ONE. The personality which has the intellectual and moral faculties is the one to be judged, rewarded, or punished. On this point there is no room for doubt. Here all are agreed. Do these faculties, or attributes, inhere in the man, made "of the dust of the ground," or in a soul, that exists as an independent personality, when the man is dead? This is the important question. We think there will be no difficulty in answering it, if we adhere to the Bible and reason. Let us continue to reason a few moments. As the soul is said to be "immaterial," and "uncompounded," it cannot possess attributes; and, therefore, can not be a personality. Hence, it is not the moral, intellectual being, whom the Lord created, commanded, and will judge, reward or punish. That which has faculties, or attributes, must, of necessity, be a compound, and a personal being. We have no knowledge of any exceptions. As there is but ONE moral, intellectual personality, or body, which is capable of sinning, repenting, believing and obeying, who is also a candidate for rewards or punishments; which is that ONE?

It must be the one that possesses all the attributes common to man; all the senses, such as hearing, seeing, smelling, tasting, and feeling; the one who performs all the works, and does all the thinking,—in short, the real MAN. When this being is dead, he ceases to hear, taste, smell, see, feel, act, talk, or think; and cannot perform these functions again till he rises from the dead. This looks reasonable.

The senses are essential for knowledge, or intelligence. The senses are a part of the body. Hence, when the body is dead, the senses cease to act, and intelligence must cease of necessity. Then it follows that a dead man can make no communications.

We may destroy the attributes of a man and not destroy his identity. His thoughts may be destroyed, and his identity be still preserved; because it is common to identify men in death, after all their thoughts and attributes have ceased to act; therefore the identity is not in their thoughts, or attributes; such as love, joy, peace, hatred, righteousness or wickedness. Destroy all bodies, and all attributes would be destroyed.

If the identity is in the thoughts, then that which has no thought has no identity; but this is not true, for we identify our friends by their bodies, after they have ceased to think; therefore the identity inheres in the physical constitution, and not in the thoughts, which are ever varying, like the floating clouds in the heavens. If we knew a man by his thoughts to-day, to-morrow they might be quite different, even the opposite of what they are to-day; but this would not change his identity, any more than would the flow of his blood.

Every thing is either a body, or an attribute of a body. No body can exist without attributes, or properties. No attribute is a body of itself. Is the soul of man a body or an attribute? If a body, then man has two bodies. He has but one, therefore the soul of man is not a body, but an attribute. Soul does represent a body when it stands for the man; but when used to denote the life or desire of a man, then it only signifies an attribute, common to all living beings.

SPIRITUALISTS' TEACHING.

Mr. Thomas Gales Forster recently gave a lecture to a company of "advanced Spiritualists," in Apollo Hall, New York. The reporter says Mr. Forster "denounces all churches, forms, ministers and priests, as bonds which hold captive the glorious and immortal soul of man, . . . that great, that glorious, that noble, that mysterious, that wonderful, that aspiring, that immortal thing, the soul, should have no fetters. For nearly two thousand years men's minds have been enchained by Christianity, and the minister has stood between man and his God. The priests have taught man to be afraid of his Creator, but the time has now arrived for each one to stand upon the broad and expansive platform of individual liberty. Man should be afraid of nothing—not even of God. The soul should gaze through the untold vistas of organic law and look God straight in the face without fear."

It is a well-known fact that the doctrine of the immortality of the soul is the corner-stone of Spiritualism, as truly as Christ is the corner-stone of christianity. Take away the belief in the immortality of the soul, and Spiritualism would fall to the ground; so, take Christ out of christianity, and the system would be demolished, and all hope of immortality would be destroyed, because we are to receive it alone through Christ.

THE IMMORTALITY OF THE SOUL.

Strong efforts are being made by some ministers to sustain a belief in the dogma of the immortality of the soul. Without one word of Bible to sustain them, they speak with great boldness, and denounce those who believe and teach that man is a mortal. Recently, Dr. Vidaver, a Jewish Rabbi, in New York, preached a sermon on the immortality of the soul. The reporter says:—

"The Doctor showed how utterly impossible it is for an unbeliever to possess or to know anything of true joy, and also how impossible and illogical it is to profess or attempt to believe in God. The human soul is made in the image of God, and therefore must, like its Creator, be everlasting, and the two are so inseparably united that belief of the one necessitates belief of the other, and rejection of the other."

Why did not the Dr. give chapter and verse which says man has an immortal soul? Whenever the term soul is applied to man to represent a personality, it always signifies the physical organism made of the dust of the ground. When soul does not mean the material man, it represents an attribute of the man, which exists no longer than man to whom the attribute belongs.

ST. JOHNSBURY.—Our meetings in this place have been seasons of interest and profit. A prayer-meeting has been established at Dr. Warner's office, and the prospect is brightening. One of Bro. John Porter's sons—a fine young man—was hopefully converted. Many of our readers will remember Bro. Porter, with one arm and but three fingers, the pastor of the church at Dansville, P. Q., Dominion of Canada. Others requested prayers, and several were much blest. Members of other churches assisted in the meetings, and were quickened by the Spirit of the Lord. Several came some twenty or thirty miles to the meeting, and received a special refreshing in Jesus.

STAY LONGER.—In another column, Bro. Boutell has made a good suggestion in relation to the best means to insure success to those who are preaching the word of life. If each preacher would stay a week or more in a place, we think he would accomplish twice as much in a year, as he would if he only spent one night in a place. We hope many will make the experiment, and stay longer.

BRO. JAMES H. WHITMORE, author of the excellent work entitled, "Immortality," has consented to become the pastor of the church at Rochester, N. Y. We shall expect to hear of good fruits from his labors. May the Lord go with him in power.

FRENCH INFIDELITY.—Infidelity presents a bold front in Paris, quite like that expressed by Spiritualists in this country. A French orator lately said:—"I hate God, the miserable God of the priests, and I would, like the Titans, scale the heavens to assassinate him." They know not the mercy of Him whom they revile.

BRO. O. R. FASSETT'S P. O. address is 472 Jessie Street, San Francisco, California.

STRANGE PREACHING.

At the Martha's Vineyard campmeeting, Aug. 26th, 1871, Edgar F. Clark, of Providence, R. I., preached a sermon on the text: "Thy kingdom come," which the reporter says caused "frequent outbreaks of laughter at its pungent satires. He further says the congregation "was very highly entertained." The following is a sample of the entertainment:—

"The condition of the times indicates the success of the gospel. The spread of knowledge, the growth of invention, even the improvements of military agents, are hastening this result. By-and-by some one will invent a military weapon by which one can destroy 500,000, and then war must cease. The history of the gospel also points to this consummation. Christianity has passed successively through the eras of contempt, persecution and favor, and is now passing out of the era of literary criticism. The majority of the thinking young men in Germany are tending toward orthodoxy. The Bible teaches that the stone cut out of the mountain shall fill the whole earth. Among the features of this kingdom, one will be that death will be destroyed. Even its pains shall cease. It will be thought no harm to administer anæsthetics to relieve the pain of those who are dying in a state of preparation. The terrors of death especially will be taken away. When the kingdom of God is fully established, this world will be enjoyed. The dark ages originated the idea that a christian must be gloomy, and the shadow of that darkness still lingers. The time is coming when it will be a man's duty to visit the White Mountains, if he can, as much as to go to church.

Again, when this kingdom is set up, sin will be very odious and nauseating. The day is coming, too, when religion will be a matter of pleasure. At first, people were led to God by terror. After that, was the reign of duty. Many have the notion that, to become a christian, one must give up the pleasures of this life. But religion will soon be considered lovely in itself. Any one who can tell of it will be welcome. [The prevailing disregard of old men as ministers was here very earnestly rebuked.] The day is coming when people will repent and come to God with smiles."

THE SEVEN CHURCHES.

The following very sensible remarks on the seven churches in Asia (Rev. 1: 4), are from the "London Quarterly Journal of Prophecy":

"Ver. 4. John to the seven churches which are in Asia.—Here is the apostolic salutation; very like Paul's (Rom. 1: 7; 1 Cor. 1: 1, 2,) only shorter. It is Jesus who writes; it is the Holy Spirit who writes; yet also John—John the servant of Christ, and his witness-bearer. He addresses the seven Asian churches. There were many others,—Colosse, Tralles, Magnesia,—but seven are chosen as representative churches, selected by Christ to picture forth all churches in all ages; selected because of certain peculiar characteristics and conditions which were found in them, that in speaking to these seven co-existing peculiarities he might speak to all churches in all ages, so that each church, in every age, might find, in some one of these seven, a picture of itself, and, in the words of warning or of cheer, something exactly suited for admonition to itself. To speak symbolically, no one of these churches has passed away. Ephesus has always existed and still exists in some of the many churches throughout the world. So of Smyrna and Pergamos, and the rest. They are not representatives of successive stages or conditions, spiritual or ecclesiastical; they are not prophetical or consecutive, as if Ephesus pictured the primitive church, Smyrna that of the third and fourth century, down to Laodicea, the representative of the church of the last days. They picture seven states in which the church will always be found, and in regard to which each one should put the question, Is it I? Lord, is it I? Why they are selected from Asia Minor, is hard to say. Certainly it is Gentile ground; and it is to the churches of the Gentiles that the book is written. Israel had been cast off and had gone out of sight. Jerusalem had fallen; and the apostles, rejected by the Jew, had turned to the Gentile.

But why these representative Gentile churches should have been selected from Asia, and not from Greece or other Gentile regions, we cannot say, further than that John preached at Ephesus and superintended the neighboring churches. Seven is the number of completeness,—manifold completeness; fulness in variety. The portrait is one, of the one church of God on earth; but of this one portrait there are seven different views, each of them bringing out something special, while preserving the common outline and features; all of them bringing together the complete enumeration or record both of the evil and the good belonging to the universal church below, in this the day of her imperfection and continual declension."

BRO. O. R. FASSETT.

We are pleased to hear that Bro. Fassett received a hearty reception in San Francisco. We think he will find noble hearts on the Pacific coast. We clipped the following from the San Francisco Bulletin, of Oct. 23d:—

"RECEPTION AND INSTALLATION.—Elder O. R. Fassett, who arrived from the East on Friday last, was formally welcomed and duly installed at the Second Advent church, Mission street, opposite the new mint, yesterday morning. The Elder is a man of about fifty years of age. His introductory sermon showed that he is a man of scholarly attainments, and attractive and impressive speech."

The following is from the Minneapolis Tribune:—

"GONE TO CALIFORNIA.—Elder O. R. Fassett, who has been preaching to the Adventist congregation in this city, left last Thursday morning for San Francisco. Mr. F. takes with him the good wishes of a host of friends. His labors here for four years were highly acceptable to his people, from whom he receives the highest encomiums. We have no doubt his reputation here will be fully sustained in his new field of labor."

The following voice of welcome was given Bro. Fassett by Bro. Neal, at his first meeting in San Francisco:—

"It is my privilege this morning, my dear Bro. Fassett, in behalf of those who, in the providence of God, have been instrumental in calling you to this coast, to extend to you the hand of christian fellowship and welcome. We rejoice, my brother, that you have responded to our 'Macedonian' cry for help. We welcome you to our interesting field of labor in the Master's vineyard, already white for the harvest. And is it not true

"That soon the reaping time will come,
And angels shout the harvest home?"

You come, my dear brother, to join in that song, that even on this coast is sounding so clearly,

"That presently the world shall hear,
That so soon the world shall fill,
And go like the dawn from hill to hill."

You have seen, my brother, in your journey to our State, that the strength of the mountains are his whom ye serve; as well the cattle upon a thousand hills, for the earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof. God bless you, and your companion, in proclaiming the midnight cry among us. We pledge you a hearty co-operation in witnessing for truth, righteousness, and God. Accept this feeble act of recognition in behalf of the friends of our coming King."

OUR MONTHLY.

The Bible Banner, published at 14 Murray St., New York, is every where pronounced an excellent paper. It aims to hoist the flag of unpopular truth, and to defend it boldly. It has no tendency to supplant our weekly papers, but rather helps their circulation. We need both a weekly and a monthly paper. And as a monthly, the Bible Banner has already disappointed the high expectations of many in an agreeable manner, making them feel as an intelligent brother recently expressed himself: "The Bible Banner is a better paper than it promised to be." I think this feeling is general among the readers. The second volume will soon commence, and we ought to have five thousand more subscribers than we now have. Let all who can take a monthly, as well as a weekly, try the Bible Banner, and let old subscribers renew at once. Address Bible Banner, 14 Murray St., New York, for a sample copy. W. S.

"BAPTIZED FOR THE DEAD."

What is meant by being "baptized for the dead"? "Else what shall they do which are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all? Why are they then baptized for the dead?" 1 Cor. 15: 29. It means that baptism is expressive of the death and resurrection of Christ, which is a pledge of our own resurrection; for "we are buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." Rom. 6: 4, 5. Baptism being a "likeness of his death," and a "likeness of his resurrection," the apostle could consistently ask those who had imbibed the Sadducean notion that "there is no resurrection of the dead," Why submit to a meaningless ceremony, by being "baptized for the dead"?

This was a searching question in the light of this fact—"If the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised"; the reverse of which is just as true—if Christ is raised, then the dead saints will rise also. Then baptism, being a "likeness of his death," and a "likeness of his resurrection," is an expressive figure. But provided the dead saints are not to rise hereafter, then Christ was not raised as the "first fruits" in the past; consequently, baptism for the dead would be thus reduced to a meaningless ordinance. Then why continue to express faith in the resurrection of the dead by baptism, while holding the Sadducean theory, which repudiates a resurrection? If sprinkling had been the ancient mode of baptism, Paul would not have talked about baptism for the dead; for sprinkling is neither a "likeness of his death," nor a "likeness of his resurrection," but immersion is. LIGHT SPREADING SOUTHWARD.

Some of the ablest men of the South are giving thought to unpopular themes of truth. A Baptist clergyman, living in the State of Mississippi, has already publicly agitated the question of the intermediate state by tongue and pen to some extent, producing some stir among his brethren. Omitting names, I may be pardoned for copying the following extract of a letter from his pen to a friend:—

"I believe the spirit of man is kept by Christ in God, concealed in the secret pavilion of the Most High, but not in an active, ministrative state. To them there is time no longer; but the resurrection of the dead and coming of Christ are the only legitimate themes to present to a congregation; and that is enough; and all our pathos will find field there for most ample illustration and joyous imagery. Baptism, as a monumental ordinance, stands to maintain these truths fresh before the mind."

This minister has been looking at this question for several years, and we trust will yet prove of great service to the cause of unpopular truth. Publications have been sent to his aid, by myself, and to be scattered in that region. Light will yet shine more clearly in that State, in spite of opposition, by God's blessing, in a short time. W. THE CHICAGO SUFFERERS.

As the sympathy of the world is moved towards the suffering, fire-stricken inhabitants of Chicago, let us in our gifts of charity try and alleviate the wants and necessities of the whole man; the mind as well as the body. We know in the late war with the south, it was customary, when packages were sent to the soldiers, to enclose some reading matter, a book or paper, or a Bible, and they were received with much pleasure and gratitude. There is now an opportunity, in some measure, to cause gladness in the heart, and enable those people who have been stripped of every thing, to pass some of their wearisome hours in comparative quietude. We know the pleasure we receive in reading, and were we situated where we had no book or paper, should be very uneasy. No doubt there has been many a choice family library destroyed, and almost any reading matter would be acceptable. Let us consider this subject, and act as becometh friends and neighbors.

TENT MEETINGS OVER.

L. BOUTELL.

DEAR BRETHREN:—The time for tent-meetings is over for the present season. The Massachusetts Mission Conference tent has been pitched six times, in different places, where we have had meetings varying from ten to twenty-two days, under the care of Bro. Enoch Morrill; and I have attended these meetings also, and can say truly they have been good, profitable meetings. They have been well attended. The best of order has generally prevailed. The truth of the Lord's coming, and all other doctrines we hold dear, have been faithfully proclaimed by the messengers of divine revelation, who favored us with their help. Not a meeting, I think, was held under the tent but what some one was converted to Christ and the truth. Many were quickened by the Lord, and gave hearty expression to their first love. The trump of alarm has been blown, and the good seed has been scattered broadcast, both by the living voice, and also by the silent preacher, in tracts scattered freely.

Besides this, the old mission tent has been the home of many at both the Springfield and Alton Bay campmeeting, and many have received great blessings while worshiping the Lord under the free, spread canvass. There are those (and not a few) that will have this tent in everlasting remembrance, on account of the spiritual manifestation of the divine unction consequent upon their setting themselves apart entirely for their Lord and Master. The season is past in this cold region for tents; but it is just the time for protracted efforts. Where the door can be found open, the good news should be carried directly to them, and stay long enough to give them the reasons for our faith, and see some converted and brought in love with the Lord's speedy coming. This would be much better than what we do not like so well to see, and that is, sixty days appointments, running from Mass. to R. I., thence to Conn., Vermont, and from there to Canada, then through Me., an evening in a place, not stopping long enough to get breath, or to know whether a good impression was made or not. I firmly believe in the flying angel's message through the midst of heaven, but I do not think they should fly so fast as to be unable to give the message. Now let the cry be made, "Come over and help us," and let it be responded to in protracted meetings and ten-day efforts, and then something would be done: so it seems to me. This is the time to work, but work with Christ, and have wisdom that is profitable to direct.

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield Camp-ground, August 22d, 1871, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.

O. R. FASSETT.

I can hardly conceive that last month I was upon the Atlantic coast, and preaching the word to the people in the New England States, and now, the 22nd of October, I am here on the Pacific coast, and preaching to the people in this city. O, what a marvelous age we are living in! What wonders are being performed before our wondering eyes! Will not the Lord "finish the work, and cut it short in righteousness"? Will he not "make upon the earth a short work" in such an age? The Lord's coming "as the lightning," and in his swift chariot of fire, is at hand? "Prepare to meet thy God."

The 12th of October, we left our home, and kind christian friends, and all we hold dear on earth, and turning our backs upon them for Christ and the gospel's sake, and the welfare of the church, and the good of the lost, we set our faces toward this land. My companion, though afflicted with sore eyes, is a willing traveler, and accompanies me in this journey. We must needs go through Chicago, as the quickest, the least perplexing by changes, and on the best route to reach this land. But alas! just as all arrangements are made, and there is no time to make new ones, that great city in the heart of our country is in ashes! We had expected to have been with the church in Chicago Sunday, the 15th, but the fires and turmoil in consequence made us seek to avoid going there. And yet with all effort to keep out of the general confusion, we had to purchase our tickets via Chicago. We merely passed through the suburbs at the right, leaving the ruined city in its desolation to the left, and had a passing vision of the burnt district, as we dared not tarry in the midst of the general confusion. Arrangements had been made with parties in Chicago to secure half-fare passes through for us to San Francisco; but we had to suffer with the rest in this national calamity to the amount of $100 or more.

Knowing that the brethren in this city (San Francisco) were expecting us the 22nd inst., and that our delay was already beyond their expectations, we hastened on our journey to reach Omaha, Neb., and tarry there over the Lord's day. This we were glad to do, as there were christian friends from Providence, R. I., we hoped to see. We were not disappointed. We had the pleasure also of preaching in the Baptist church, under the pastoral charge of Rev. J. W. Daniels, whose kind hospitalities and that of his family we shared. The Lord bless him for the kindnesses he extended to us. Had we not purchased our tickets through at Milwaukee, he would have aided us by his influence to this favor here; but it was too late. May the Lord make up the loss to the generous donors who benevolently contributed to aid us in reaching this coast. It was well that we tarried here, for snow fell upon the mountains sufficient to retard the cars two days!

Well, we are here, in this far-off land, having arrived on Friday evening last. On taking the boat to cross the bay, at the terminus of the R. R., to reach the city, a brother detecter was sent on board to spy us out among the passengers, whose names had been sent from Ogden by telegram by the R. R. company, and published in the city papers. He was good at his business; for by what means he knew us, total strangers, among the hundred passengers, I know not; but he simply passes us with a scrutinizing gaze, then turns upon his heel and inquires of me, "Are you from the east?" I am. "Is this Eld. Fassett?" It is. And we had a happy surprise to us, entering a city of strangers, having not yet provided for our place of resting. A hack was kindly provided us, and we were conveyed to rooms already in waiting for our accommodation, with christian friends ready to greet us with cheerful countenances. Oh, how all our timid fears were allayed. And how reproved for doubting the Lord would not send kind friends to welcome us. A refreshing supper, a warm bath, and a comfortable bed, were provided for the dusty and fatigued travelers. We had passed over the longest route, the most extensive territories, the highest mountains, the ruggedest hills, the bleakest, most barren, desolate and desert lands, as well as the most beautiful, romantic, and charming, richest and most fruitful regions we had ever traversed, till we were bewildered and confounded.

The "Trans-Continental Tourist's Guide," which I studied all the way, says in closing: "The cars run around Cape Horn, and the Dead Sea, down the bitter and over the green and black waters, echoing near the 'Devil's Slide,' and the great 'Sink' of the Desert; descends into total darkness, with jets of boiling sulphur on either hand, and finally through the 'Devil's Gate,' but always landing safely at the 'Golden Gate.' Will it be so in life? Let us hope, and may we meet again."

To-day (Sunday, the 22nd), though by a singular omission no notice had been given in the public prints of my arrival, yet we had a good attendance at church, and a blessed interest. At the close of the morning sermon, a brother, in behalf of the church and congregation, stepped forward and gave the words of welcome, and extended the right hand of fellowship, amid the tears and joy of the audience. Never have we had such a welcome in any city. The whole church and christian friends came forward and were introduced to us, one by one. It was a happy occasion, never to be forgotten.

Bro. Howell was present, who has officiated, not as pastor, but as an elder, to good acceptance among the brethren, and whose labors have been highly esteemed by the church. We were happy to meet with him as a co-laborer of excellent gift and tried integrity. Our plans for future operations are not yet matured, but we shall soon determine them. Brethren, pray for us.

THAT GOOD EXAMPLE.

S. C. GOVE.

I was much pleased in reading "The Good Example," by Bro. Whitmore, of what the church of Rochester had done towards assisting our brethren to go and preach the truth. I well know how they felt about going out without means to support their families, whilst they were absent from home. Having had some experience, the past six or eight months, in preaching, I know well, thus far, how an Advent minister is supported. An invitation is given to come and preach to "us," some fifteen or twenty miles from home. We comply by leaving our home on Saturday M., walk all the P. M., have a night's rest, and preach three times on Sunday, then Monday A. M. is spent walking back home. The next step is to go to work, the balance of the week, up to Saturday M., to pay for the privilege of preaching three times on Sunday. Thus I have done all the past summer, and preached from two to three times each Sabbath, with but very few exceptions. Some places I have received assistance, for which I am thankful; but not enough has been granted, so but what I am almost on the point of——

I do not feel to complain; not in the least. I am bound by the assistance of God to work and preach all I can. People are willing to hear the truth, and in many places would not be deprived of hearing, but they forget that ministers have to eat, or that their families are in want of anything. In some places we are asked what do you want to come and preach to us once in two weeks? We reply, we set no price on preaching; give what you consider your duty. In such cases, we have found none have that duty of giving. I want to be in the work, for there is great need of preaching, and warning the people to be ready for the coming of the blessed Lord. I feel it my duty to "go preach," and have left other business, which would yield me a fair living, and a little more. The gospel must be preached and who will dare do it at all hazards, let come what will? I hope the Rochester church has set an example, which other churches will follow, and that without delay.

Brethren in Christ, these things demand attention. We speak for others. Do not keep your preacher at starvation point, if you expect great blessings from the Lord. "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ."—ED.

AID FOR CHICAGO.

I desire to acknowledge through the Crisis in behalf of the Advent Christian Church of Chicago, Ill., for those who suffered by the recent fire, the receipt of money as follows: Chelsea, Mass., $10.00; Littleton, Mass., $2.00; Hillsdale, Mich., $1.75; No. Craftsbury, Vt., $10.00; Landaff, N. H., 5.00; Tariffville, Conn., $2.00; Philadelphia, $1.00; Winchendon, Mass., $14.00. This is up to Nov. 1st. I have also received notice of two barrels of clothing as having been sent, one from Boston, and one from Chelsea, Mass.; but as I can learn nothing from them, the probabilities are that they were received and distributed by the temporary relief committees before there was any regular system of distribution. If so, some poor sufferer received them, and it is all right. Now, the distribution is systematised, so that I shall no doubt receive safely the other packages which I have been notified are on the way for us. Dear brethren, all this has been, or will be, faithfully applied for the relief of the members of the A. C. Church, who suffered by the fire, and also as much more as God may put it into your hearts to send. There is plenty of room for generous hearts, who have the means, to assist the church in Chicago in bearing this unexpected burden of relieving the destitute among us. I find more need of relief among us than I at first supposed, but our Lord knows it all, and will surely provide. In the name of the Master, we thank those who have already aided us, and also those who have written us letters of sympathy and condolence. The Lord has wonderfully preserved us in this dire calamity, and we praise him for it.

THE ROCHESTER PASTORATE.

J. H. WHITMORE.

BRO. GRANT:—I have closed my pastorate at East Shelby, N. Y., and expect to begin work in Rochester about the first of December next. I never have found, and never expect to find kinder, truer, better friends, than those with whom I have associated for the last two years at East Shelby and West Barre. Only the most urgent sense of duty would have caused me to sever my pastoral relations with a people whom I loved so dearly. May they ever remain united and happy. May discord and dissension never enter their paradise of love, joy and peace. May their usefulness as individuals, and as a church, be increased. May their light shine with undimmed splendor until the Sun of Righteousness shall give them the light of eternal life.

I go to Rochester with high hopes of being useful to the Master's cause in that city. I am determined to remain no longer than a prospect exists of my being more useful there than elsewhere. I desire to labor where I am most needed, whether it be in city or country, in the east or west. The unanimity of choice and expression of good feeling which accompanied the call to Rochester, I am willing to accept as auguries of future good. If the Lord be for us, who can be against us? In his strength, we may be strong; in his wisdom we may be wise; and under his banner we may gain certain victory.

May we ask the prayers of christian brethren, that the church at Rochester may be prospered in the Lord, and be like a city set upon a hill, whose light cannot be hid. May faith, hope and love be the watchwords that shall encourage each christian soldier, and "the Lord will provide," be the motto that shall be engraven on each christian banner.

Ypsilanti, Mich., Oct. 28th, 1871.

☞ It is reported that only four per cent. of the people of California are in membership with evangelical churches.

Correspondence.

From Sr. M. M. Eastman.

BRO. GRANT:—We really think the discussion you have just closed with Mr. Deering, at Lisbon, will do much good. I know it has moved the people, and quite a number became settled favorably toward your view, that were much opposed before. Ministers about here all preached yesterday upon the immortality of the soul. They fear their craft is in danger. The lovers of Jesus were much quickened, and I think deep conviction was left upon the people. Important truths have been presented that never would have been brought out without the discussion. They shone out clearly, but no clearer than the image of Christ shone through his humble servant (yourself), while listening to abuse, ridicule, and misrepresentation.

But my mind passes from this to the sad, sad state of thousands who are suffering and destitute all through the West. The thought of it is awful,—so many villages burnt to ashes; homes destroyed, which have cost years of hard labor; farms desolated; trees that beautified the quiet home of the toiling husbandman, and the stately forest, all swept away before the devouring element, as though they were but so much dry stubble. O what desolation and destruction!—men, women and children burned and roasted alive in this awful fire! Who can imagine, or realise for a moment, the horrors of such a scene? Yet this is small and faint compared to what is coming soon, when God ariseth to shake terribly the earth, and Peter's burning day comes, when "the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also, and the works that are therein shall be burned up." And Malachi's day, "that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." When the great day of his wrath shall come, when "the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bond man, and every free man," will say "to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of Him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb; for the great day of his wrath is come, and who shall be able to stand?" Rev. 6: 15–17. Some are to say, "Lo, this is our God, we have waited for him."

The apostle warns us, in Luke 21: 34, to "take heed," "lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness, and the cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares; for as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the earth. Watch ye, therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man."

Again, we are taught in Matt. 24: 37—"But as the days of Noah were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be. They were eating, drinking," etc. It was a generation specially given up to feasting and drinking, and they "knew not, until the flood came and took them all away." But Noah and his family were safe in the ark. He knew the time, and heeded the warning God gave that wicked, pleasure-loving age. This age has been most signally marked, as in the days before the flood, with eating and drinking, and as being overcharged with the cares of this life, even among those looking for Jesus, and as wickedly following the hateful, ridiculous, and unhealthy fashions of these extravagant times. If this is not fulfilling Scripture, I know not what will fill the mould. It is filled, and God's judgments are being poured out; and now if men will take warning, and flee for their life, these losses of perishable treasures may prove the greatest blessing; for if a man will give all he hath for his life, were he worth millions, it would all go for this short life; then if this life of pain, sickness, care and turmoil, is worth so much, who can estimate the worth of eternal life?

We can see what Moses thought about it, when he had the offer of becoming the son of a king's daughter, heir to a royal throne, with all the wealth and honors conferred upon kings' sons; but hear his wise choice—"esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt." But the king's and Egypt's treasure together was nothing compared with the riches connected with the reproach of Christ. Doubtless he wisely contrasted a short life of honor and worldly pleasure, connected with the riches at his command; but this he could enjoy but a few years; for he saw the present life is but a dream, a tale that is soon told, soon gone; and that this short life is attended with sorrow, pain and disappointment, and that death ends the scene. But the future life was an enduring eternal state of blessedness, where flowers bloom, not to fade; where pain, sickness and death are never known; and we shall become sons and daughters of God, heirs to an everlasting inheritance, subjects of a kingdom which is to be established under the whole heavens, and Christ the anointed to be King, reigning upon the throne of his father David, thus providing a glorious, blessed and heavenly home with the society of angels, prophets, apostles and martyrs, and the holy and good of all ages and climes, with Paradise restored, and the tree of life bearing twelve manner of fruits, and the leaves of the tree for the health of the nations. No wonder he "had respect unto the recompense of the reward."

All earthly honors and riches are nothing to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed when Jesus comes. I believe every true child of God feels willing to suffer with Christ. The apostle said they that would "live godly in Christ Jesus shall (not may) suffer persecution." If they have called the Master of the house hard names, how much more will they those of his household. It is a close point to live up to the high standard which Christ and his apostles have marked out. We surely cannot have any hatred and variance, nor any fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness; but there must be a coming out and a separating of ourselves from all these things; and without that great qualification, love, we are none of his; even love to our enemies, and to those that hate us and despitefully use us. I choose to suffer with the people of God rather than enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season. It is my highest and chief choice, to be content to walk in the most lowly path, denying self, choosing the "modest apparel," putting off the gold and costly array, and the many changes of apparel, to gratify pride.

The day is soon coming when Jesus will say, "Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me." In this time of distress, when the devouring elements have robbed so many of houses, clothing, and homes, what christian can spend money after the latest style, and have less to give to him that needeth? All we can spare should be poured out for the destitute and suffering, and God will bless. Now is a chance to "sell that ye have, and give alms," and show our faith by our works.

I think the cry of distress will be more keenly felt in Michigan, than in Chicago, for all eyes are turned towards the latter place; but the thousands of homeless ones in Michigan are scattered all through a farming country. One track of the fire went from Port Huron to Port Hope, a distance of one hundred miles or more. Villages were swept away as by the besom of destruction. My sister, from Lexington, writes it took all their mills, docks and stores, besides many villages and farm houses, and burned into the ground a foot deep. One family had to get into the lake and stand; but for the sick wife they dug a hole in the ground, and put her in near the lake, so they could keep her head wet, and thus they were saved. There were many other like scenes.

The village of Lexington was spared, but she writes she knows not why, for the raging fire was all about them, and all night she was frightened almost to death, expecting to be burned up. They had no where to flee, but into the lake. Bro. Geo. Wright has done a great work there, and in the surrounding country. His home is in Lexington. I hope he will let us know the condition our brethren are in in that vicinity. This is but one track of the fire. Hardly a county in Michigan but was burnt more or less, say nothing of Wisconsin and Minnesota. Let us not have our gold and silver cankered, or our garments moth-eaten, but work with our might what our hands find to do, for the morning is soon to dawn, and the great Life-giver will come and reward every man according as his work has been. Only be that hath clean hands and a pure heart will be able to stand acquitted in that day.

Many will come up professing to be the Lord's, but he will say, "I never knew you"; ye did not keep my commandments; ye offended my little ones; ye have tried to love the world and me too, but the world was uppermost; the society of the wicked, swearing, vile, and haters of God's children, were sought after more than the society of the lovers of Jesus, and the house of prayer. O that we might arouse at once, and devote our time, talents, money, and all, to the glory of God, and the good of our fellow men; most earnestly seeking that holiness of heart "without which no man shall see the Lord." He is coming soon, we know. Signs there is no mistaking proclaim Messiah near. Can we say, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus"? Yes, come, and fill the earth with thy glory; raise the sleepers from their dusty beds, and give eternal life to all thy people, and destroy death and him that had the power of death. Blessed day. Haste thy dawning. I am tired and sick at seeing and hearing of so much sickness, suffering, death, sin, and wickedness. So I pray, "Let thy kingdom come."

Loudon, N. H., Oct. 24th, 1871.

From Bro. F. H. Bruce.

Bro. Grant:—I feel it a duty I owe to myself and to the cause of Christ to write to you at this time, feeling my convictions of duty prompting me to do so. I was formerly an active member and a local preacher in the Methodist E. Church in this place, and as such I have been an acceptable member for seventeen years, until I received light on the blessed doctrines of the near coming of Christ, the unconscious state of the dead, their literal resurrection and final destruction of the wicked. After I received these blessed doctrines, my Methodist brethren withhold their church fellowship from me, and without just cause, or aught against my christian or moral character, they withheld from me my license with them, as a local preacher. In one of their prayer-meetings, after the pastor of the Methodist church invited all to take part with them in exhortation, I spoke of man's unconsciousness in death, when the minister silenced me from again taking part in their meeting. I have taken a letter from the M. E. Church, and I feel I am now God's free man. Those whom the Spirit of God sets free are free indeed.

Rockville is a large village, with three large churches. There is much prejudice existing here against our belief. Myself, wife and one other sister, are all in this large village that truly love the blessed hope. There is no church of our faith very near us. I wish to do the Master's will, and let the light shine. I now offer myself as a member and minister to the Advent Church.

I am forty years of age, and have had seventeen years christian experience. I have taken the "World's Crisis" for some time, and fully endorse the blessed doctrines advocated in its columns. I have not before revealed my feelings or convictions of duty to any one. I trust, Bro. Grant, I shall have your sympathy and prayers, and that you will assist me all you can in advancing the cause of our soon coming King. Your Bro. in Christ,

F. H. Bruce.

Art. VI. The annual meeting of this conference shall be held in Sept., and three quarterly meetings shall be held during the year, as conference may appoint.

The following officers were then elected for the ensuing year: President—J. W. Taylor, of Little Marsh, Pa. Vice President—D. B. Hunt, of Knoxville, Pa. Secretary—A. H. Briggs, of Spring Mills, N. Y. Walrath, committee on devotional exercises. Adjourned to meet again immediately after the afternoon services.

2 P. M., preaching by Elder D. B. Hunt, from 1 Cor. 15: 22, after which we met again for business. Ministers and delegates gave in their reports, which were of an encouraging character, and led us to believe that the prospects are bright for much good to be accomplished in this region of country.

Voted, That the proceedings of this conference be sent the World's Crisis and A. C. Times, for publication. Adjourned sine die.

Saturday evening, preaching by E. H. Eggleston, from Heb. 2: 23. Sunday morning met at 9 A. M. for love-feast, when many stirring testimonies were given. It was truly "good to be there." 10½ A. M., preaching by A. H. Briggs, from 1 Cor. 13: 19, and at 2 P. M. by J. W. Taylor, from Jer. 50: 5; after which we surrounded the table of the Lord to commemorate the sufferings and death of our Redeemer. Preaching again in the evening by J. W. Taylor, from Acts 3: 19.

Thus ended the first session of our new conference. We have thus far seen a manifest approval of our Master in this glorious enterprise, and desire the prayers and co-operation of all the children of God that this organization may prove a blessing to the cause we so dearly love, and be the means of spreading the truth in those regions where our influence has been hitherto comparatively unfelt. And may God give us grace to hold up the standard of truth with all boldness in every place where a door may open, until our Master shall say, "Well done," and human instrumentalities be no longer needed.

A. H. Briggs, Secretary.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. C. W. Low, of Fredonia, N. Y., writes: "Our yearly meeting at Darien, N. Y., being the eleventh annual gathering, which closed Sabbath evening, the 24th of Sept., was a success. The spirit of the meeting was excellent, and the preaching was good. There are many who can look back to the Darien gatherings in the name of Jesus, as a bright and green spot in the history of their past christian life. A few more such meetings on earth, and the dear people of God will meet in their Eden home to part no more."

Sr. M. S. Reed writes from Vallejo, Cal., Oct. 18th, 1871:—"The little church is growing fast here. It would do you good to be with them. All are hungering after a deeper work of grace in the heart."

Obituaries.

Dorr. Died in Cordaville, Mass., Oct. 19th, of consumption, Sr. Laura Ella Dorr, daughter of Frederic and Mary Dorr, aged eighteen years and nine months.

She was the picture of health till April last, when she took cold, and disease fastened itself upon her, and did its dreadful work, sadly afflicting the bereaved parents and loving sisters, leaving them to mourn the breaking of the first link of this domestic chain. We attended the funeral, and attempted to comfort the afflicted family, and many others who congregated to sympathize with them. They sorrow not as those who have no hope. She fell asleep in hope of life at the resurrection of the dead.

L. Boutell.

Kitchen. Died in Pawling, N. Y., Oct. 4th, 1871, Lottie A. Kitchen, eldest daughter of Thomas and Hattie Kitchen, aged eleven years.

Lottie suffered one week with diphtheria, and yielded to the grim monster. In innocence she waits the glad morn when the trump shall sound. Services by Dr. Albert Fox. Text: "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?" Gen. 18: 25.

Also, Oct. 18th, Willie B., only son of Thomas and Hattie Kitchen, in the sixth year of his age.

Terrible has been the blow on these loving parents, but may the Lord lead their minds to see a greater beauty in the resurrection. And while they wait, may God help them to watch the way in earnest prayer. Words of comfort were spoken on the literal resurrection, by the writer.

Geo. A. Barker.

Marden. Died in Epsom, N. H., Oct. 25th, of typhoid fever, Clifton L., only son of Mark and Sarah Jane Marden, aged nineteen years and five months.

About one year since he gave his heart to God, and followed his Lord in baptism the following winter, and during the brief period that has elapsed, God and his Bible have filled the largest place in his thoughts, so that when taken down by sickness he could triumphantly say, "It is all right between me and God." In this state of mind he fell asleep in Christ. The services were conducted by the writer, assisted by the Rev. Mr. Quimby, in a sermon founded on 1 Pet. 1: 5,—"Who are kept by the power of God, through faith, unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time."

J. H. Clark.

Veazey. Died in New Hampton, N. H., Sept. 26th, 1871, Sr. Polly, wife of the late Simeon Veazey, aged seventy-nine years and ten months.

Sister V. obtained a hope in Christ under the labors of Eld. J. Colby. She was one of the first who embraced the faith of the Lord's soon coming, and consecrated herself to the service of God. Since that time she has lived out her faith before the world, coming out from its fashions and follies. She now sleeps in Jesus, but we expect soon to meet her at the resurrection of the just. Words of comfort, admonition and instruction, were tendered on the occasion, by the writer, from Num. 23: 10.

N. Glidden.

Morrell. Died in New London, Oct. 13th, the only son and child of Bro. and Sr. Morrell, aged three years, three months, and three days.

He was a very promising and sweet child. Bro. and Sr. Morrell are deeply afflicted, but they sorrow not as others that have no hope. Bro. Morrell has been preaching and trying to comfort others. Pray for him. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer, from 1 John 3: 8.

M. R. Miles.

Doore. Died at Levant, Me., Oct. 4th, 1871, Sr. Sarah A., wife of Bro. R. H. Doore, formerly of North Hermon, aged fifty-nine years, ten months, and eighteen days.

Sr. Doore found the Lord at twelve years of age, and lived her religion till the day of her death. Her faith was unfeigned, her zeal untiring, and her life a testimony for Christ. Her memory is sweet to many a christian heart, and her name is written in the Lamb's book of life.

F. A. Baker.

Hutchins. Fell asleep at Concord, N. H., Oct. 24th, 1871, Franklin Herbut, only child of Calvin S. and Sarah A. Hutchins, aged three months and twelve days.

May these afflicted parents meet their children in the kingdom of God. Prayer by the writer.

O. W. Kimball.

Terry. Died in Goshen, N. H., Oct. 27th, 1871, Rhoda J., daughter of Joseph and D. T. Terry, aged twenty years and ten months.

We believe she sleeps in Jesus. F. Nelson.

Halliday. Died in Salem, Mass., Nov. 4th, 1871, Charlie A., son of Bro. and Sr. Halliday, aged one year, seven months, and twenty days.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

London, Oct 31. An address to ex-Emperor Napoleon is circulating for signatures among the officers and soldiers who served in the army under the Empire. When a sufficient number of signatures are obtained it will be forwarded to Chiselhurst. Its contents have not been made public.

Nov. 1. St. Petersburg letters declare Russia's settled intention to wipe out Turkey from the map of Europe by conquest. The strength of the army which Russia could bring into the field is estimated at 830,000 men, independent of troops in the Caucasian province, which number an effective force of about 200,000; troops stationed in Turkestan, Orenberg and Siberia, which in round numbers give 100,000 more, and the aggregate guard total of which the Czar can dispose in time of war foots up 1,130,000 men of all arms, with 1600 cannon and 400 mitrailleuses.

Paris, Nov. 2. A movement has been initiated for submission to the people of the question of a future form of government of France, to be decided by means of a plebiscitum. The plan, as far as perfected, proposes that the people shall decide whether the country shall remain a republic, as at present constituted; whether it shall become a kingdom, with some member of the Bourbon family on the throne; or an empire, under Napoleon. The movement finds many supporters. A strong effort will be made when the National Assembly convenes to secure the adoption by that body of a measure which will carry the scheme into effect. It is stated that numerous agents are actively engaged in the provinces endeavoring to enlist popular sympathy in behalf of the project.

The Progress at Rome continues steadily. The assembling of the Italian Parliament in the ancient capital during this month will create an intense excitement, as it is understood that the Papal party will have a large number of powerful representatives in the body, and will make a vigorous fight against the liberal measures soon to be brought forward. A bill will be introduced early in the session for the suppression of all the monastic establishments in Rome, as well as in other parts of Italy. Another very remarkable measure has for its object the expulsion of the Jesuits from Rome, although it is ostensibly general, since it asks "for the total suppression of religious orders in the capital." The Jesuit influence seems to be in disfavor both in the church and among the liberals; and will probably suffer much from the invasion of King Emanuel's troops. The rector of the Roman University has struck a blow at the Papal influence in Rome, by announcing that the same regulations required in other universities will now be extended to it, namely, that all the professors and employers must swear fidelity to the King and the Italian Constitution. The Papal supporters, who had been hoping to remain in the University, and draw the King's money without becoming faithful to him, recognize in the enforcement of these regulations their dismissal. They have really been enemies to the Government, and some of the most effective agents in the net-work of conspiracies woven since the King entered Rome. Altogether, the situation, although presenting much vantage ground for the liberals, gives ample chance for a battle, and a battle will come.

DOMESTIC.

San Francisco, Nov. 5. The steamship Moses Taylor has arrived from Honolulu and Australia. She reports having boarded the waterlogged brig Shelchoff, from San Francisco for Callao, and found all dead except the captain. She also reports a terrible disaster to the Arctic whaling fleet, which was caught in the ice. Thirty-three vessels were crushed or abandoned.

Salt Lake City, Nov. 5. A well-known Mormon, writing from Beaver, Oct. 31, says: Brother Brigham arrived this morning, and after a rest of five hours left for St. George, on the southern border of the territory. He was escorted by twelve mounted men of the Nauvoo Legion. I am told he has bidden final adieu to Salt Lake City.

THE NIGHT BEFORE ELECTION.

New York, Nov. 6. The excitement to-night with regard to the election is intense. All the up-town hotels are crowded with anxious politicians, who are earnestly speculating as to the chances of their respective candidates. The Fifth Avenue Hotel, which has hitherto been an exclusively Republican headquarters, seems now to be a common rendezvous, and men of all shades of political opinions are discussing the situation.

In Brief.

—— For a final vote in France, say the best authorities, about one-half of the population would go for the republic—one-half for the empire.——New York churches hold property valued at $300,000,000, of which $50,000,000 is in the hands of Trinity Corporation. The Roman Catholic is the richest sect.——Queen Victoria's fortune is rated at £7,000,000.——Utah advices say the Mormon elders have decided to abandon polygamy rather than leave Salt Lake City.——Twelve inches of snow have already fallen in that portion of Franklin county, Maine, which borders on the Canada line.——Louis Napolean is said to have a yearly income of $80,000, though he declared himself a "poor man" when Kaiser William took away his crown.——A cargo of ninety tons of ice, sent to India by the Suez canal, had melted away to four tons when it reached its destination.——A. T. Stewart has given away $200,000 since 1863. In 1862–3 he sent $10,000 to the distressed cotton spinners of Lancashire.——Thousands of farms in France and Germany are divided one from another only by a narrow path; in this country the cost of fences is estimated at $300,000,000—which is more than we have laid out on our defences.——The astronomers announce that two comets will be visible to the naked eye in a few weeks—Encke's in the evening and Tuttle's in the morning skies. ——According to a Chicago paper many women have been made insane by the great fire.——It is the boast of New Bedford that there is not an open bar in the city, and that every person, rich or poor, who has been found engaged in the liquor traffic, has been arraigned for so doing.——The much talked-of plans for the emancipation of the slaves in Brazil have at last taken shape, by the passage of a bill which appropriates $3000,000 annually for their liberation. The emancipation is to be gradual; all children, however, born after the passage of the act, Sept. 27, are free. The number of slaves in the empire is not far from one million and a half.

Let every church be represented by delegates or letter. It is expected that every minister who is a member of the conference will be present or send a letter. O ye faithful in Christ, while the shadows of the judgment are gathering around us, and the incipient wail of the last day woes begin to startle the slumbering multitudes, let us rally to strengthen ourselves in christian union, and lift our united voices in warning to save our perishing friends.

The church in Manchester extends a hearty invitation to all to come, and will do all in its power for their comfort and accommodation.

J. Couch, President.

Springfield Camp-ground.

To those who have buildings on the Springfield Camp-ground:—I find the houses nearly all open, as usual; and I have found a man who will move into Sr. Holden's house. They have no children, but will need something done to make it comfortable for winter, and I have let him move in to-day. The buildings are all shut up, and a man on the ground to keep them shut; and I just ask the owners of buildings to send me in what they think it is worth to them to know there is a man on the ground to take care of their buildings. This I have done on my own responsibility, as the committee have no funds in the treasury. The only way is to call for contributions. Act as you think best. Direct to Hiram Munger, Chicopee Falls, Mass.

HOPE ON, MY SOUL.

L. M. BRIGGS.

Hope on, my soul, cast not away
Thy confidence in God;
For lo, there dawns a brighter day,
When he will all reward.

Hope on, my soul, though dark the night,
The morning soon will break,
When God himself will give thee light,
And darkness from thee take.

Hope on, my soul, there is a band
That God will shield from harm;
By faith I see a blessed land,
And this has lost its charm.

Hope on, my soul, nor dare rebel,
For God himself has spoken;
Though oft the silver cord is loosed,
The golden bowl lies broken.

Hope on, my soul, the dawn will come,
When death will lose its sting;
Then sleeping ones with us called home,
Will all his praises sing.

Athol, Mass.

WEEPING AND JOY.

WM. KELLAWAY.

"Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning." Ps. 30: 5.

I. These words are the utterance of a joyful memory. Upon this memory they are founded. Their basis is an experience in the Psalmist's checkered life. They seem to gush out of his heart unheralded. He thinks of the past. He was the king. He wore the royal purple, bore the kingly sway, and ruled the nation. On his head rested the crown. He sat as judge in the gate. How venerable the good old patriarch! Look at his long, white, flowing beard. See his hoary hairs. He is about sixty years of age. His form is manly, magisterial, royal. He has a son by the name of Absalom. This son was beautiful, without blemish, and none in all Israel was to be praised like him. His hair grew so luxuriantly that every year he had to have it polled, when it sold for two hundred shekels. If they were gold, the value of his hair would be $1800 a year. Absalom killed Amnon and fled. But after a time he was permitted by David to return to Jerusalem. He came back, but David could not see the face of his son's murderer. In time he permits him to see his face. A kiss of peace is given Absalom. The father and son are one. But oh the base ingratitude of the pardoned son! He asks David's permission to go to Hebron and pay a vow he had vowed to the Lord. David kisses him, and bids him "go in peace." But he sends out his servants to cry, "Absalom is king." David and his servants have to fly. They passed through the country. Many people saw them flying, and "all the people wept with a loud voice." 2 Sam. 15: 23. The king and his servants pass over the brook Kedron, and go into the way of the wilderness. The sun goes down. The pale stars—these tapers tall—come out one by one and flicker their nightly, uncertain light on high. They come to the foot of Olivet—mountain of blessed memory! "And David went up by the ascent of Mount Olivet, and wept as he went up, and had his face covered, and he went barefoot; and all the people that were with him covered every man his head, and they went up weeping as they went up." 2 Sam. 15: 30. This happened at night. (See 2 Sam. 17: 1.) This is also proved by the words of Zadok, the priest—"Lodge not this night in the plains of the wilderness," etc.

Imagine the scene—the king and his household. It is comparatively dark. Hear the deep sobs, the loud groans, as they clamber up the rugged mountain side. What a touching sight of woe! How riven the heart of him who had frankly and graciously healed the break caused by his son's sins, by pardoning him and admitting him into his favor. Morning comes. The cold, bluish-white streaks of day dawn over the land. By the morning light there was not one of the royal household left that had not passed over Jordan. 2 Sam. 17: 22. Before another day had progressed, a battle had been fought. Israel had fled, David and his host were victors. Joy had come; for victory had garlanded the heads of the brave, and crowned the efforts of the king.

Ten years have fled. David reigns still. He takes his harp. He is playing and singing. He remembers the night of weeping. He remembers the song he sung to the Lord in the morning. He utters his song of gladness, he wakes the chords of hope, and this is his song—"Weeping may endure for a night; but joy cometh in the morning."

II. Weeping is the lot of all men here, and the especial heritage of God's people. Human life is one of sorrow and tears. A poet has called the coming life "the tearless life," in opposition to this, the tearful one. All men have sorrow; all weep. The first effort of the new-born babe is often a low, faint cry. People weep tears constantly here. And round the bed-side of our dying, we hear the half-suppressed sigh of the friend, and see the tears trickling down the faces of tender childhood and hard, coarse manhood. Tears are the meat of all; but especially of God's people, who weep—

(1) Tears of pain, on account of the afflictions they suffer for Christ's sake. O what the church has suffered of persecution! Some have had scourgings, and stonings, and rackings, and bruisings, and imprisonments, and been crucified, thrown into boiling oil, and a thousand other barbarities they have suffered for love of Christ. O! "many are the afflictions of the righteous; but the Lord delivereth them out of all." And Jesus promises, "In the world ye shall have tribulation." And it is no sin to weep as we feel pain, only let us be careful when we are scoffed at, and maligned, and abused, that our enemies do it without reason or provocation, so that when we weep it may be tears of pain that have no sting that will sting us.

(2) Tears of sorrow, because men are so wicked. Said David—"Rivers of waters run down mine eyes, because men keep not thy law." And said good Jeremiah, "O that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the slain of the daughter of my people." We weep—who can help it?—over the base ingratitude of a godless world, waxing worse and worse. We weep over a church that has backslidden, become lukewarm, lost its power in prayer, and so mingled with the world as to defy the wisest man to draw the line of demarkation, or define the boundary limits between the two.

(3) Tears of penitence for our own imperfections. Christians must be perfect in love; and they should grow increasingly perfect in character. They must be going on to perfection in knowledge. I am sensible of imperfections. I know my character has many a flaw. My service to Christ has been mingled with much insincerity and unfaithfulness. "Not as though I had already attained, or were already perfect." And this sense of commission of sin, and omission of right doing, against such a good Father, self-sacrificing Savior, and comforting Spirit, makes us weep. O that I were never brought into captivity to the law of sin! This is the earnest christian's desire. So with confession, we weep tears of godly sorrow from contrite and repentant hearts, for sins that are past, as we ask pardon in the ever-prevalent name of Jesus.

(4) Tears of bereavement for our loved and lost. Martha wept for Lazarus; and instead of Jesus rebuking her, "Jesus wept." He had a heart that could be "touched." If we love deeply, when the mystic tie is snapped, we shall feel the stroke acutely. O our loved! But the invader death made a raid on our homes, and bore away his captive. 'Twas a father out of whom we came. "Our father," who toiled for us, and endured hardships for our weal. 'Twas our mother on whose knees we were dandled. Our brother or sister, of whom the poet sings—

"And these children twain,
Who had often lain
Twined in each other's arms,
Shall be sundered apart."

It is true, and as we look on our departed friends, the fountain jets up its waters, and the salt, hot tear of pain for bereavement adds to the already vast and still accumulating expression of sorrow. We weep for the departed; but still we know that, dying in Christ, they sleep in Jesus, and shall wake up in his beauty; and so "we sorrow not as others who have no hope."

(5) Tears of sympathy for the sad. Did you ever know a christian selfish? The spirit of Jesus is most unselfish. In contrast to this, it is positively sympathetic. 'Tis the law of our Master Jesus' house, that we "weep with those who weep"; cry with the afflicted; make their sorrows ours; bear their burdens. I would to God that the fellowship expressed by the talented composer of that blessed hymn—"Blest be the tie that binds," was universally true in the church, especially the thought contained in the following lines:—

"We share our mutual woes,
Our mutual burdens bear;
And often for each other flows
The sympathising tear."

It was true once. It is sometimes true now; but O the world has grown so hard! Our Father, we confess with grief that our hearts are far too stony, too adamantine, too unfeeling. O that all the tenderness of Jesus characterized us! O that we were so sensitive to others' woes, that we grieved for their sorrows as though they were our own.

(6) Tears of longing for Christ our Lord. Christ Jesus is the Bridegroom of his church. His church is his Bride. He said, when he was on earth, that when he was gone, then would the "children of the bridechamber weep." 'Tis true! Sorrow filled the disciples' hearts even at the prospect of Christ's departure; but now he is gone, tears run down the cheeks of loyal souls and true. Tears run down our faces, whilst men ask us after our Beloved. Ah! where is he?

"Ye daughters of Zion, declare, have you seen
The star that on Israel shone?
Say, if in your tents my Beloved has been,
And where with his flock he has gone?"

We weep, for Christ is away. But soon he will come and say, "Weep not for me."

III. How long are these tears to last? "Weeping may endure for a night." How long? A night. That is, through

(1) Earth's night. Earth once had a morning. It was clear then. No mist of curse floated in the buoyant air. The morning was light and bright. O how fresh and new and cheerful everything! But time rolled in on the world. Through Adam's sin the creature was made subject to vanity. Down from the throne of Eternal Justice fell as a garment the dark of the curse. "Cursed be the ground for thy sake," were the warp and woof of that mourning robe that hid the world in gloom. And now earth is called "the valley of the shadow of death." The wing of death shadows it, hides the brightness of heaven, and plunges the world into the darkness of night. "Darkness covers the land." Death is a sorrow, a curse, an enemy. And as grim as death is his first-born sorrow. Inky blackness of curse, and sorrow to tears, what fit company they appear for each other. But soon "the long, dark night of time" shall be passed, and the morn of eternal life break for the ransomed. Then "there shall be no more curse." Earth shall emerge into a new morning. "Morning cometh," says the watchman.

(2) Moral night. If darkness covers the earth, how much more "gross darkness the people." Men say to God, "Depart from us, for we desire not the knowledge of thy ways." They are naturally ignorant of God; and so content are they to remain in intellectual and moral darkness, that it may be said of them, they "have not sought the Lord, nor inquired for him." The true knowledge of God in Jesus Christ enlightens the mind, disperses the darkness of ignorance, gives present light, makes morning even now in the believing heart. True, it is early morning. It also sets the future before us in the golden light of an abiding day. What was dark to us is light. That period with regard to which we had no hope, is now filled with blessings for us. Ah! we were sometimes darkness, but are now light in the Lord. "We are all the children of the day." Men are ignorant. The world slumbers in terrible unconsciousness of this ignorance. In their ignorance they act wrong. They injure, and persecute, and grieve the hearts of God's people; they wring godly souls into drops of blood and pain. O, it is night—the night of gross ignorance. But if men only knew the gift of God, then would they not have to ask each other, "Know ye the Lord?" for, asking of Him, he would give them the light of life, and their darkness would pass.

Weeping shall endure this time. This is its "season," its day, its time. But the night shall be consumed even unto the end. The last vestige of darkness shall sink into oblivion. What is night? What is darkness? Simply this, absence of light. But when light shall flood the world from pole to pole, from the lowest vale of earth to the highest dome of heaven, it shall be scattered all. The light of life shall supersede earth's night of death. The light of clear sight and perfect knowledge shall replace the night of felt ignorance; the glory of holiness shall drive the moral night of sin into oblivion.

(To be concluded.)

— Christians who wish to retain the spirituality of their religion, should be very careful how they mingle with the world. He who is pleased with the company of ungodly men, no matter how witty or learned, is either himself one with them, or is drinking into their spirit.

BROTHERLY LOVE.

WM. C. STEWART.

"Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another."

There is no single duty so often and so particularly insisted on in the holy word as that of love for one another. This is the sum of the whole law of God. Without this, whatever we profess of christianity is vain; we are nothing. Long prayers and grammatical exhortations and beautiful songs of praise will be abortive at the throne of grace without love, which is the greatest of graces and virtues. It is greater than faith and hope, and of perpetual use and duration: for when faith shall be turned into vision, and hope into joy, then shall charity, or love to our brethren, shine like the meridian sun. Well, therefore, might St. Paul, in the thirteenth chapter of the first epistle to the Corinthians, justly give it the preference to other spiritual graces—"the greatest of these is charity"; and likewise Peter, when he exhorts us above all things to endeavor to obtain it, as the crown of all other virtues. He says: "Above all things have fervent charity among yourselves." 1 Pet. 4: 8. After enumerating the other christian virtues, St. Paul advises us to "put on charity, which is the bond of perfectness." Col. 3: 14. John, the beloved disciple, is remarkable for his earnestness on this subject. All his preaching and writing is nothing else but an inculcating of this great and blessed virtue of love; and when he grew so weak with age as not to be able to go out as an evangelist, and make long discourses, he sums up all he has to say in this comprehensive sentence, "Love one another."

A holy brotherhood is what we need; not after a Masonic order, but one produced by God's Holy Spirit. We must have it, or all is lost. "United we stand, divided we fall." Shall we have the union? Let us lay aside self, hatred, jealousy, and let all the workings of the evil one be banished from our hearts. The cause of Christ demands it. Thousands around us are perishing for lack of this holy union in the church.

Many of us profess to believe that the judgment is near, the great coming day of deliverance. Let us live consistent with that belief. May it be said even in these last days, "See how these brethren love one another." There is no time to wrangle or gender strife. These last lingering moments of probation must be improved in a better way. Soon the home song will be sung, "The harvest is ended." May every one have sheaves to present to our returning Lord. The thought of that home we are so soon to reach should give us a new impetus.

Come, readers, one and all, let us rally. The forces of Satan are marshaling; the tramp of the hostile host can be heard. Rally around the standard of love. Jesus is the Captain. The struggle may be hard, but we are sure to win; for He who is for us is more than all that can be against us. The powers of darkness must give place, for Jesus soon will come, and then earth will blossom as the rose, and sin will no longer walk with stately tread. Hatred and strife will be known no more. Praise God. Love will then spread her mantle wide. Reader, shall we be there? Shall we join in the song of love around the throne of God?

LETTER FROM A HOLLANDER.

BRO. GRANT:—The following letter was written by a Holland brother, that I esteem very highly for his talent, as also for piety. He attended our grove meeting, where I saw him for the first time. I translated his letter as well as I could, and I hope he will receive some help for the present. J. WENDELL.

"Brothers in our Lord Jesus Christ, one in faith, waiting for the coming and kingdom of our Lord speedily to establish peace on the earth, when the 'wolf and the lamb shall lie down together,' waiting patiently, and preaching the same to others, is my pleasure. This I have been doing for some few years as a Baptist preacher. The Baptists could bear with me preaching the second coming of Christ; but when I saw that man had no immortal soul, and that the wicked would be destroyed, they despised me, and cast me out. I still wish to proclaim the above blessed truths to my countrymen in this country. I am poor in this world's goods; have a wife and seven children; but I have a rich Father. And now, dear brothers, if you could help me a little till I can get started among my Holland brethren, of which there are several thousand in Central and Western New York, it will be received with many thanks.

Your brother in tribulation, waiting for the kingdom. ABRAHAM HENNEKEY.

Clymer, Chautauqua Co., N. Y."

Dear Brn. and Srs.:—Having met in our travels the above named Holland brother, we found, by word and actions, that he is wholly devoted to the blessed cause that we love. Having been, by his request, to the neighborhood where he lives, and held a grove meeting, we also saw some two or three Hollanders that had come into the faith through his instrumentality. We believe the brother to be worthy, and what may be given would not be wasted, but used in the aforesaid work.

Yours for the truth, JOHN T. ONGLEY.

SPANISH CATHOLICS ON BAPTISM.

The following extracts from Spanish writers were obtained by Dr. Lorimer in a recent visit to Madrid, and published in an article furnished for the Watchman and Reflector:—

"Padre Scio, the translator of the Roman Catholic Bible into Spanish, and annotator of the same, writes on Acts 8 (Philip and the Eunuch)—'Baptism was administered then, and for a long time continued to be administered, by immersion.' Under Col. 2: 12 he says—'The immersion of the body in the water of baptism, as it was accustomed to be administered anciently, is a sure and efficacious sign of the spiritual death of the old man,' etc."

"Francisco Ximenes, in the 'Paraphrasis of the Epistle of Paul the Apostle,' published in Madrid, 1789, says, under Rom. 6: 4,—'Here Paul alludes to the ceremony employed in his day for the administration of baptism, which was done by plunging in the water the whole body of him who was baptized.' And here follows a fact worthy of note. Throughout the epistles, in the first edition, this author employs the word immersed wherever baptized occurs; but in the second edition, issued after his death, this plan is reversed by the Romish revisers. Were they afraid, as this work might be read by men of ordinary education, to leave so clear a condemnation of their system?"

"In a recent Spanish Etymological Dictionary of Felipe Monlau baptise is simply defined by the word immerse without further explanation. And this is true of the Literary Encyclopædias without exception. The Catholic Theological Dictionary (11 vols., Madrid, 1867) makes the following statement:—'With regard to the opinion, the practice of the Latin church differs entirely from the usage of the ancient church. We perform the ablution by sprinkling or pouring; the apostles did it by immersion; and this was the universal practice until after the Middle ages; in the middle of the thirteenth century sprinkling or pouring was rarely practised. In 1280 a Council of Cologne sought to maintain the ancient usages.'"—Religious Herald.

NEVER MIND.

Lord, save us from fretting
At the trials we shall find,
Ever thrown along our pathway—
Travel on, and never mind.

Travel onward, working, hoping—
Cast no lingering glance behind
At the trials once encountered;
Look ahead, and never mind.

What is past, is past forever,
Let all the fretting be resigned;
It will never help the matter,
Do your best, and never mind.

And if those who might befriend you,
Whom the ties of nature bind,
Should refuse to do their duty,
Look to God, and never mind.

Friendly words are often spoken
When the feelings are unkind,
Take them for their real value,
Pass them by, and never mind.

Fate may threaten, clouds may lower,
Enemies may be combined;
If your trust in God is steadfast,
He will help you—never mind.

THE NATURE OF MAN.

C. F. SWEET.

To Bro. H. W. Sargent, greeting:—Dear Sir,—You appear seriously to inquire concerning man's original condition, by creation. Your words are: "1st, Was he created in a state of decomposition? 2nd, Does the word of God teach that death was introduced into our world on account of man's disobedience?" We answer both questions with one word—YES. Man was made "of the DUST of the ground"; was "made subject to vanity," or "the bondage of corruption"; or in the language of your first question, "decomposition," "not willingly"; that is to say, man had no choice in directing the hand of his Creator in fixing the laws that should control his destiny, as a natural animal being. And as the Deity designed to develope in man a loyal and obedient character, under a law the penalty of which was to be death, of necessity (preparatory to an end) he would make him under, or subject to, the law of "decomposition"; and did so, as is clearly stated in the language—"Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return"; as also in the words, "The Lord God formed man of the DUST OF THE GROUND"; or in the language of Paul, Rom. 8th chapter—"The creature [MAN, and all the rest of God's animal economy in this lower creation] was made [by their Creator] subject to" "the bondage of corruption," or the natural laws of all animal things. You, will ask, then, how death can be a consequence of sin? I answer—disobedience is the second, and not the first cause of man's "decomposition," or dying; the proximate, and not the remote cause of death. If "sin" had not "entered into the world," by man's "disobedience," the proximate of death would not have existed.

But you will ask, in that case, What would have prevented man from dying, as a legitimate result of the first (or remote) cause of death, by the laws of "decomposition," if indeed he was created by the Deity, liable to any such result, framing law governing his animal nature? I answer nothing, absolutely nothing in himself. Therefore, if the remote cause of "decomposition" and death are prevented as a natural result (that is, without sin) from destroying the man Adam, in his primeval and "best estate," it must be by and through a means, or remedy provided outside of himself, by his Creator. Just such a remedy was provided for the man Adam in the fruit of "the tree of life." It was evidently designed by the Creator for this purpose. And man being made accessible to its remedial power, while obedient to God, was thereby exempted from death. Sin is what excluded him. Therefore when "sin entered into the world" by "man's disobedience" he had to be and was deprived of access to its remedial power (it being guarded by the "flaming sword"); and man fell. But what was his fall? I answer—

1. He fell under the penalty of his Creator's moral law against sin, which was death. But while man had access to the remedial and life-sustaining fruit of the "tree of life," the penalty of sin could not be inflicted by the laws of man's animal nature; that is, the penalty could not be inflicted without violence on the part of the lawgiver, judge, and executive of the divine administration; therefore it became Infinite Wisdom, with this end in view, to exclude man from "the tree of life"; and being excluded he fell; and this was, so to speak, his second fall. For (2) he by sin fell under (with no remedy at hand) the laws of "decomposition" that control the destiny of all the animal creation, and, as a result, he dies by natural laws, as really so as any other animal that God ever created. Thus it is plain that man dies, as the result, and by the combination of two causes; while the other and lower animals die as the result of only one. They have not fallen under the power of death by their sin. Man has. They die as a consequence of their natural constitution, as organized, directed and made by the will, power and hand of their divine Creator. Man dies because his disobedience, or sin, drove him out of the garden of Eden, and away from "the tree of life." And thus sin removes him from the means of an exemption from death, by the nature of his animal constitution; and being removed, his relation to nature's laws as a decomposing animal was just the same that it would have been had there been no moral law for him to violate; and also had there been no "tree of life" provided to prevent his "decomposition" while obedient to moral law.

Let me repeat. Man's sin places him under the laws of organized, animal creatures, without a remedy. And so God uses the laws of animal "decomposition" by nature to execute the penalty of his moral law over man against sin. And although death in man's case is just as natural as in any other animal, it is also penal; but in the lower and irrational animals, that never violated any moral law, and hence had no sin, it is not penal. If these things are so, the death of Adam was obtained from two causes, and their combination; sin the proximate cause, and the "decomposition" of animal nature the remote cause.

COMMUNISM.—Christian communism declares "All that is mine is thine." Infidel communism, on the contrary, "All that is thine is mine."

— It is a precious thought to the children of God, that the Captain of their salvation does not leave them without provisions in their enemies' land, whilst they are engaged in fighting the fight of faith.

WINTER QUARTERS.—No. 2.

D. N. SMITH.

As intimated in a former article, when an army is housed in winter quarters, it makes no assaults upon the enemy, does him no harm; but when it girds on its armor, unsheathes its sword, and goes out to meet the foe, its main object is to kill men; and however inhuman or devilish this may be, it is its ultimatum; and if it cannot count its hundreds and thousands of victims, it is considered weak and inefficient; all its drilling and maneuvering and tactics go for nothing. We think the soldiers in the Lord's army can learn a lesson from this; and first, an army to be efficient must be thoroughly equipped, and under perfect discipline. No traitors, or deserters, or stragglers, are suffered to be in its ranks. When it marches out to meet the foe, it must present an unbroken front, and with deadly aim hurl its shafts of death and carnage into the ranks of the enemy. There must be no parleying or random shots.

But how is it with many churches and preachers? They often make considerable show. They sing, and pray, and talk, and preach, and labor, but no one is converted, and no one wounded. And why is it so? We think one prominent reason is, there is not a concentration of force and labor for this end. When will the church learn that its high mission should be to gather in sheaves into the Lord's garner? and if this is not its chief object and aim, its standard is too low.

But to resume the figure of the army. When it goes into battle, it uses no blank cartridges or dull swords; no weapon that will not be effective in bringing down the enemy. And however efficient these weapons may be, without sufficient force to send them home to the heart of the enemy, they will be harmless. We think there are many preachers who overlook the fact that in order to have their words cut into the heart, they must be accompanied by the Holy Spirit. They may throw all the doctrines and theories and truths of the sacred oracles into the enemy's ranks, and, without the Spirit of God, they will not be efficient in bringing men to repentance. This is the agent that softens and purifies the heart, and prepares its possessor to enter into the kingdom of heaven.

We think the apostle Paul, by the Spirit, has set this truth in its true light, when he says we may understand all mystery and knowledge, and yet be "as sounding brass." So we infer from this that there is something more needed for a preparation for the kingdom than a knowledge of the plan of salvation, or of all the doctrines and theories relative thereto.

And now let us ask those who are expecting the Lord soon to come, What are our highest aspirations? are they merely to gain an entrance into that rest? or are we striving to be co-workers with Christ in the work of saving the lost? Who has not a relative, a friend, out of Christ? and what joy would it cause in heaven and in our own hearts to see them brought from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God. Shall we be clear of their blood if we neglect to warn them, and do all in our power for their conversion? Have we duly considered this subject? Who can estimate the worth of a soul saved from the burnings of the last day? What more noble and exalted work can we be engaged in? The party strifes and divisions of churches, and even much of the preaching of the present day, sink into insignificance in comparison; and, as before intimated, we think a better remedy could not be found for much of the division and strife we often hear complaints about, than the baptism of the Holy Spirit, which is a sure guide in all things. "Be filled with the Spirit."

SCRIPTURAL BAPTISM.

Dr. Charles Anthon, a distinguished Episcopalian minister and scholar—a household name in America—has written a short letter to Dr. Parmley in regard to the meaning of baptise, as follows:

My dear sir: There is no authority whatever for the singular remark made by the Rev. Dr. Spring relative to the force of baptiso. The primary meaning of the word is to dip or immerse; and its secondary meanings, if it ever had any, all refer in some way or other to the same leading idea. Sprinkling, etc., are entirely out of the question."

Whitefield, Methodist: "It is certain that in the words of our text (Rom. 6: 3, 4) there is an illusion to the manner of baptism, which was by immersion."

Olshausen, Lutheran: "John baptized at Enon, because there was deep water there convenient for immersing."

Doddridge, Presbyterian: "And after Jesus was baptized, and as soon as he ascended out of the water to the bank of the Jordan, etc." "And John also that time was baptizing at Enon, near to Salim, a town on the west of the Jordan, and he particularly chose that place because there was a great quantity of water there, which made it convenient to his purpose. Nothing surely can be more evident than that pollahudata signifies a large quantity of water, it being sometimes used for the river Euphrates." "It would be very unnatural to suppose that Philip and the eunuch went down to the water merely that Philip might take a little water in his hand to pour on the eunuch. A person of his dignity no doubt had many vessels in his baggage on such a journey through so desert a country; a precaution absolutely necessary for travelers in those parts, and never omitted by them."

The Greek is essentially a living language. The modern Greeks mock to utter scorn the absurdity of supposing that it means to sprinkle or pour. This fact is unquestioned and unquestionable. Shall we adduce one or two testimonies:

Prof. M. Stuart: "The mode of baptism by immersion the Oriental church has always continued to preserve down to the present time. The members of this church are accustomed to call the members of the western churches 'sprinkled christians,' by way of ridicule and contempt. They maintain that baptiso can signify nothing but immerge, and that baptism by sprinkling is as great a solecism as immersion by sprinkling."

Dr. Knapp, Lutheran Professor in the University of Halle: "In the Greek church they still hold to immersion. It would have been better to have adhered generally to the ancient practice, even as Luther and Calvin allowed."

Basil the Great, a Greek, and Archbishop of Cæsarea, about A. D. 370. Preaching on a baptismal occasion, he says: "Buried with him in baptism. What then is the manner of the burial? And what is the utility of the imitation? First, indeed, it is necessary that the following of the former life be broken off. But this is impossible for him who is not born again, according to the declaration of the Lord." "How then do we perform the descent into the state of the dead? Imitating the burial of Christ by baptism; for the bodies of the baptized are, as it were, buried in the water." "In three immersions and as many invocations, the great mystery of baptism is completed, that the emblem of death may be imaged forth."

Conybeare, a recent Episcopal writer of eminence: "This passage (Rom. 6: 4) cannot be understood except by remembering that the primitive mode of baptism was by immersion."

Bishop Smith, of Kentucky, Episcopalian, writes: "I do fully and unhesitatingly believe that no instance either of adult or infant baptism occurred during the first three centuries except by immersion, save only in the few cases of clinic baptism; and that to this practice all the incidental notices of Holy Scripture best conform." He believes that "God, in his wise providence, has permitted the rise of the various sects of Baptists for the purpose of ultimately restoring the primitive mode of baptism."

Venema: "It is without controversy, that baptism in the primitive church was administered by immersion into water, and not by sprinkling. The essential act of baptising in the second century consisted not in sprinkling, but in immersion into water in the name of each person of the Trinity. Concerning immersion, the words and phrases that are used sufficiently testify, and that it was performed in a river, a pool or a fountain. To the essential rite of baptism in the third century pertained immersion and not aspersion, except in cases of necessity, and it was accounted a half-perfect baptism. Immersion in the fourth century was one of those acts that were considered as essential to baptism; nevertheless, aspersion was used in the last moments of life on such as were called clinics; and also where there was not a sufficiency of water."

Gems.

— A real christian loves close, pointed, searching preaching, and seeks not the ministry of those who speak enticing words of man's wisdom.

— The worse misfortune is to be unable to bear misfortune.

— He that has no bridle on his tongue has no grace in his heart.

— Deep waters are still. Wise men generally talk little, because they think much.

— More men grow old from having nothing to do, than from overwork. The running machine will keep bright for years—the idle machine will soon rust out.

— Patience is always crowned with success. This rule is without an exception. It may not be a splendid success, but patience never takes anything in hand that it does not succeed with in some form.

"They who strive to help the weary,
Lighten sorrow's heavy load—
They it is whom Christ has chosen,
They, the hidden ones of God."

— Real greatness does not depend on the things we do, but on the mind with which we do them.

— When the presence of Christ is realized, then do love, gratitude, humility, faith, gentleness, meekness, etc., flow forth in sweetest fragrance toward their author.

— A natural man desires carnal things as he does food. Thus may we tell what we are by what we desire.

— There is an essential meanness in the wish to get the better of any one; the only competition worthy a wise man is with himself.

— The whole character of the christian seems to be comprehended in this title—a believer in Christ.

— We are in the safe path during our pilgrim state while we are in the valley of humiliation.

THE PIOUS CHILD'S RESOLVE.

I have an evil heart within—
A heart that's often prone to sin;
What can a feeble sinner do,
His naughty tempers to subdue!

This will I do: when first I find
An evil thought within my mind,
I'll go to Jesus, and I'll say,
Lord, take this evil thought away.

Does not the name of Jesus mean
One that has power to save from sin?
O Lamb of God, take mine away,
And give me a new heart, I pray.

A BEAR WITH A BEDQUILT.

It is a bedquilt, isn't it, if he always spreads it over himself when he goes to bed? I think so. You never heard of such a bear? I dare say you haven't, because that isn't his whole name. His name is Ant-bear, and I guess you'd think it a good one if you could see him once when he finds a nice ant-hill to work on. You'd think he was made to eat ants—as, indeed, he was.

His fore feet are made with sharp claws, just right to tear open the hard houses of the white ants. And he's as fond of ants as you are of sugar plums—strange as you may think it.

What I call his bedquilt is really his tail. A monstrous gray mat it looks like, large enough to cover him entirely up—and tuck in. Then his nose is half as long as his body, so it can get into the ant-houses, you see. And his tongue is small, and very long, and darts in and out so fast you can hardly see it, snatching up dozens of ants every time.

He has to be quick to get enough of them, for ants are not lazy themselves, you know.

When he lies down he looks droll enough. He tucks his long nose under his arm (suppose your nose was long enough to tuck under your arm!), and then just throws his tail over himself, like a spread. Not an ant can get through that cover, if it wants to.

He looks like a heap of coarse hay. I should think he'd smother himself.

This curious fellow lives in Brazil. Perhaps you'd like to know by what charming and graceful name the wise men call him. I can write it for you, because I found it in the wise books; but I'd like to hear you pronounce it—Myrmecophaga jubata!

I guess we'll leave this name for the books, and call him simply the Ant-bear.

He's a very useful animal. But for him the white ants would clear the country of everything, I should think. They eat every imaginable substance—food, clothes, paper, and even wood. One does not know what they are about, till his chairs and tables fall to pieces, and he finds the inside all eaten out; or on opening a book in his library, he finds every leaf eaten out, and only the covers left standing; or his floor suddenly caves in, and drops the whole family into the cellar, when he finds every timber and board eaten hollow.

They are intolerable pests, and, of course, every one in Brazil feels very friendly to our comical bear with a bedquilt.

He lives, while at home, on ants; but he can eat other things. One that I heard of was kept a pet, and when a few months old would eat several dozen eggs a day, besides some chopped meat.

I wonder how many ants he would have to eat to equal that amount of food!—Independent.

THE CHILD'S OFFERING.

I once heard of a dear little girl who sat one Sunday morning learning a hymn, a part of which was this—

"A flower when offered in the bud,
Is no vain sacrifice."

She said these two lines over and over to herself as if pondering upon their meaning, and then closing her book, she went into the garden and built a little altar of moss, and laid a beautiful rosebud upon it.

Then she knelt, and folding her little hands, she prayed her Father in heaven to accept her sacrifice.

After her return from church she went to see her little altar, and, lo! the moisture of the moss and the warmth of the sun had caused the bud to expand to a lovely rose.

Then the little girl clasped her hands with joy, for she thought that God had caused the bud to burst forth into blossom as a sign that her little offering was accepted.

And must not this simple act of love and faith have been well pleasing in His sight?

He notices our every action, however slight, and reads our every thought.

No act, however simple, by which the smallest child tries to show his love to the dear heavenly Father, is passed by unnoticed.

Dear little ones, offer up to him in the morning of your lives your own hearts, with all their dewy freshness and sweetness, and they will be "no vain sacrifice."—Children's Hour.

Hygiene.

"This is for your Health."

PURE AIR.

A plentiful supply of pure air for breathing is an absolute necessity of healthy life. Air that has once passed through the lungs of a living being is not in a fit condition to be again breathed until it has passed through a renovating process in the outer world. The reason why air thus once used is unfit to support life is that the oxygen, the life-supporting portion of the atmosphere, is exhausted by the act of breathing, and in place of it is generated a great quantity of carbonic acid gas, a deadly poison and a direct enemy to life of all kinds. The same effect is produced by combustion, as for instance by the burning of illuminating gas in a room, one jet of which will vitiate as much air as five persons. As much as fifty cubic feet of air are vitiated by one person in an hour. In a room where a large number of people are collected, especially for any length of time, and where, as is often the case, the additional vitiating influence of combustion both from gas and fuel is also introduced, it also becomes of the utmost importance to secure a rapid and sufficient change of air, so that they who are in the room may not be obliged to breathe over and over again the impure air, more heavily charged with poison at every respiration, and which from want of the proper nourishment for the blood produces a stupor, and if the same conditions are continued, insensibility.

When we feel the want of fresh air in such cases, our practice is to open doors and windows. This secures the end, but the practice is objectionable, because drafts are produced which cause colds and other ailments.

To produce a proper system of ventilation it is necessary to perfect an arrangement which will allow the vitiated air to go out at such places in the room as may be advisable, but in such a manner as to prevent the entrance of cold air or drafts and not to prevent the entrance of heated air necessary for warmth. The room should be warmed and ventilated in all parts alike. In this particular many systems of ventilation fail, for many elaborate arrangements for ventilation affect only the upper part of the room. There are many deleterious gases in a vitiated atmosphere, some of which rise, being lighter than air, and some of which fall by reason of a greater density. These must alike be drawn off, and in a manner that will produce no perceptible current in any part.

The feet of the people in the room should be kept warmer than their heads, their backs should be warmer than their faces, and their bodies should be kept warm while they have plenty of pure air to breathe. These conditions are hard to produce, since there are always two currents to deal with, the inner and the outer, and since heated air always ascends, making the upper, or useless part of the room, the first to be affected by the heat.—Philadelphia Press.

DRESS.—Dress seasonably, substantially, at all seasons of the year, especially at the close of spring and the beginning of the autumn, and in all places where the mornings and evenings are cool enough to induce the slightest sensation of chilliness; these precautions are particularly necessary to children and to all invalids and persons of frail constitutions; it is a good rule for all persons at the sea-shore. It is far better to feel oppressed with the dress during the few hours of mid-day, than to feel uncomfortably cool all the morning and towards sunset. As to the amount of clothing any one should wear, no one person ought to be a guide for any other. A wise man will dress, on all occasions, at all places, and at all times sufficiently warm to keep away a feeling of chilliness.

HOW TO CURE A COLD.—Contrary to an old theory, a popular writer gives the following on how to manage a cold: Eat nothing but a piece of toast, drink freely of cold water, walk twice a day till you are in a genteel perspiration, and go to bed early.

HOPE ON, MY SOUL.

E. M. BRIGGS.

Hope on, my soul, cast not away
Thy confidence in God;
For lo, there dawns a brighter day,
When he will all reward.

Hope on, my soul, though dark the night,
The morning soon will break,
When God himself will give thee light,
And darkness from thee take.

Hope on, my soul, there is a band
That God will shield from harm;
By faith I see a blessed land,
And this has lost its charm.

Hope on, my soul, nor dare rebel,
For God himself has spoken;
Though oft the silver cord is loosed,
The golden bowl lies broken.

Hope on, my soul, the dawn will come,
When death will lose its sting;
Then sleeping ones with us called home,
Will all his praises sing.

Athol, Mass.

WEEPING AND JOY.

WM. KELLAWAY.

"Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning." Ps. 30: 5.

I. These words are the utterance of a joyful memory. Upon this memory they are founded. Their basis is an experience in the Psalmist's checkered life. They seem to gush out of his heart unheralded. He thinks of the past. He was the king. He wore the royal purple, bore the kingly sway, and ruled the nation. On his head rested the crown. He sat as judge in the gate. How venerable the good old patriarch! Look at his long, white, flowing beard. See his hoary hairs. He is about sixty years of age. His form is manly, magisterial, royal. He has a son by the name of Absalom. This son was beautiful, without blemish, and none in all Israel was to be praised like him. His hair grew so luxuriantly that every year he had to have it polled, when it sold for two hundred shekels. If they were gold, the value of his hair would be $1800 a year. Absalom killed Amnon and fled. But after a time he was permitted by David to return to Jerusalem. He came back, but David could not see the face of his son's murderer. In time he permits him to see his face. A kiss of peace is given Absalom. The father and son are one. But oh the base ingratitude of the pardoned son! He asks David's permission to go to Hebron and pay a vow he had vowed to the Lord. David kisses him, and bids him "go in peace." But he sends out his servants to cry, "Absalom is king." David and his servants have to fly. They passed through the country. Many people saw them flying, and "all the people wept with a loud voice." 2 Sam. 15: 23. The king and his servants pass over the brook Kedron, and go into the way of the wilderness. The sun goes down. The pale stars—these tapers tall—come out one by one and flicker their nightly, uncertain light on high. They come to the foot of Olivet—mountain of blessed memory! "And David went up by the ascent of Mount Olivet, and wept as he went up, and had his face covered, and he went barefoot; and all the people that were with him covered every man his head, and they went up weeping as they went up." 2 Sam. 15: 30. This happened at night. (See 2 Sam. 17: 1.) This is also proved by the words of Zadok, the priest—"Lodge not this night in the plains of the wilderness," etc.

Imagine the scene—the king and his household. It is comparatively dark. Hear the deep sobs, the loud groans, as they clamber up the rugged mountain side. What a touching sight of woe! How riven the heart of him who had frankly and graciously healed the break caused by his son's sins, by pardoning him and admitting him into his favor. Morning comes. The cold, bluish-white streaks of day dawn over the land. By the morning light there was not one of the royal household left that had not passed over Jordan. 2 Sam. 17: 22. Before another day had progressed, a battle had been fought. Israel had fled, David and his host were victors. Joy had come; for victory had garlanded the heads of the brave, and crowned the efforts of the king.

Ten years have fled. David reigns still. He takes his harp. He is playing and singing. He remembers the night of weeping. He remembers the song he sung to the Lord in the morning. He utters his song of gladness, he wakes the chords of hope, and this is his song—"Weeping may endure for a night; but joy cometh in the morning."

II. Weeping is the lot of all men here, and the especial heritage of God's people. Human life is one of sorrow and tears. A poet has called the coming life "the tearless life," in opposition to this, the tearful one. All men have sorrow; all weep. The first effort of the new-born babe is often a low, faint cry. People weep tears constantly here. And round the bed-side of our dying, we hear the half-suppressed sigh of the friend, and see the tears trickling down the faces of tender childhood and hard, coarse manhood. Tears are the meat of all; but especially of God's people, who weep—

(1) Tears of pain, on account of the afflictions they suffer for Christ's sake. O what the church has suffered of persecution! Some have had scourgings, and stonings, and rackings, and bruisings, and imprisonments, and been crucified, thrown into boiling oil, and a thousand other barbarities they have suffered for love of Christ. O! "many are the afflictions of the righteous; but the Lord delivereth them out of all." And Jesus promises, "In the world ye shall have tribulation." And it is no sin to weep as we feel pain, only let us be careful when we are scoffed at, and maligned, and abused, that our enemies do it without reason or provocation, so that when we weep it may be tears of pain that have no sting that will sting us.

(2) Tears of sorrow, because men are so wicked. Said David—"Rivers of waters run down mine eyes, because men keep not thy law." And said good Jeremiah, "O that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the slain of the daughter of my people." We weep—who can help it?—over the base ingratitude of a godless world, waxing worse and worse. We weep over a church that has backslidden, become lukewarm, lost its power in prayer, and so mingled with the world as to defy the wisest man to draw the line of demarkation, or define the boundary limits between the two.

(3) Tears of penitence for our own imperfections. Christians must be perfect in love; and they should grow increasingly perfect in character. They must be going on to perfection in knowledge. I am sensible of imperfections. I know my character has many a flaw. My service to Christ has been mingled with much insincerity and unfaithfulness. "Not as though I had already attained, or were already perfect." And this sense of commission of sin, and omission of right doing, against such a good Father, self-sacrificing Savior, and comforting Spirit, makes us weep. O that I were never brought into captivity to the law of sin! This is the earnest christian's desire. So with confession, we weep tears of godly sorrow from contrite and repentant hearts, for sins that are past, as we ask pardon in the ever-prevalent name of Jesus.

(4) Tears of bereavement for our loved and lost. Martha wept for Lazarus; and instead of Jesus rebuking her, "Jesus wept." He had a heart that could be "touched." If we love deeply, when the mystic tie is snapped, we shall feel the stroke acutely. O our loved! But the invader death made a raid on our homes, and bore away his captive. 'Twas a father out of whom we came. "Our father," who toiled for us, and endured hardships for our weal. 'Twas our mother on whose knees we were dandled. Our brother or sister, of whom the poet sings—

"And these children twain,
Who had often lain
Twined in each other's arms,
Shall be sundered apart."

It is true, and as we look on our departed friends, the fountain jets up its waters, and the salt, hot tear of pain for bereavement adds to the already vast and still accumulating expression of sorrow. We weep for the departed; but still we know that, dying in Christ, they sleep in Jesus, and shall wake up in his beauty; and so "we sorrow not as others who have no hope."

(5) Tears of sympathy for the sad. Did you ever know a christian selfish? The spirit of Jesus is most unselfish. In contrast to this, it is positively sympathetic. 'Tis the law of our Master Jesus' house, that we "weep with those who weep"; cry with the afflicted; make their sorrows ours; bear their burdens. I would to God that the fellowship expressed by the talented composer of that blessed hymn —"Blest be the tie that binds," was universally true in the church, especially the thought contained in the following lines:—

"We share our mutual woes,
Our mutual burdens bear;
And often for each other flows
The sympathizing tear."

It was true once. It is sometimes true now; but O the world has grown so hard! Our Father, we confess with grief that our hearts are far too stony, too adamantine, too unfeeling. O that all the tenderness of Jesus characterized us! O that we were so sensitive to others' woes, that we grieved for their sorrows as though they were our own.

(6) Tears of longing for Christ our Lord. Christ Jesus is the Bridegroom of his church. His church is his Bride. He said, when he was on earth, that when he was gone, then would the "children of the bridechamber weep." 'Tis true! Sorrow filled the disciples' hearts even at the prospect of Christ's departure; but now he is gone, tears run down the cheeks of loyal souls and true. Tears run down our faces, whilst men ask us after our Beloved. Ah! where is he?

"Ye daughters of Zion, declare, have you seen
The star that on Israel shone?
Say, if in your tents my Beloved has been,
And where with his flock he has gone?"

We weep, for Christ is away. But soon he will come and say, "Weep not for me."

III. How long are these tears to last? "Weeping may endure for a night." How long? A night. That is, through

(1) Earth's night. Earth once had a morning. It was clear then. No mist of curse floated in the buoyant air. The morning was light and bright. O how fresh and new and cheerful everything! But time rolled in on the world. Through Adam's sin the creature was made subject to vanity. Down from the throne of Eternal Justice fell as a garment the dark of the curse. "Cursed be the ground for thy sake," were the warp and woof of that mourning robe that hid the world in gloom. And now earth is called "the valley of the shadow of death." The wing of death shadows it, hides the brightness of heaven, and plunges the world into the darkness of night. "Darkness covers the land." Death is a sorrow, a curse, an enemy. And as grim as death is his first-born sorrow. Inky blackness of curse, and sorrow to tears, what fit company they appear for each other. But soon "the long, dark night of time" shall be passed, and the morn of eternal life break for the ransomed. Then "there shall be no more curse." Earth shall emerge into a new morning. "Morning cometh," says the watchman.

(2) Moral night. If darkness covers the earth, how much more "gross darkness the people." Men say to God, "Depart from us, for we desire not the knowledge of thy ways." They are naturally ignorant of God; and so content are they to remain in intellectual and moral darkness, that it may be said of them, they "have not sought the Lord, nor inquired for him." The true knowledge of God in Jesus Christ enlightens the mind, disperses the darkness of ignorance, gives present light, makes morning even now in the believing heart. True, it is early morning. It also sets the future before us in the golden light of an abiding day. What was dark to us is light. That period with regard to which we had no hope, is now filled with blessings for us. Ah! we were sometimes darkness, but are now light in the Lord. "We are all the children of the day." Men are ignorant. The world slumbers in terrible unconsciousness of this ignorance. In their ignorance they act wrong. They injure, and persecute, and grieve the hearts of God's people; they wring godly souls into drops of blood and pain. O, it is night—the night of gross ignorance. But if men only knew the gift of God, then would they not have to ask each other, "Know ye the Lord?" for, asking of Him, he would give them the light of life, and their darkness would pass.

Weeping shall endure this time. This is its "season," its day, its time. But the night shall be consumed even unto the end. The last vestige of darkness shall sink into oblivion. What is night? What is darkness? Simply this, absence of light. But when light shall flood the world from pole to pole, from the lowest vale of earth to the highest dome of heaven, it shall be scattered all. The light of life shall supersede earth's night of death. The light of clear sight and perfect knowledge shall replace the night of felt ignorance; the glory of holiness shall drive the moral night of sin into oblivion.

(To be concluded.)

— Christians who wish to retain the spirituality of their religion, should be very careful how they mingle with the world. He who is pleased with the company of ungodly men, no matter how witty or learned, is either himself one with them, or is drinking into their spirit.

BROTHERLY LOVE.

WM. G. STEWART.

"Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another."

There is no single duty so often and so particularly insisted on in the holy word as that of love for one another. This is the sum of the whole law of God. Without this, whatever we profess of christianity is vain; we are nothing. Long prayers and grammatical exhortations and beautiful songs of praise will be abortive at the throne of grace without love, which is the greatest of graces and virtues. It is greater than faith and hope, and of perpetual use and duration: for when faith shall be turned into vision, and hope into joy, then shall charity, or love to our brethren, shine like the meridian sun. Well, therefore, might St. Paul, in the thirteenth chapter of the first epistle to the Corinthians, justly give it the preference to other spiritual graces—"the greatest of these is charity"; and likewise Peter, when he exhorts us above all things to endeavor to obtain it, as the crown of all other virtues. He says: "Above all things have fervent charity among yourselves." 1 Pet. 4: 8. After enumerating the other christian virtues, St. Paul advises us to "put on charity, which is the bond of perfectness." Col. 3: 14. John, the beloved disciple, is remarkable for his earnestness on this subject. All his preaching and writing is nothing else but an inculcating of this great and blessed virtue of love; and when he grew so weak with age as not to be able to go out as an evangelist, and make long discourses, he sums up all he has to say in this comprehensive sentence, "Love one another."

A holy brotherhood is what we need; not after a Masonic order, but one produced by God's Holy Spirit. We must have it, or all is lost. "United we stand, divided we fall." Shall we have the union? Let us lay aside self, hatred, jealousy, and let all the workings of the evil one be banished from our hearts. The cause of Christ demands it. Thousands around us are perishing for lack of this holy union in the church.

Many of us profess to believe that the judgment is near, the great coming day of deliverance. Let us live consistent with that belief. May it be said even in these last days, "See how these brethren love one another." There is no time to wrangle or gender strife. These last lingering moments of probation must be improved in a better way. Soon the home song will be sung, "The harvest is ended." May every one have sheaves to present to our returning Lord. The thought of that home we are so soon to reach should give us a new impetus.

Come, readers, one and all, let us rally. The forces of Satan are marshaling; the tramp of the hostile host can be heard. Rally around the standard of love. Jesus is the Captain. The struggle may be hard, but we are sure to win; for He who is for us is more than all that can be against us. The powers of darkness must give place, for Jesus soon will come, and then earth will blossom as the rose, and sin will no longer walk with stately tread. Hatred and strife will be known no more. Praise God. Love will then spread her mantle wide. Reader, shall we be there? Shall we join in the song of love around the throne of God?

LETTER FROM A HOLLANDER.

BRO. GRANT:—The following letter was written by a Holland brother, that I esteem very highly for his talent, as also for piety. He attended our grove meeting, where I saw him for the first time. I translated his letter as well as I could, and I hope he will receive some help for the present. J. WENDELL.

"Brothers in our Lord Jesus Christ, one in faith, waiting for the coming and kingdom of our Lord speedily to establish peace on the earth, when the 'wolf and the lamb shall lie down together,' waiting patiently, and preaching the same to others, is my pleasure. This I have been doing for some few years as a Baptist preacher. The Baptists could bear with me preaching the second coming of Christ; but when I saw that man had no immortal soul, and that the wicked would be destroyed, they despised me, and cast me out. I still wish to proclaim the above blessed truths to my countrymen in this country. I am poor in this world's goods; have a wife and seven children; but I have a rich Father. And now, dear brothers, if you could help me a little till I can get started among my Holland brethren, of which there are several thousand in Central and Western New York, it will be received with many thanks.

Your brother in tribulation, waiting for the kingdom. ABRAHAM HENNEKEY.

Clymer, Chautauqua Co., N. Y."

Dear Brn. and Srs.:—Having met in our travels the above named Holland brother, we found, by word and actions, that he is wholly devoted to the blessed cause that we love. Having been, by his request, to the neighborhood where he lives, and held a grove meeting, we also saw some two or three Hollanders that had come into the faith through his instrumentality. We believe the brother to be worthy, and what may be given would not be wasted, but used in the aforesaid work.

Yours for the truth, JOHN T. ONGLEY.
E. N. BURRELL.

SPANISH CATHOLICS ON BAPTISM.

The following extracts from Spanish writers were obtained by Dr. Lorimer in a recent visit to Madrid, and published in an article furnished for the Watchman and Reflector:—

"Padre Scio, the translator of the Roman Catholic Bible into Spanish, and annotator of the same, writes on Acts 8 (Philip and the Eunuch)—'Baptism was administered then, and for a long time continued to be administered, by immersion.' Under Col. 2: 12 he says—'The immersion of the body in the water of baptism, as it was accustomed to be administered anciently, is a sure and efficacious sign of the spiritual death of the old man,' etc."

"Francisco Ximenes, in the 'Paraphrasis of the Epistle of Paul the Apostle,' published in Madrid, 1789, says, under Rom. 6: 4,—'Here Paul alludes to the ceremony employed in his day for the administration of baptism, which was done by plunging in the water the whole body of him who was baptized.' And here follows a fact worthy of note. Throughout the epistles, in the first edition, this author employs the word immersed wherever baptized occurs; but in the second edition, issued after his death, this plan is reversed by the Romish revisers. Were they afraid, as this work might be read by men of ordinary education, to leave so clear a condemnation of their system?"

"In a recent Spanish Etymological Dictionary of Felipe Monlau baptizo is simply defined by the word immerse without further explanation. And this is true of the Literary Encyclopedias without exception. The Catholic Theological Dictionary (11 vols., Madrid, 1867) makes the following statement:—'With regard to the ablution, the practice of the Latin church differs entirely from the usage of the ancient church. We perform the ablution by sprinkling or pouring; the apostles did it by immersion; and this was the universal practice until after the Middle ages; in the middle of the thirteenth century sprinkling or pouring was rarely practised. In 1280 a Council of Cologne sought to maintain the ancient usages.'"—Religious Herald.

NEVER MIND.

Lord, save us from fretting
At the trials we shall find,
Ever thrown along our pathway—
Travel on, and never mind.

Travel onward, working, hoping—
Cast no lingering glance behind
At the trials once encountered;
Look ahead, and never mind.

What is past, is past forever,
Let all the fretting be resigned;
It will never help the matter,
Do your best, and never mind.

And if those who might befriend you,
Whom the ties of nature bind,
Should refuse to do their duty,
Look to God, and never mind.

Friendly words are often spoken
When the feelings are unkind,
Take them for their real value,
Pass them by, and never mind.

Fate may threaten, clouds may lower,
Enemies may be combined;
If your trust in God is steadfast,
He will help you—never mind.

THE NATURE OF MAN.

C. F. SWEET.

To Bro. H. W. Sargent, greeting:—Dear Sir,—You appear seriously to inquire concerning man's original condition, by creation. Your words are: "1st, Was he created in a state of decomposition? 2nd, Does the word of God teach that death was introduced into our world on account of man's disobedience?" We answer both questions with one word—YES. Man was made "of the DUST of the ground"; was "made subject to vanity," or "the bondage of corruption"; or in the language of your first question, "decomposition," "not willingly"; that is to say, man had no choice in directing the hand of his Creator in fixing the laws that should control his destiny, as a natural animal being. And as the Deity designed to develope in man a loyal and obedient character, under a law the penalty of which was to be death, of necessity (preparatory to an end) he would make him under, or subject to, the law of "decomposition"; and did so, as is clearly stated in the language—"Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return"; as also in the words, "The Lord God formed man of the DUST OF THE GROUND"; or in the language of Paul, Rom. 8th chapter—"The creature [MAN, and all the rest of God's animal economy in this lower creation] was made [by their Creator] subject to" "the bondage of corruption," or the natural laws of all animal things. You, will ask, then, how death can be a consequence of sin? I answer—disobedience is the second, and not the first cause of man's "decomposition," or dying; the proximate, and not the remote cause of death. If "sin" had not "entered into the world," by man's "disobedience," the proximate of death would not have existed.

But you will ask, in that case, What would have prevented man from dying, as a legitimate result of the first (or remote) cause of death, by the laws of "decomposition," if indeed he was created by the Deity, liable to any such result, framing law governing his animal nature? I answer nothing, absolutely nothing in himself. Therefore, if the remote cause of "decomposition" and death are prevented as a natural result (that is, without sin) from destroying the man Adam, in his primeval and "best estate," it must be by and through a means, or remedy provided outside of himself, by his Creator. Just such a remedy was provided for the man Adam in the fruit of "the tree of life." It was evidently designed by the Creator for this purpose. And man being made accessible to its remedial power, while obedient to God, was thereby exempted from death. Sin is what excluded him. Therefore when "sin entered into the world" by "man's disobedience" he had to be and was deprived of access to its remedial power (it being guarded by the "flaming sword"); and man fell. But what was his fall? I answer—

1. He fell under the penalty of his Creator's moral law against sin, which was death. But while man had access to the remedial and life-sustaining fruit of the "tree of life," the penalty of sin could not be inflicted by the laws of man's animal nature; that is, the penalty could not be inflicted without violence on the part of the lawgiver, judge, and executive of the divine administration; therefore it became Infinite Wisdom, with this end in view, to exclude man from "the tree of life"; and being excluded he fell; and this was, so to speak, his second fall. For (2) he by sin fell under (with no remedy at hand) the laws of "decomposition" that control the destiny of all the animal creation, and, as a result, he dies by natural laws, as really so as any other animal that God ever created. Thus it is plain that man dies, as the result, and by the combination of two causes; while the other and lower animals die as the result of only one. They have not fallen under the power of death by their sin. Man has. They die as a consequence of their natural constitution, as organized, directed and made by the will, power and hand of their divine Creator. Man dies because his disobedience, or sin, drove him out of the garden of Eden, and away from "the tree of life." And thus sin removes him from the means of an exemption from death, by the nature of his animal constitution; and being removed, his relation to nature's laws as a decomposing animal was just the same that it would have been had there been no moral law for him to violate; and also had there been no "tree of life" provided to prevent his "decomposition" while obedient to moral law.

Let me repeat. Man's sin places him under the laws of organized, animal creatures, without a remedy. And so God uses the laws of animal "decomposition" by nature to execute the penalty of his moral law over man against sin. And although death in man's case is just as natural as in any other animal, it is also penal; but in the lower and irrational animals, that never violated any moral law, and hence had no sin, it is not penal. If these things are so, the death of Adam was obtained from two causes, and their combination; sin the proximate cause, and the "decomposition" of animal nature the remote cause.

COMMUNISM.—Christian communism declares "All that is mine is thine." Infidel communism, on the contrary, "All that is thine is mine."

— It is a precious thought to the children of God, that the Captain of their salvation does not leave them without provisions in their enemies' land, whilst they are engaged in fighting the fight of faith.

WINTER QUARTERS.—No. 2.

R. H. SMITH.

As intimated in a former article, when an army is housed in winter quarters, it makes no assaults upon the enemy, does him no harm; but when it girds on its armor, unsheathes its sword, and goes out to meet the foe, its main object is to kill men; and however inhuman or devilish this may be, it is its ultimatum; and if it cannot count its hundreds and thousands of victims, it is considered weak and inefficient; all its drilling and maneuvering and tactics go for nothing. We think the soldiers in the Lord's army can learn a lesson from this; and first, an army to be efficient must be thoroughly equipped, and under perfect discipline. No traitors, or deserters, or stragglers, are suffered to be in its ranks. When it marches out to meet the foe, it must present an unbroken front, and with deadly aim hurl its shafts of death and carnage into the ranks of the enemy. There must be no parleying or random shots.

But how is it with many churches and preachers? They often make considerable show. They sing, and pray, and talk, and preach, and labor, but no one is converted, and no one wounded. And why is it so? We think one prominent reason is, there is not a concentration of force and labor for this end. When will the church learn that its high mission should be to gather in sheaves into the Lord's garner? and if this is not its chief object and aim, its standard is too low.

But to resume the figure of the army. When it goes into battle, it uses no blank cartridges or dull swords; no weapon that will not be effective in bringing down the enemy. And however efficient these weapons may be, without sufficient force to send them home to the heart of the enemy, they will be harmless. We think there are many preachers who overlook the fact that in order to have their words cut into the heart, they must be accompanied by the Holy Spirit. They may throw all the doctrines and theories and truths of the sacred oracles into the enemy's ranks, and, without the Spirit of God, they will not be efficient in bringing men to repentance. This is the agent that softens and purifies the heart, and prepares its possessor to enter into the kingdom of heaven.

We think the apostle Paul, by the Spirit, has set this truth in its true light, when he says we may understand all mystery and knowledge, and yet be "as sounding brass." So we infer from this that there is something more needed for a preparation for the kingdom than a knowledge of the plan of salvation, or of all the doctrines and theories relative thereto.

And now let us ask those who are expecting the Lord soon to come, What are our highest aspirations? are they merely to gain an entrance into that rest? or are we striving to be co-workers with Christ in the work of saving the lost? Who has not a relative, a friend, out of Christ? and what joy would it cause in heaven and in our own hearts to see them brought from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God. Shall we be clear of their blood if we neglect to warn them, and do all in our power for their conversion? Have we duly considered this subject? Who can estimate the worth of a soul saved from the burnings of the last day? What more noble and exalted work can we be engaged in? The party strifes and divisions of churches, and even much of the preaching of the present day, sink into insignificance in comparison; and, as before intimated, we think a better remedy could not be found for much of the division and strife we often hear complaints about, than the baptism of the Holy Spirit, which is a sure guide in all things. "Be filled with the Spirit."

SCRIPTURAL BAPTISM.

Dr. Charles Anthon, a distinguished Episcopalian minister and scholar—a household name in America—has written a short letter to Dr. Parmley in regard to the meaning of baptizo, as follows:

My dear sir: There is no authority whatever for the singular remark made by the Rev. Dr. Spring relative to the force of baptizo. The primary meaning of the word is to dip or immerse; and its secondary meanings, if it ever had any, all refer in some way or other to the same leading idea. Sprinkling, etc., are entirely out of the question."

Whitefield, Methodist: "It is certain that in the words of our text (Rom. 6: 3, 4) there is an illusion to the manner of baptism, which was by immersion."

Olshausen, Lutheran: "John baptized at Enon, because there was deep water there convenient for immersing."

Doddridge, Presbyterian: "And after Jesus was baptized, and as soon as he ascended out of the water to the bank of the Jordan, etc." "And John also that time was baptizing at Enon, near to Salim, a town on the west of the Jordan, and he particularly chose that place because there was a great quantity of water there, which made it convenient to his purpose. Nothing surely can be more evident than that pollahudata signifies a large quantity of water, it being sometimes used for the river Euphrates." "It would be very unnatural to suppose that Philip and the eunuch went down to the water merely that Philip might take a little water in his hand to pour on the eunuch. A person of his dignity no doubt had many vessels in his baggage on such a journey through so desert a country; a precaution absolutely necessary for travelers in those parts, and never omitted by them."

The Greek is essentially a living language. The modern Greeks mock to utter scorn the absurdity of supposing that it means to sprinkle or pour. This fact is unquestioned and unquestionable. Shall we adduce one or two testimonies:

Prof. M. Stuart: "The mode of baptism by immersion the Oriental church has always continued to preserve down to the present time. The members of this church are accustomed to call the members of the western churches 'sprinkled christians,' by way of ridicule and contempt. They maintain that baptizo can signify nothing but immerge, and that baptism by sprinkling is as great a solecism as immersion by sprinkling."

Dr. Knapp, Lutheran Professor in the University of Halle: "In the Greek church they still hold to immersion. It would have been better to have adhered generally to the ancient practice, even as Luther and Calvin allowed."

Basil the Great, a Greek, and Archbishop of Caesarea, about A. D. 370. Preaching on a baptismal occasion, he says: "Buried with him in baptism. What then is the manner of the burial? And what is the utility of the imitation? First, indeed, it is necessary that the following of the former life be broken off. But this is impossible for him who is not born again, according to the declaration of the Lord." "How then do we perform the descent into the state of the dead? Imitating the burial of Christ by baptism; for the bodies of the baptized are, as it were, buried in the water." "In three immersions and as many invocations, the great mystery of baptism is completed, that the emblem of death may be imaged forth."

Conybeare, a recent Episcopal writer of eminence: "This passage (Rom. 6: 4) cannot be understood except by remembering that the primitive mode of baptism was by immersion."

Bishop Smith, of Kentucky, Episcopalian, writes: "I do fully and unhesitatingly believe that no instance either of adult or infant baptism occurred during the first three centuries except by immersion, save only in the few cases of clinic baptism; and that to this practice all the incidental notices of Holy Scripture best conform." He believes that "God, in his wise providence, has permitted the rise of the various sects of Baptists for the purpose of ultimately restoring the primitive mode of baptism."

Venema: "It is without controversy, that baptism in the primitive church was administered by immersion into water, and not by sprinkling. The essential act of baptizing in the second century consisted not in sprinkling, but in immersion into water in the name of each person of the Trinity. Concerning immersion, the words and phrases that are used sufficiently testify, and that it was performed in a river, a pool or a fountain. To the essential rite of baptism in the third century pertained immersion and not aspersion, except in cases of necessity, and it was accounted a half-perfect baptism. Immersion in the fourth century was one of those acts that were considered as essential to baptism; nevertheless, aspersion was used in the last moments of life on such as were called clinics; and also where there was not a sufficiency of water." —Ex.

Gems.

— A real christian loves close, pointed, searching preaching, and seeks not the ministry of those who speak enticing words of man's wisdom.

— The worse misfortune is to be unable to bear misfortune.

— He that has no bridle on his tongue has no grace in his heart.

— Deep waters are still. Wise men generally talk little, because they think much.

— More men grow old from having nothing to do, than from overwork. The running machine will keep bright for years—the idle machine will soon rust out.

— Patience is always crowned with success. This rule is without an exception. It may not be a splendid success, but patience never takes anything in hand that it does not succeed with in some form.

"They who strive to help the weary,
Lighten sorrow's heavy load—
They it is whom Christ has chosen,
They, the hidden ones of God."

— Real greatness does not depend on the things we do, but on the mind with which we do them.

— When the presence of Christ is realized, then do love, gratitude, humility, faith, gentleness, meekness, etc., flow forth in sweetest fragrance toward their author.

— A natural man desires carnal things as he does food. Thus may we tell what we are by what we desire.

— There is an essential meanness in the wish to get the better of any one; the only competition worthy a wise man is with himself.

— The whole character of the christian seems to be comprehended in this title—a believer in Christ.

— We are in the safe path during our pilgrim state while we are in the valley of humiliation.

THE PIOUS CHILD'S RESOLVE.

I have an evil heart within—
A heart that's often prone to sin;
What can a feeble sinner do,
His naughty tempers to subdue?

This will I do: when first I find
An evil thought within my mind,
I'll go to Jesus, and I'll say,
Lord, take this evil thought away.

Does not the name of Jesus mean
One that has power to save from sin?
O Lamb of God, take mine away,
And give me a new heart, I pray.

A BEAR WITH A BEDQUILT.

It is a bedquilt, isn't it, if he always spreads it over himself when he goes to bed? I think so. You never heard of such a bear? I dare say you haven't, because that isn't his whole name. His name is Ant-bear, and I guess you'd think it a good one if you could see him once when he finds a nice ant-hill to work on. You'd think he was made to eat ants—as, indeed, he was.

His fore feet are made with sharp claws, just right to tear open the hard houses of the white ants. And he's as fond of ants as you are of sugar plums—strange as you may think it.

What I call his bedquilt is really his tail. A monstrous gray mat it looks like, large enough to cover him entirely up—and tuck in. Then his nose is half as long as his body, so it can get into the ant-houses, you see. And his tongue is small, and very long, and darts in and out so fast you can hardly see it, snatching up dozens of ants every time.

He has to be quick to get enough of them, for ants are not lazy themselves, you know.

When he lies down he looks droll enough. He tucks his long nose under his arm (suppose your nose was long enough to tuck under your arm!), and then just throws his tail over himself, like a spread. Not an ant can get through that cover, if it wants to.

He looks like a heap of coarse hay. I should think he'd smother himself.

This curious fellow lives in Brazil. Perhaps you'd like to know by what charming and graceful name the wise men call him. I can write it for you, because I found it in the wise books; but I'd like to hear you pronounce it—Myrmecophaga jubata!

I guess we'll leave this name for the books, and call him simply the Ant-bear.

He's a very useful animal. But for him the white ants would clear the country of everything, I should think. They eat every imaginable substance—food, clothes, paper, and even wood. One does not know what they are about, till his chairs and tables fall to pieces, and he finds the inside all eaten out; or on opening a book in his library, he finds every leaf eaten out, and only the covers left standing; or his floor suddenly caves in, and drops the whole family into the cellar, when he finds every timber and board eaten hollow.

They are intolerable pests, and, of course, every one in Brazil feels very friendly to our comical bear with a bedquilt.

He lives, while at home, on ants; but he can eat other things. One that I heard of was kept a pet, and when a few months old would eat several dozen eggs a day, besides some chopped meat.

I wonder how many ants he would have to eat to equal that amount of food!—Independent.

THE CHILD'S OFFERING.

I once heard of a dear little girl who sat one Sunday morning learning a hymn, a part of which was this—

"A flower when offered in the bud,
Is no vain sacrifice."

She said these two lines over and over to herself as if pondering upon their meaning, and then closing her book, she went into the garden and built a little altar of moss, and laid a beautiful rosebud upon it.

Then she knelt, and folding her little hands, she prayed her Father in heaven to accept her sacrifice.

After her return from church she went to see her little altar, and, lo! the moisture of the moss and the warmth of the sun had caused the bud to expand to a lovely rose.

Then the little girl clasped her hands with joy, for she thought that God had caused the bud to burst forth into blossom as a sign that her little offering was accepted.

And must not this simple act of love and faith have been well pleasing in His sight?

He notices our every action, however slight, and reads our every thought.

No act, however simple, by which the smallest child tries to show his love to the dear heavenly Father, is passed by unnoticed.

Dear little ones, offer up to him in the morning of your lives your own hearts, with all their dewy freshness and sweetness, and they will be "no vain sacrifice."—Children's Hour.

Hygiene.

"This is for your Health."

PURE AIR.

A plentiful supply of pure air for breathing is an absolute necessity of healthy life. Air that has once passed through the lungs of a living being is not in a fit condition to be again breathed until it has passed through a renovating process in the outer world. The reason why air thus once used is unfit to support life is that the oxygen, the life-supporting portion of the atmosphere, is exhausted by the act of breathing, and in place of it is generated a great quantity of carbonic acid gas, a deadly poison and a direct enemy to life of all kinds. The same effect is produced by combustion, as for instance by the burning of illuminating gas in a room, one jet of which will vitiate as much air as five persons. As much as fifty cubic feet of air are vitiated by one person in an hour. In a room where a large number of people are collected, especially for any length of time, and where, as is often the case, the additional vitiating influence of combustion both from gas and fuel is also introduced, it also becomes of the utmost importance to secure a rapid and sufficient change of air, so that they who are in the room may not be obliged to breathe over and over again the impure air, more heavily charged with poison at every respiration, and which from want of the proper nourishment for the blood produced a stupor, and if the same conditions are continued, insensibility.

When we feel the want of fresh air in such cases, our practice is to open doors and windows. This secures the end, but the practice is objectionable, because drafts are produced which cause colds and other ailments.

To produce a proper system of ventilation it is necessary to perfect an arrangement which will allow the vitiated air to go out at such places in the room as may be advisable, but in such a manner as to prevent the entrance of cold air or drafts and not to prevent the entrance of heated air necessary for warmth. The room should be warmed and ventilated in all parts alike. In this particular many systems of ventilation fail, for many elaborate arrangements for ventilation affect only the upper part of the room. There are many deleterious gases in a vitiated atmosphere, some of which rise, being lighter than air, and some of which fall by reason of a greater density. These must alike be drawn off, and in a manner that will produce no perceptible current in any part.

The feet of the people in the room should be kept warmer than their heads, their backs should be warmer than their faces, and their bodies should be kept warm while they have plenty of pure air to breathe. These conditions are hard to produce, since there are always two currents to deal with, the inner and the outer, and since heated air always ascends, making the upper, or useless part of the room, the first to be affected by the heat.—Philadelphia Press.

DRESS.—Dress seasonably, substantially, at all seasons of the year, especially at the close of spring and the beginning of the autumn, and in all places where the mornings and evenings are cool enough to induce the slightest sensation of chilliness; these precautions are particularly necessary to children and to all invalids and persons of frail constitutions; it is a good rule for all persons at the seashore. It is far better to feel oppressed with the dress during the few hours of mid-day, than to feel uncomfortably cool all the morning and towards sunset. As to the amount of clothing any one should wear, no one person ought to be a guide for any other. A wise man will dress, on all occasions, at all places, and at all times sufficiently warm to keep away a feeling of chilliness.

HOW TO CURE A COLD.—Contrary to an old theory, a popular writer gives the following on how to manage a cold: Eat nothing but a piece of toast, drink freely of cold water, walk twice a day till you are in a genteel perspiration, and go to bed early.

VIGILATE.

Say, when He cometh will he find us waiting,
Our lamps bright burning ready for our Lord!
Behold he cometh quickly—very quickly—
Bearing with him our wondrous great reward.

Last year our ears could hardly hear his footsteps,
For all our land was filled with war alarms;
On hill and shore where once the storm was raging,
Christ's little children sing triumphant psalms.

See once again the same sweet, holy picture,
On which, long years ago, the angels smiled;
The starry night, the shepherds bending lowly,
The blessed virgin and the royal child.

As he came then, our Prince, our Lord, our Savior,
So will he come again—O, hear his call,
His warning call, and go ye out to meet him,
Christ may come, this Advent—to us all.

No warning note shall sound at his appearing,
The sun will rise just as it did this day;
The mountain-tops shall flush with golden glory,
The morning mists shall melt in light away.

All wait for him; none knoweth of his coming;
It may be eventide or early day;
We only hear his footsteps on the mountains,—
We only know he is not far away.

O, wait and watch, for blessed are those servants
Who yet are faithful, though their Lord delay;
Stand in your place, your lamps all trimmed and burning,
He cometh quickly—christian, watch and pray.

RICH MAN AND LAZARUS.—Luke 16.

IN TWO PARTS.

GEO. THOMSON.

PART 2.

(Concluded.)*

Now, then, let it be borne in mind that the Master had these two classes before him, constituting, with the disciples, his audience. There is no possibility of mistaking as to which class is represented by the rich man and which by the poor man. And now the Savior proceeds to illustrate a reversion of conditions, and so we read "that the beggar died," indicating a change, and that "the rich man also died," indicating a change also in the case of the rich man. Death being used here in its figurative, or parabolic sense, as it is thus frequently used. When a person falls from a high political or social position, we say they are politically or socially dead. But we proceed to examine the result of this change. "The beggar died and was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom." Mark, if you please, the manner in which they are disposed of. After the change, the beggar was carried to Abraham's bosom; that is, the Gentiles, no longer poor, are introduced to the blessings of the Abrahamic promise by the messengers, the apostles and disciples. The fulfillment of this is stated so specifically in his letter to the Galatians, that we here insert it. Gal. 3: 13-19, 29,—"Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us; for it is written, Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree; that the blessing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles through Jesus Christ; that we might receive the promise of the Spirit through faith. Brethren, I speak after the manner of men; though it be but a man's covenant. Yet, if it be confirmed, no man disannulleth or addeth thereto. Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, and to seeds, as of many, but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ. And this I say, that the covenant that was confirmed before of God in Christ, the law, which was four hundred and thirty years after, cannot disannull that it should make the promise of none effect, for if the inheritance be of the law, it is no more of promise, but God gave it to Abraham by promise, wherefore then serveth the law? It was added because of transgressions, till the seed should come [compare Luke 16: 16] to whom the promise was made, ordained by angels [messengers] in the hand of a Mediator. . . . And if ye are Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." Here we discover how the "poor man" (Gentiles) was carried by the angels (messengers) into Abraham's bosom (the Abrahamic promise.) We also discover that the Jewish economy was but a temporary arrangement, "added because of transgressions, till the seed should come." This was the grand truth the Savior was gradually unfolding to them, until Peter, one of the messengers, carried the Gentiles into the Abrahamic promise, in the house of Cornelius; afterward, Paul was accredited as the "Apostle to the Gentiles."

In reference to the "rich man," it will be observed that he was not carried, but was buried. This, no doubt, represents the hopeless condition to which the Jews were subsequently reduced. Here is a prophecy right to the point (Isa. 65: 14, 15)—"Behold my servants shall sing for joy of heart, but ye shall cry for sorrow of heart, and shall howl for vexation of spirit, and ye shall leave your name for a curse unto my chosen, for the Lord God shall slay thee, and call his servants by another name." Here we find the "rich man" dead and buried, and in torment, "crying for sorrow of heart," and howling "for vexation of spirit." O how fearfully have these predictions been verified. And hear the Savior (Luke 13: 35)—"Behold your house is left unto you desolate." The history of that people for eighteen centuries attests the completeness of that desolation. They cried—His blood be upon us, and upon our children. They have reaped the folly of their rashness. Scattered among all nations, without a nationality themselves, everywhere proscribed, frequently banished, everywhere a by-word and reproach, truly the word "torment" expresses their history since their rejection of the Messiah. But the rich man sees Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom. The Jews recognise the prosperity and happiness of the Gentiles, in the Abrahamic faith, and he prays that Lazarus may be sent to him. Observe, he does not pray that he may be taken to Lazarus. With what tenacity the Jew clings to his defunct system; while he would gladly have his sufferings alleviated, and his disabilities removed, he would not come to Christ for that purpose; but the "rich man" is informed that there is between them an impassable gulf. I consider this impassable gulf as illustrating the impossibility of amalgamating the two systems of religion, the Jewish and the Christian. Efforts have been made repeatedly to unite the two together, but, like oil and water, they will not mingle. The attempt was made at Antioch, in the days of the apostles (see Acts 15: 5): "But there rose up certain of the sect of the Pharisees, which believed, saying, That it was needful to circumcise them, and to command them to keep the law of Moses." Here we find this very "rich man," the Pharisee, making the attempt indicated in the parable; but a council of the apostles and church assembled at Jerusalem, and decided that the gulf was impassable. The same effort was made at Galatia, with what success Paul's epistle to that church informs us. Gal. 5: 4—"Whosoever of you are justified by the law are fallen from grace."

Similar attempts have been made in modern times, and are still persisted in, but the result in every case proves that the gulf is impassable. We may put oil and water in the same vessel; we may persist in keeping them there, but to cause them to mix and amalgamate is an impossibility. A living man may be bound to a dead carcass, but the living man can never infuse life into the dead carcass. If they remain united, the dead carcass will kill the living man. Rom. 7: 6—"But now we are delivered from the law, that being dead wherein we were held, that we should serve in newness of spirit, and not in the oldness of the letter."

The five brethren next claim our attention. This is usually considered the most difficult part of the parable to explain. While being satisfied that this part of the parable was significant, and capable of solution, I have never been satisfied with the explanations usually given. It seems clear that in the Savior's day, among the Jews, the distinctions of tribe were lost or absorbed in the distinctions of sect; tribes being seldom mentioned in the New Testament, except when referred to in connection with the genealogy of our Savior, as coming from the tribe of Judah. But we find that the Jews were divided into sects, and continually referred to by those sectarian distinctions. This is an important fact, and may aid us in seeking a solution of the "five brethren." Another important fact in the connection, which should not be overlooked, is, that the Pharisees constituted the Jewish portion of our Savior's audience on this occasion; and, as we have already stated, were the popular sect, and real representatives of the Jewish economy. Now we have ascertained, upon investigation, that there were just five additional sects of Jews in the days of our Savior, as follows:—1. Sadducees; 2. Essenes; 3. Samaritians; 4. Herodians; 5. Hellenists, or Grecians. Of the Sadducees we need not argue, as they are prominently set forth in the New Testament as ranking next to the Pharisees, no doubt, in numbers and influence; but of the other sects we shall have to speak somewhat in detail.

The "Essenes" are not mentioned by name in the New Testament, probably from the fact that they were strict ascetics, and did not appear much in public. The following historical extracts will explain:—

"Essenes, or Esseniams, a sect that arose about two centuries before the birth of Christ, in the quiet country lying on the west side of the Dead Sea. They were strict ascetics, and from them colonies were formed in other parts of Palestine, and they settled not only in remote and solitary districts, but also in the midst of towns and villages. Pliny the Elder (His. Nat. V. 15) seems to have been much struck with their simplicity and purity of life, asserting that they lived 'without wives, without money, in the society of the palm trees.'" (Calmet, Bible Dic.)

"They rose for prayers before sunrise; twice in the day they assembled for meals. Before and after the repast, the priest pronounced prayers. On the Sabbath day they assembled in the synagogue for the reading of the Scripture, and its allegorical explanation, and each of them besides attended to private reading. They had secret, mysterious names for the angels, which they would have thought it unlawful to publish to all." (Dixon's Introduc. to Scrip., Vol. 2, p. 106). Josephus also informs us that because of their purity of life, some were able to foretell future events, and that one of their number predicted to Herod his elevation as king over the Jews, and that after he became thus exalted, he favored the Essenes with peculiar honors.*

The Samaritans next claim our attention. Perhaps some may object to our classifying them with the Jews; but we think the objection invalid. It is true the Samaritans were a mixed race, composed of Jews and other nationalities; yet it is evident that the Jewish element predominated, from the fact that they reverenced the Jewish Scriptures, and maintained the Jewish forms of worship. The following is to the point: "Thus was a temple (on Mount Garizim) raised in opposition to the temple at Jerusalem, and round this temple there were gathered, from time to time, many Jews, who followed the example of Manasses in refusing to submit to the ordinances of the law. Hence, after the building of this new temple, at least, the Samaritans, of foreign origin, were joined by many persons of Jewish extraction, and according to the common opinion, they laid aside from their time the worship of idols. . . . They have ever since wished to be considered true Israelites, who have preserved, in all its purity, the observance of the Mosaic law, and have had an unbroken succession of high priests, descendants in a right line from Phineas, the son of Eleazer, and grandson of Aaron." Dixon's Intro. to Scrip., Vol. 1, p. 89. This we consider sufficient to establish the claim that the Samaritans were a sect of the Jews.

The Herodians are mentioned several times in the New Testament. Matt. 22: 16; Mark 3: 6, and 12: 13. That they differed from the Pharisees and Sadducees, is evident from Mark 8: 15, where the Savior cautions them to beware of the leaven (or doctrine) of Herod.

Lastly, the Hellenists. This sect is not known by this name in the New Testament, but are called "Grecians." Acts 6: 1, and 9: 29. The following, from "Dixon's Introductions to Scriptures, will explain: "It would appear that this name was first given to one section of the Jews, after the formation of the Septuagint version (of the Old Testament), because at Alexandria, and other Grecian cities, where the Jews became dispersed, they learned the Scripture in the synagogues from this version; therefore were they called Hellenists, to distinguish them from the Jews, who read the Scriptures in the synagogue in Hebrew, and had them explained for them in Syro-Chaldaic (which was also called Hebrew), and hence were called, in contradistinction, Hebrew Jews, or Hebrews. The Hellenist Jews adhered to their veneration for the seventy (Septuagint) at least, till the middle of the sixth century of our era; for about the year 550, in the time of the Emperor Justinian, we find that the Hellenists gave great offence to the other Jews, by continuing to use the Septuagint in their synagogues. So great was the excitement in this matter among the Jews, that the dispute was only settled by a constitution of the emperor, which is extant, and in which he decides in favor of the Hellenists." (Vol. 1, p. 99.)

Now we think we have found the "five brethren," and they all had "Moses and the prophets," which was designed as a "schoolmaster" to bring them to Christ; but if they still adhered to the schoolmaster, they could not believe in Christ, even though one rose from the dead, as was evidenced subsequently, when a literal Lazarus was raised from the dead. See John 12: 10, 11.

We now submit to the candid and intelligent everywhere our exposition of the parable, or rather, of the five parables uttered in this discourse. We have endeavored to substantiate every point, by scriptural and other well known facts. In conclusion, we will recapitulate:—

The preacher—Christ. The audience—Pharisees and Gentiles. Text—The Jews murmured, saying, this man receiveth sinners (or Gentiles). Parable No. 1, Lost sheep restored—Gentiles. No. 2, Lost money found—same. No. 3, Prodigal son—same. No. 4, Unjust steward—Jews cut off. No. 5, Rich man and Lazarus—the two classes reversed.

With a prayer that we all may be prepared for the coming of Jesus, the true objective point, when final and eternal destinies shall be administered to the just and the unjust; when all the saints of God, of every land and clime, and every kindred and tongue, shall find a home in the unending kingdom of God, there to praise redeeming love forevermore, I bid my readers farewell. Amen.

LOOKING TO JESUS.

J. W. THOMAS.

"Looking unto Jesus."—Heb. 12: 2.

Those who run the christian race must have an object before them upon which to fix their attention. If we run at random, we shall make crooked work, and fail to obtain the prize. I have read of a company of school boys who, one day, thought they would amuse themselves by playing in the snow. Gathering at the foot of a large oak tree, they concluded to walk across the field in different directions, and see who could make the straightest path; but upon retracing their steps, it was found that only one of the boys had made a straight path. "Well," said the rest to Henry, "How did you do to walk so straight?" Said Henry, "Do you see that tall pine tree yonder? I fixed my eyes on that tree, and did not take them off till I reached the other side." Here was the secret of Henry's success. He had an object before him, and he kept his eyes fixed upon it until he had accomplished his journey.

What says the apostle to those who are commanded to "make straight paths for their feet, lest that which is lame be turned out of the way?" "Wherefore seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus." Ah! this is it. Looking unto Jesus. Here is the secret of success in running the christian race. Fixing our eye on him, and forgetting the things around and behind us, we can "press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

Looking off, unto Jesus. Off from self, off from the world; off from the vanities which surround us; off from the mistakes of false professors; off from everything but Jesus. Fixing the eye on him, how easy it is to run with patience the christian race. Gazing upon him, we find besetting sins dropping off, and ourselves becoming more and more like him. Just as the snow and ice drop from the branches of the forest trees, when the sun pours its scorching rays upon them; so will every evil thought and feeling melt from our hearts, when we stand in the full blaze of Christ's love.

There is a mighty transforming power in a steady look. Whatever we think of the most, and contemplate the longest, that we become the most like. The way then to be holy is to look constantly unto Jesus. Look to his cross, and find fresh motives for a closer walk with God. Look to his example, and admire and imitate his patience and benevolence. Look unto him as he stands before the throne in heaven, lifting up with ceaseless love his intercession in your behalf. In those ancient games the prize was erected upon an eminence at the end of the race course, so that those who run could see it, and be animated by it. Do we not see Jesus waving over the battlements of heaven the crown of glory? Look yonder. See how valuable it is. It is the crown of righteousness.

Looking unto Jesus. How this helps us. In all our conflicts and sorrows, when we are tempted and tried, when we bid farewell to friends, at all times, and in all places, we can look unto Jesus. He cheers us on. "Lo, I am with you alway." "In the world ye shall have tribulation, but be of good cheer, I have overcome the world." Looking unto Jesus.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE HARLOT WOMAN.

J. E. CLARK.

We believe the scarlet-colored beast of Rev. 17, is a symbol of the papal civil power, just prior to its destruction, or the last form of that power. We conclude the scarlet-colored beast of Rev. 17, is a different character (or represents another form of the papal power) from the leopard beast of Rev. 13. The leopard beast rises up out of the sea, and represents Rome papal, or politico-ecclesiastical Rome. It was to that form of the Roman power that the dragon gave his power, seat, and great authority. Power was given to the leopard beast to "continue forty and two months," "and it was given unto him to make war with the saints," etc., after which he goes into captivity. It is said of the scarlet-colored beast that he ascends "out of the bottomless pit," and goes into perdition. The woman that is said to sit upon this beast represents an ecclesiastical power, a corrupt church. At the time John saw her going to judgment, she held "a golden cup in her hand, full of abominations and filthiness of her fornication." Her name is "Mystery, Babylon the great, the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth." And John saw her "drunken with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus." This identifies the power here brought to view. Her cup was "full."

The angel promises to show John the judgment of this harlot woman; but first he describes the beast upon which she is seated. This beast has the same number of heads and horns as the leopard beast (Rev. 13), and of the dragon (Rev. 12). Though the scarlet-colored beast has some points of resemblance with the dragon and the leopard beast, yet it is sufficiently distinct, as above stated; besides, it occupies in its main features an entirely distinct period in prophetic time, though found on the same territory. Its duration is short. There is but little said about him, and he goeth "into perdition." The angel proposes to show John the judgment of the harlot woman, and her judgment must occur this side of the forty and two months leopard-beast reign; for it was during this period she was filling up her cup with her sins, so that at the close of the wilderness state it could be said her cup was "full," she then being drunken with the blood of the saints. Her sins had "reached unto heaven," and God had "remembered her iniquities"; so it was truly said of her by the angel (v. 2), "And the inhabitants of the earth have been made drunk with the wine of her fornication." She had corrupted all nations, and her day of slaughter and of high-handed crimes had now come to an end. God announces by his angel the hour of her judgment.

I understand the period of her judgment occupies a series of years, after which comes her execution. The angel informs John (Rev. 17: 18), "The woman which thou sawest is that great city which reigneth over the kings of the earth." In Rev. 18, she is called "that great city, Babylon"; for "in her was found the blood of prophets and of saints, and of all that were slain upon the earth." This great and prosperous power, which has swayed universal dominion for centuries, which has compelled men to embrace her false doctrines, or die at her hands; this mother of harlots, the great bloody persecutor, is the character to which the angel called John's attention, when he said unto him, "Come hither, I will show unto thee the judgment of the great whore, that sitteth upon many waters." So the angel carried John "away in the Spirit into the wilderness," where he saw this woman going to judgment, seated "upon a scarlet-colored beast." She is all covered with the blood of God's martyred saints. Her cup is full. The language here used is symbolical.

Now God's words are about to be fulfilled upon her in judgment. She is hated by the ten horns (ver. 16), or civil powers. The kingly powers in Europe no longer support her. These ten horns had given their strength and power to the beast, with which she was in league, and which had carried her (v. 7); and they now turn and "eat her flesh, and burn her with fire"—destroy her. The lamentation and mourning over her downfall is recorded in Rev. 18. All this is done under the symbol of a great and prosperous city, suddenly destroyed, and the consternation and terror of such an event. Thus, a full description of the fallen and sad condition of this once prosperous power.

The angel says: "Babylon is fallen, is fallen, and is become the habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird." Rev. 18: 2. This eighteenth chapter gives a particular account of the judgment on Babylon, which is another symbol used to represent this corrupt ecclesiastical compact. This is a special and separate scene, and an angel is represented as coming down from heaven to open and declare the reasons for this terrible judgment. He first announces, "Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen"—epeson, to fall in judgment. She had been tried and condemned, and the sentence is now about to be executed. She has become the habitation of devils—daimoson, deities, idols—"and the hold of every foul spirit." The tempers, dispositions, feelings and affections were foul, like "a cage of every unclean and hateful bird." Detestable, loathsome, like a bird that feeds on carrion, or putrid flesh. What a description! But it answers exactly to Roman Catholic christendom. All can see that "Catholic Europe" is the place of all devils. There are no signs of reform. She grows more blasphemous and wicked. She has spread her corrupt religion every where. Her idolatrous worship can be found among all nations. This is the season announced by the angel for the judgment to be executed on Babylon—"For all nations have drunk of the wine of the wrath of her fornication"; and hence, if she is not destroyed, she will make "all nations" as corrupt as "Catholic Europe." This great city Babylon was once "clothed in fine linen, and purple, and scarlet, and decked with gold and precious stones, and pearls." But "alas! alas!" "in one hour so great riches is come to nought." Then follows the wailing because of her downfall. But God commands the holy prophets and apostles to "rejoice over her." Thus this power is to be brought down to bankruptcy, and to be destroyed. For an angel is represented (v. 21) as casting "a stone, like a great mill-stone" "into the sea, saying, Thus with violence shall that great city Babylon be thrown down, and shall be found no more at all." Next is "heard a great voice of much people in heaven, saying, Alleluia; salvation, and glory, and honor, and power, unto the Lord our God; for true and righteous are his judgments, for he hath judged the great whore which did corrupt the earth with her fornications."

We believe deliverance is at hand. The work of God, in destroying the corrupt power we have been speaking about, is nearly accomplished, and next will come deliverance to God's church, and the establishment of God's everlasting kingdom on the earth.

"Hail, happy day!"

LIVING NEAR THE CROSS.

ADELAIDE POMEROY.

How few realize what a blessed privilege our Savior conferred upon a dying world, when he gave the divine command, "Take up thy cross and follow me." Not follow Peter, nor Paul; neither Felix, nor Herod, nor even Abraham, nor David, but "follow me;" the man of sorrows, the Savior of the world, that where I am ye may be also. It is only by bearing the cross daily that we can attain unto life; and though many times the weakness of the flesh shrinks from the task, yet we may be strengthened by the promise that He will make the yoke easy, and the burden light. No matter how heavy the affliction, nor how deep the sorrow we may be called to pass through, we have the comforting assurance that Jesus knows it all. He has passed through every phase of human suffering; he has been tempted in every point of human endurance, and he can sympathize with us under every trial. He has promised those who trust in him that he will never leave nor forsake them; and though our Father often chastises his children, and at times the cross seems almost unsupportable, yet we must bear in mind that those "whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth," for their good, and the "nearer we can get to the hand that wields the rod, the lighter falls the blow."

It should be a great comfort and consolation to the lovers of Jesus, that he left us such explicit instructions as to the manner in which he would have us follow him; the peculiar duties which are incumbent on every cross-bearer, and the glorious reward which awaits the faithful servant when the Master returns.

There are many who profess to love Jesus, who look with longing eyes on the crown, but who shrink with dread at the sight of the cross; hoping against hope, and looking this way and that, in the fruitless endeavor to find some pleasanter path to heaven than the one our Savior commands us to follow. It is a vain search. Christ has cleared the path through the wilderness of bigotry and superstition, and has set the finger marks along the way so plainly, that he who runs may read. And it is impossible to carry the cross in any other path; for the moment we step from the narrow way, we run against the stumbling blocks of pride, and vanity, and self-conceit, and hosts of others; and the further we go the harder it is to find our way back, and we are soon bewildered in the mazes of worldliness, and the whirl of fashion; and before we are aware of our danger, we are standing on the brink of ruin, whence another step would hurl us to destruction.

Oh, we have need to live nearer the cross. We have need to discipline ourselves with much prayer and watchfulness. We have need to gird ourselves with the whole armor of faith, for never was the enemy more vigilant. We note the signs that tell us his power is soon to be taken from him, and it is very evident he is making the most of what time he has left. Truly,

"We are living, we are dwelling,
In a grand and awful time,
In an age on ages telling,
To be living is sublime."

And if we are living acceptably, and doing our whole duty, and patiently carry the yoke and burden even to the end, it will soon be more than sublime; it will be glorious, heavenly.

Oh, that all who read these lines may feel the importance of following more closely in the footsteps of our blessed Savior. May those who are already laboring under the burden, take hold with a firmer grasp and a strengthened heart; and may those who are wandering from the way, be warned in time, and turn back ere they are lost forever. To-day you may be saved; to-morrow it may be too late. Jesus bids you come to-day; he gives us no promise for to-morrow, "Now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation." Now turn from the evil of your ways and accept of pardon while it is offered to you. To-day he is the pleader; to-morrow he may be the Judge.

"To-day, if you will hear his voice,
Now is the time to make your choice;
Say, will you to Mount Zion go?
Say, will you follow Christ or no?"

"LET BROTHERLY LOVE CONTINUE."

A. N. SEYMOUR.

The important truth set forth in the above text should always be kept prominently before the whole body of Christ, for it is imperatively binding upon every dear brother and sister that has been sealed with the "Holy Spirit of "promise," or that has had "Christ formed within the hope of glory." "Let" is a verb of the imperative mode, and is used in commanding, exhorting, entreating, etc. So we find that God commands, exhorts, entreats, through Christ and Paul, all his law-abiding children, to obey this heaven-ordained injunction. The brotherly love presented in the above emphatic language is the foundation principle of human redemption, and is set forth in the most pointed manner, and in the most glowing colors in 1 Cor. 13: 1-3, which all should carefully read. The absence of this sanctifying influence among the professedly religious world, and a spurious one initiated in its stead, is where thousands will be most sadly disappointed, and where their frail barks will be stranded on this sand bar of everlasting destruction, in the coming day of the Lord Jesus.

The above truth should be pressed home and fastened as a nail in a sure place upon all christian hearts; for it is the vital element to every subject of salvation. This truth should be thoroughly surveyed throughout. Its length, breadth, height, and depth, should be most fully canvassed, and put into practical operation. As we are rapidly approximating the point where we are to change worlds, we should labor with undying energy; an energy that knows no abatement, or compromise, to implant this all-important truth upon all hearts. Any infringement upon this God-given truth by any man, or body of men, defiles the temple of God; and Paul says, "If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are." Now in this world there is no end to sectarianism, or divisionalism, and the spirit is growing with the masses, instead of decreasing; and the child of God, who runs clear of these baneful, bewitching and bewildering influences, must be constantly on the watch-tower with his eyes open, and his intellect sharpened by an unceasing reference to God's word; and then if he stands, he stands only by the grace of God, all swallowed up in his will.

The brotherly love named in this text is a very precious and profitable kind. It has the genuine ring in it. It was wrought out for the true believer through the sufferings of Christ on the cross. Dear reader, do not be deceived or seduced, I pray you, by good words and fair speeches, "for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." If you are controled by a bogus element, called love, you will certainly sow and reap the same. There is no mistaking this conclusion. There are organised secret societies in our land, which have a special regard or fraternal feeling for each other; and, strange to say, there are in these fraternities professedly religious men, and even ministers, giving comfort and support to these unsanctified, worldly combinations. But is the love element in these bodies the love element in our text? Who dare say it is? And then again we have a large class of Spiritists, who club together as spiritual affinities, or lovers, and they are all overwhelmed with zeal and interest in promulgating their new system of religion, which, it is said, is to unravel all mysteries and overthrow all dominant powers, whether religious or political, and establish itself upon their ruins as the only true religion. Well, let me seriously inquire again, Is the love element of this Spiritism the love element of our text? Let candid, good sense answer.

Again, there are a multiplied number of sects and creeds that have cast their anchors in society, all conflicting with each other. There are some six or more kinds of Methodists, about the same number of Baptists, several kinds of Presbyterians, eight or ten kinds of Adventists, three or four kinds of Mormons, and Quakers, etc., etc., to the end of the long unpleasant catalogue. So that the various adherents can, and do say, thank God I am a Methodist; thank God I am a Baptist, Mormon, Spiritist, Quaker, Universalist, etc., etc. By such public acknowledgements, they confess that they cherish the same spirit that Paul so keenly rebuked when he says, "Every one of you saith, I am of Paul, and I am of Apollos, and I of Cephas, and I of Christ"; three for man, and one for Christ. It is about so now. "Are ye not carnal, and walk as men?" Now in all candor, I ask, Can all these elements on exhibition, with the curtains rolled back, before the professed churches and sinful world, be the brotherly love of our text? Were all these contradictory influences shed abroad on the day of Pentecost by the gift of the Holy Ghost, and "written not with ink, but with the Spirit of the living God" upon the "fleshy tables of the heart"? Can it be possible that this is all of God? I answer most emphatically, No, by all means; but all are directly at antipodes with the true element of the text.

The fact is notorious, that the religious world, for a long time, has been rocked, tumbled, and tossed hither and yon, like the mighty waves of the ocean, by these harassing, debilitating, and demoralizing elements, and loaded down with an unmerciful load of human truck, until they have well-nigh lost all vitality and power for doing good to a sinful world. God bless them, and remove the burthen from their over-heavily-laden backs, as speedily as possible raise them up out of this stupefying fog, to once more breathe the sweetness, freshness, and exhilarating freedom of heaven's vitalising air. While such is the deplorable condition of christendom, and while a sin-ruined race is rushing on to the judgment without God and hope, what ought to be done? I would answer, every honest soul should covenant with God faithfully to throw off all man-made religion entirely, and go directly back to the "old paths," and walk in them fearless of consequences; and independent of these superfluities, and under no circumstances allow themselves to be penned up by sectarian aspirants again. Let it die out in all of its multiplied forms and features. Give it no countenance, sanction or support anywhere; for it is certain that all inspiration is against it most pointedly; and as it is one of the most potent war dogs against the Bible, the church of the living God, and the best interest of a perishing world; I say again, let it die out, and be forever buried beneath the dark waves of oblivion.

I fully believe it to be the imperative duty of every precious child of God to take this noble stand firmly, independently, and unite under the grand, central, and heaven-permeating element contained in our text, with our blessed Master at its head, as the author and Captain of our salvation, all christian hearts being knit together as were David's and Jonathan's in a holy bond of love, sympathy, and union, that nothing could sever.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

1 Is it not evident to the most casual observer, that these are times of excessive worldliness? Gain and gayety are the two grand idols of the age. Together they enthral the hearts, absorb the energies, and command the homage of the multitude. Everywhere men are in haste to be rich, and utterly unscrupulous as to the means used to secure the boon. Health is imperilled, physical and mental powers are overtaxed, conscience stifled, character and reputation sacrificed, and most of all to be deplored, the eternal welfare of the soul neglected, in order to gratify a towering ambition, or an insatiable avarice. This spirit is seen in the unseemly scramble for office, in the shameless abuse of power, in the eager pursuit of pleasure, in the prevalence of reckless speculation and grasping selfishness, and in extravagant expenditure of money on costly furniture, needless luxuries and superfluous dress—in the latter instance not only despising christian simplicity, but in many cases outraging all propriety and good taste, and displaying complete disregard to health and comfort, so that homage may be rendered at the shrine of fashion.

This evil saps the very foundations of society, and awakens suspicion and distrust. It often sunders the dearest and tenderest ties, while it perverts and degrades the noblest gifts. It is especially fraught with peril to man's spiritual welfare. Its very essence is forgetfulness of God, and of eternity. Of it comes science without faith, politics without principle, business without conscience, literature without holiness, pleasure without purity, in short, man without God. It invades even the sanctity of the christian church, to tarnish its purity and impair its strength. It produces among professing christians a regard for talent, rather than piety; for costly church edifices, wealthy congregations, and showy forms, rather than the simplicity of Christ, the spirituality of the believer, and the rescue of sinners from eternal perdition. To a christian mind such a spectacle is truly painful. To note its character and effects, and apply its remedy, is the aim of all who desire the true prosperity of our country, and the eternal well-being of souls.

2. Are not these, also, times of wide-spread immorality? This may be inferred from what we have already observed. For where there is excess in worldliness, there will invariably be laxity in morals. If, instead of immutable truth, high-toned principle, and a regard for the general weal, society is governed by time-serving expediency, self-interest, and sensual gratification, then it must become essentially corrupt; evil of every grade must flourish and prevail. Is it not even so in our midst? We appeal to the state of things around us for proof. What do we see? Wickedness in high places and in low places, in legislative halls, and in judicial courts, in stately mansions and in wretched hovels, in educated and refined society, among the ignorant and debased. What do we see? Suicide treading in the steps of murder; drunkenness, profanity, and Sabbath desecration jostling each other; the innocent and unwary decoyed from the path of virtue and honor to a course of infamy and shame; life and property constantly imperilled; and crime following crime in quick and alarming succession. What do we see? Speculation tampering with dishonesty, and bribery catering to theft; the public purse rifled for private or party ends, or for sectarian purposes; the press, designed to be the fount of knowledge, the exponent of truth and the guardian of virtue, too often used to gratify a vitiated taste, or disseminate a vile and godless literature. In view of such scenes the true patriot will mourn, and the christian will take shelter in the pavilion of divine sympathy and care. How to grapple with these evils, and if possible eradicate them, is a great and grave question, well deserving the attention of every christian thinker and philanthropist.—ED.

THE FIRST MAN.

Who was the first man? This is a strange question to ask one who believes the Bible, and is familiar with its teachings. One fact is certain, the Bible recognizes no man upon our earth before the creation of Adam. We are aware that some learned men in science and theology think they have found proof that there were races of men on the earth before the creation of Adam; and some have gone so far as to claim that the Bible favors such an idea. Says Paul: "The first man Adam was made a living soul." 1 Cor. 15: 45. There could be no man before the first; but the first was Adam; and Adam was the one from whom the whole human family originated, as the Bible most plainly teaches. God "made of one blood all nations of men." Acts 17: 26. The life blood of every man who has lived upon our planet had its origin in "the first man Adam." There has been no man created since the creation of Adam. If there were any other men before Adam, why did the Holy Spirit of God teach that Adam was "the first man?" There could be no men before "the first man." And inasmuch as the Bible most positively affirms that Adam was "the first man," if there were men created before him, the Bible record is not true. If the African is a man, as all must admit, then his blood originated in "the first man Adam." The same is true of every other variety of man; because all are "made of one blood." "Adam called his wife's name Eve; because she was the mother of all living." Gen. 3: 20. Then it follows, that there has not been a child upon our earth whose genealogy cannot be traced back to Mother Eve; hence there are no races of men in the world whose ancestors were older than Adam. Any system of theology, or of geology, which assumes that Eve, Adam's wife, was not the first woman, and the "mother of all living," takes the responsibility of denying a plain Bible statement, which is in harmony with the entire sacred Scriptures.

If there were races of men before Adam, how did they get over the flood? Only Noah and his wife, and three sons and their wives, crossed the deluge. The record reads: "And all flesh died that moved upon the earth, both of fowl, and of cattle, and of beast, and of every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth, and every man; all in whose nostrils was the breath of life, of all that was in the dry land died; and every living substance was destroyed which was upon the face of the ground, both man, and cattle, and the creeping things, and the fowl of the heaven; and they were destroyed from the earth; and Noah only remained alive, and they that were with him in the ark." As Noah and his family were all of the antediluvians who remained alive, and came this side of the flood, we can see no chance to trace the origin of the African, or any other race, further back than Noah's time.

The Savior has died to save only the human family—the descendants of "the first man;" hence, if there were men who were not the descendants of Adam, they can have no salvation through Christ; and as there is no "other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved," it follows that they cannot be saved at all, nor have any resurrection. Christ "took on him the seed of Abraham"; or as in the margin "of the seed of Abraham he taketh hold." His human nature came in the lineage from Adam, as declared by Luke, 3; 38, "Jesus . . . was the son of Adam, which was the Son of God." Says Paul: "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." 1 Cor. 15: 22, This shows that none but the descendants of Adam, "the first man," can hope for any resurrection through Christ. But without a resurrection there can be no future life for the dead. Is it true that there are races of men upon earth who cannot be saved through Jesus? Christ taught John to say that the "redeemed" would come from "every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation." Then the people of every tongue are the descendants of "the first man Adam."

We do not believe there is a single geological FACT to show that any man, of any description whatever, ever lived upon this planet before Adam. We are aware that there are geological speculations and opinions to the contrary; but we have yet to learn there is one reliable fact in geology that proves Adam was not "the first man" as the Bible declares.

THE DEATH OF LAZARUS.

In John 11: 1, 3, 4, we read: "Now a certain man was sick, named Lazarus. . . . Therefore his sisters sent unto him (Jesus), saying, Lord, behold he whom thou lovest is sick. When Jesus heard that, he said, This sickness is not unto death, but for the glory of God, that the Son of God might be glorified thereby." After the death of Lazarus Jesus said to his disciples, "Our friend Lazarus sleepeth; but I go, that I may awake him out of sleep. Then said his disciples, Lord, if he sleep, he shall do well. Howbeit Jesus spake of his death; but they thought that he had spoken of taking of rest in sleep. Then said Jesus unto them plainly, Lazarus is dead." John 11: 11-14. This language is very plain, and declares most positively that Lazarus died.

We will now return to the fourth verse, which some think is contradictory: "Jesus said, This sickness is not unto death." Persons who wish to make out a contradiction usually stop with the word "death." Let us look at the whole verse: "Jesus . . . . said, This sickness is not unto death but for the glory of God, that the Son of God might be glorified thereby." In John 10: 10, we read: "The thief cometh not, but for to steal." This last passage is used to show the object for which the thief comes; and that is "to steal." "But" is used in the sense of except, or excepting. So in John 11: 4, the idea expressed is this: "This sickness is not unto death, but," or except, "for the glory of God." How was God glorified by the death of Lazarus; and how was the Son of God glorified? By his subsequent resurrection from the dead. If he had not died, Jesus and his Father could not have been glorified in raising him from the dead. The sickness was "unto death" for that very object, that Jesus might be glorified in raising him up from the power of the grave.

COMFORTING.—In a late article for the Crisis, we find the following in an accompanying note: "The Bible quotations are all accurate; so you need have no trouble in correcting." If all who write for "our paper" would take the same pains to have all the "Bible quotations" "accurate," it would save us much time and labor, that we have to spend in looking up their imperfect quotations in order to correct them. It always grieves us to see incorrect quotations from any book, and especially from the Bible. Whenever a passage is marked with quotation points it should read just as it is in the book. Not a word should be put in or left out. If any are left out, put three or four periods in their place; thus: . . . Will those who write for the Crisis be particular about this.

SR. MARY I. HERRON.—We are saddened to learn that Sr. Herron, wife of the late Editor of the "Young Pilgrim," is quite out of health, and in destitute circumstances with her little family. Will not the friends of Jesus send her means to make her comfortable. Her address is East Somerville, Mass. Friends can also send to the Crisis office, and we will see it forwarded.

☞ WE purpose to keep our readers well posted in all the important news of the day, as connected with the signs of the times; and also any new light that may appear on the time of the coming of Christ. His second advent is evidently very near.

WHY WAS IT PERMITTED?

BRO. GRANT.—I have a question I would like to ask for a friend's sake, and my own, if you will be kind enough to answer it through the Crisis, so I can send him the paper. He believes all men will be saved, and asked this question,—Did God know all things from the beginning? If so, why did he permit sin to enter into the world? He cannot believe God made man to destroy him.

A. A. STILES.

We do not see how any one, who has confidence in the Bible can believe that all men will be saved; when it expressly declares that "all the wicked will he destroy." "Destroy" never means to save.

There is a great difference between foreknowledge and fore-ordination. We do not believe God has fore-ordained whatsoever comes to pass; for in such a case, the man who steals, lies, and murders, could not help doing it; and be but a machine, and not responsible for his acts. God does not give commandments, and then compel men to break them, and punish them for disobedience.

We do not believe God made man for the sake of destroying him; if so he would not have done so much to save him, as he has done. Man must be created as a free agent, otherwise, he could have no moral character; and if a free agent, he must have the power of choice. This the Creator must "permit," or else man could not become a subject for rewards or punishments. Men set a very high estimate on the power of choice. "Liberty" is a charming word in their ears. When a man chooses the road to death instead of life, he cannot blame his Creator. But here is a question for consideration. Was it better to produce the human race, and have millions upon millions saved, and live eternally in the kingdom of God, and have the rest destroyed, than it would have been not to have created man? If any one should say it would have been better not to have created man at the first, than to have so many destroyed, he should find no fault if God puts the wicked back into non-existence where they were before they lived, or where they would have been, if they had not lived at all. He does not wrong them by the act of destruction. If eternal life to the millions of the saved is of more value than non-existence, then all that their life is valued above nothing is so much gain to the universe. It could have been no loss to the Creator if he had never made man, nor the earth on which he lives; but we can conceive that our heavenly Father and his Son will be greatly glorified in saving the numberless hosts of the redeemed by the wonderful plan of salvation.

If we should ask the father who has a family of sons and daughters, who should lose one by death, if he had rather have no children than to lose that one, we think he would not have to wait long for an answer.

Again we say, all that the eternal life of the saved millions is worth above non-existence is so much gain. It certainly could be no gain to any one to perpetuate to all eternity the lives of a mass of wicked men; hence, the Lord says: "All the wicked will he destroy."

☞ All appointments, notices, obituaries, and proper names especially, should be written very plainly, if friends would see them correct in the paper.

"EQUAL RIGHTS PARTY."

There are strange movements at the present day in political circles. There is a general dissatisfaction with the existing state of things, and a loud call for a change. Both continents are awake on the subject, and the Radicals seem determined to do something new. They insist that the time has come to have "a new government." In order to introduce an improved form of government, various associations have been formed, known by such names as: "The National Labor Union," "The Labor Movement;" "The Internationals," "The Working Women's Association," "The New Democracy," and "The Women's Rights Party." It is said there is a good prospect that these various associations are taking steps to form a grand union under the lead of Spiritualism; and that this confederation may be known as the "EQUAL RIGHTS PARTY."

In the "Banner of Light," Nov. 11th, '71, we find an interesting document called "The Preliminary Message to the American Association of Spiritualists." It is from Mrs. Victoria C. Woodhull, their President elect, and was unanimously adopted by the "Board of Trustees of the American Association of Spiritualists." This Board adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That we, as the Board of Trustees, secure the address prepared by our President, and adopt it as an expression of our views, to go before the world as the voice of the American Association of Spiritualists; and that our President be requested to take measures to carry out the plans therein proposed; and, to that end, we hereby pledge her our hearty co-operation and assistance."

Signed by direction of the Board,
HENRY T. CHILD, M. D.

In her address she goes on to say that their Association is (1) "a religious organization. (2) "A political organization." In this new organization it is proposed to pay "more deference to the highest inspirations of the spirit world." This new party "has adopted the significant name of the EQUAL RIGHTS PARTY. Mrs. Woodhull continues:

"We will have our rights. We say no longer, by your leave. We have besought, argued and convinced, but we have failed; and we will not fail.

We will try you just once more. If the very next Congress refuse women all the legitimate results of citizenship; if they, indeed, merely so much as fail by a proper declaratory act to withdraw every obstacle to the most ample exercise of the franchise, then we give, here and now, deliberate notification of what we will do next.

There is one alternative left, and we have resolved on that. This convention is for the purpose of this declaration. As surely as one year passes, from this day, and this right is not fully, frankly and unequivocally considered, we shall proceed to call another convention expressly to frame a new constitution and to erect a new government, complete in all its parts, and to take measures to maintain it as effectually as men do theirs.

If for people to govern themselves is so unimportant a matter as men now assert it to be, they could not justify themselves in interfering. If, on the contrary, it is the important thing we conceive it to be, they can but applaud us for exercising our right. . . .

She further remarks:—"Another great army of progressive reformers, heading obviously in the same direction as the Spiritualists and the Woman's Rights Party, consists of all the segments of the Labor Movement; the National Labor Union, the Internationals, the New Democracy, the Working-women's Associations and the like. Hardly a day passes that I am not waited on by the leaders of one or more of these great industrial and political reform movements, and it is virtually conceded by them that all these parties are destined to be absorbed, at an early day, in the more comprehensive purposes of the Equal Rights Party.

Among the Communists and Internationals, or allied in sympathy with them, are found most of the Socialistic thinkers, most of whom, again, are already allied directly with me, in the views and measures which I am engaged in or propose; and finally, the more progressive members of both the old political parties, and of the church, indicate a growing readiness to concur with this smelting of all the radical elements in one great movement for the reconstruction of society under new auspices and with a New Departure. . . .

"I propose to call to my aid a cabinet of advisers and assistants, from among the ablest men and women in the Spiritualist ranks, and in the ranks of those who will co-operate with us, and to divide the field of the objects which your organization contemplates into distinct Departments and Bureaus; and while co-operating with the Trustees, as a Congress, to address to the Spiritualists at large, from time to time, Messages and Reports from the heads of the different Departments and Bureaus, containing such recommendations as our mutual consultations may suggest, aided, as we hope we shall be, by communications and inspirations from our spirit friends." . . .

"Hundreds who read this address will find in it only a record, with slight modifications, of the recent promptings of their own souls. The last twenty years has been a season of active schooling for the New Departure in all human affairs. Spiritualism itself is only the chief symptom of the ripening of humanity for great events. Thousands of individual agents have been selected by the spirit-world, sometimes notified, though not always, of their functions in the future, and have been carried through uncommon experiences fitting them for the coming crisis. Delicate women have been wrenched from their quiet seclusion in the family, and sent itinerating through the world; or have been placed upon public platforms, and the words to be uttered have been put into their mouths. Strong men, with great business powers, have been stripped of their wealth, defeated in every design, plunged into poverty, and held to the steady purpose of developing their minds into the apprehension of a higher order of truths. Preparations of every kind have been made in millions of directions, seemingly divergent, but now rapidly reconverging upon the common end. The hour of ultimate action is at hand. A new class of men and women will come into the direction of every thing. The spirit of the old is already dead. The spirit of the new is born and breathes, and is already living in the world.

Your enthusiastic acceptance of me, and your election of me as your President, was, in a sense, hardly your act. It was an event prepared you, and to which you were impelled by the superior powers to which both you and I are subject. It was only one step in a series of rapid and astounding events which will, in a marvelously short time, change the entire face of the social world. Many among you will perhaps shrink back, on reflection, from the step you have taken. It may, indeed, commit you to much more than you are as yet deliberately prepared for. But let those who have insight and faith not be dismayed at any amount of recoil and agitation. 'They that are with us are more than they that are against us.' Those who are in the guidance of the world's crisis are competent to the office they have undertaken, and they will not fail. Justice shall be established in the earth even though the heavens should fall."

It is quite evident that Satan is marshaling all his forces for the great battle. If we are not greatly mistaken in the signs of the times, great events are about to open, that will be followed by others still more startling till the coming of the Just One, for whose appearing we are so ardently looking. It is truly sublime to be living in these last days, so near to the time when the dead are to be raised. The night of weeping is nearly past. Soon the morning of glory will dawn, and eternal life will be given to the lovers of Jesus.

TO THE CHURCHES OF CHRIST,
And all whom it may Concern.

This certifies that at a meeting of Brethren A. G. W. Smith, C. S. Sherman, Jas. Wiswell, and John Graham, at the house of Eld. S. G. Mathewson, on the 24th Oct., 1871, Eld. D. T. Taylor, and Sisters B. Mathewson, E. J. Hawkins, and C. Wood, being present, Eld. Taylor, in a spirit of proper christian penitence and peace, has made such apologies to us, and confessions of his sins and wrongs, as are acceptable to the church, and is fully forgiven and recommended to the fellowship of the flock of God.

Witness, } C. S. SHERMAN.
H. MUNGER. } JAMES WISWELL, Deacon.

With pleasure I transmit the above to Brn. Grant and Adams. D. T. T.

As Bro. Taylor has, in a most penitent and christian-like manner, repented of the sins and follies of his past life, and made due confession of the same; I earnestly hope that all christians will, in the same spirit of Christ, forgive, and extend to him the hand of christian fellowship. As rumors have been in circulation that Eld. T. was found guilty of certain grievous sins, not specified in the published charges, and has confessed the same; I deem it my duty, as chairman of the Council, to say that no evidence of any such guilt was brought before us, neither has he made any such confession. J. COUCH.

PREDICTED CALL OF THE GENTILES.

BRO. SHELDON:—Does not James, in Acts 15: 16, 17, teach a call of the Gentiles after the coming of Christ? And does not this prove that there will be probation in the future age? J. E.

REPLY.

Reference is here made to the call of the Gentiles, but not to their call subsequent to the judgment and "reward" of "EVERY MAN" (Matt. 16: 27; Rev. 22: 11), for a call after "every man" has had his "reward" assigned him, would make that assignment useless, or make the call a mere mockery. Let it be understood that "the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels; and then he shall REWARD every man according to his work," and it will readily be seen that every attempt to locate a call of mercy after the coming of the divine Judge, is a repudiation of the judgment; for this judgment involves "every man," and assigns "reward" to "every man." No matter whether the work is accomplished in a shorter or longer time, it begins when the Lord comes, and mercy ends where judgment begins.

Besides this, the origin of James' statement about the predicted call of the Gentiles, was as follows: There had been a reformation among the Gentiles, and converts had been gathered, and this was something new to the Jewish disciples; so a meeting was held to consider the question, and after "much disputing, Peter rose up and said unto them, Ye know how that a good while ago God made choice among us, that the Gentiles by my mouth should hear the word of the gospel, and believe" (v. 7). Then Paul and Barnabas arose and related "what miracles and wonders God had wrought among the Gentiles by them." v. 12. Then James stood up to confirm the position taken by Simon Peter, Paul, and Barnabas, and begins his speech by referring to what Peter had just said: "Simon [or Simon Peter] hath declared how God at the first did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name. And to THIS agree the words of the prophets [that is, the words of the prophets agree with Peter's statement about the call of the Gentiles which commenced under him, and was still going on;] and then quotes a sample of what the prophets have said relating to this same call of the Gentiles]; as it is written, After this [scattering of Israel] I will return [having departed from them at their dispersion], and will build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up; that the residue of men might seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles, upon whom my name is called. . . . Wherefore [or, for which reason] my sentence is, that we trouble not them which from among the Gentiles are turned to God." Acts 15: 14-19.

James quotes this prophecy for the simple purpose of establishing the fact that the call of the Gentiles, then under discussion, and then taking place, was predicted, and that the prediction and Simon Peter's statement were in agreement. In order to do this, he commenced with the prediction of God's return to abandoned Israel, to build again the tabernacle of David, which had been thrown down by Nebuchadnezzar. This tabernacle was set up at their return from Babylonian captivity. The priesthood could then officiate till the antitypical priesthood should be inaugurated, when the Gentiles should call on the Lord. And this last feature of the prophecy was then being fulfilled—and that, too, after the tabernacle of David had been "set up," for no reference is here made to the kingly tabernacle of David (the ouhell), but to the tabernacle of worship (the rookkoh), the same tabernacle referred to by Jeremiah at Jerusalem's overthrow: "He hath violently taken away his tabernacle"—the tabernacle of worship—called "the tabernacle of David," because David pitched the tabernacle for the ark in Jerusalem. "And they brought in the ark of the Lord, and set it in the midst of the tabernacle which David had pitched for it (2 Sam. 6: 17), and it remained till the completion of the temple which David planned for it, which was completed by Solomon, and then it was transferred to the temple, being still recognised as the tabernacle of David till overthrown by king Nebuchadnezzar.

Let it be remembered (1) that this tabernacle of worship was "set up" again after the return from Babylon, thus fulfilling that part of the prophecy; and (2) this tabernacle of worship called "the tabernacle [rookkoh] of David," is not identical with David's kingly palace, for when that is brought to view, another word is used to distinguish it from the rookkoh which is never applied to a kingly palace. The kingly tabernacle which contained David's throne is thus mentioned: "And in mercy shall the throne be established; and he shall sit upon it in truth in the tabernacle [ouhell] of David." This tabernacle contained the throne of David, but the tabernacle referred to in the prophecy quoted by James never contained David's throne; hence to have this tabernacle of worship "set up," does not involve the restoration of David's throne, as some incorrectly suppose. It was "set up," as already shown; and subsequent to this came the call of the Gentiles referred to by James when quoting this prophecy. James was not arguing about events in a future age, when he cited this prophecy to support the position which he was advocating; but he was simply talking about the reformation then going on among the Gentiles, as related by Peter, Barnabas, and Paul; and James simply insists that this prediction was in agreement therewith. "To this agree," etc. Something not to be fulfilled for near two thousand years to come could not "agree" with something then transpiring—for only the fulfillment can "agree" with the prediction, and anything that does "agree" with the prediction is the fulfillment; besides, it would be entirely unreasonable to suppose that the prophet would blindly pass over the great gospel call to the Gentiles in our age, and so clearly see their call in another age. It may be well to read the prophecy referred to by James, with its connection, and notice several points in the prediction.

"Behold, the eyes of the Lord God are upon the sinful kingdom, and I will destroy it from off the face of the earth; saving that I will not utterly destroy the house of Jacob, saith the Lord. For, lo, I will command, and I will sift the house of Israel among all nations, like as corn is sifted in a sieve, yet shall not the least grain fall upon the earth. . . . In that day [after the dispersion of Israel] will I raise up the tabernacle of David that is fallen, and close up the breaches thereof; and I will [raise up his ruins, and I will build it as in the days of old; that they may possess the remnant of Edom, and of all the heathen, which are called by my name [margin—"upon whom my name is called"], saith the Lord that doeth this. Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that the plowman shall overtake the reaper, and the treader of grapes him that soweth seed; and the mountains shall drop sweet wine, and all the hills shall melt. And I will bring again the captivity of my people Israel, and they shall build the waste cities, and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and drink the wine thereof; they shall also make gardens, and eat the fruit of them. And I will plant them upon their land, and they shall no more be pulled up out of their land which I have given them, saith the Lord thy God." Amos 9: 8-15.

1. This scattering took place, and the "kingdom" was obliterated to be "no more till he come whose right it is"; but the house of Jacob was left in existence; they have not since been scattered as a "kingdom," but as a colony.

2. "In that day" of the dispersion of the "kingdom," and not in the day of a subsequent dispersion of a colony, the "tabernacle of David"—"the rookkoh of David"—which never contained David's throne, but was simply a tabernacle of worship, was to be raised up; and it was raised up at the right time to fulfill the prophecy; and then through this typical arrangement men could seek the Lord, till this arrangement was superseded by the antitype. Israel's captivity was to end, and they were to return to their land, rebuild their cities, and enjoy temporal prosperity, and "no more be pulled up out of their land"; that is, during their dispensation, for their claim went no farther; and language equally as strong is often applied to the obsolete appendages of that ceremonial age, as a "perpetual covenant," which was succeeded by the new covenant. And truly they were "no more pulled up out of their land" during the Mosaic age. To put an unlimited construction on this language would be a repudiation of the burning day, for they could not live through the conflagration of the earth; and it would also cheat the saints out of the "new earth," for that is not due till after "the elements shall melt with fervent heat."

3. After this restoration of the tabernacle worship, "all the heathen" were to have a chance to call upon the Lord and be saved. The class called "heathen" in the Old Testament are styled Gentiles in the New Testament. And when the Gentiles began to call upon the Lord, James affirmed that it was in agreement with this prediction, or that the prophecy, so far as this prediction was concerned, was then being realized. The advantage often taken of James' wording—"After this I will return"—to make it appear that it must be fulfilled after the return of Christ from heaven, is simply a rank perversion, for this is not the language of James, but his version of the prophet's language: and the prophet had nothing to say about Christ's return, or Christ's building again the tabernacle of worship, but reference is made to what the Lord Jehovah would do—"I will sift the house of Israel . . . In that day will I [the same I] raise up the tabernacle of David. Christ is not the personage to return, or to do this work. James recognized the fact that the Lord had "departed" from Israel, as he did anciently from king Saul, and that in the same sense he returned to bless them with the restoration of the tabernacle of worship, fulfilled before his day, and saw then fulfilling the promise to the Gentiles. NOTES BY THE WAY.

H. MUNGER.

Having spare time, it may be interesting to some to read sketches of travels, as it is to me. After remaining at home two days from my eastern trip, I started west to No. Adams. Here is the great tunnel in the Hoosic mountain, about three miles and two-thirds through. This is the wonder of America. Think of a twenty foot hole through a mountain, five miles long, in solid rock, twelve hundred feet under ground, with two shafts, or holes, down from the top for air holes. The work is progressing faster than ever before, as the machinery is much better. Six feet a day are dug, by seven hundred hands, at a cost of about $200 per foot. It is a dark, dangerous place to work. Many have been killed in various ways. The blasting with nitro-glycerine is dangerous. Last summer the glycerine was set on fire by lightning two or three miles off, and killed some of the hands. There were two such accidents in June and July.

The church is doing well here, for such hard times. Also at Pownal, Vt. Sister Towsley has been sick four months, and has not preached to them, but is some better now. I had a good time with them. The truth is steadily gaining. Their new Methodist preacher don't fight as the former one did, studying flank movements, but works in harmony.

Next to Hoosic, N. Y., where I had a full house and good attention. The church was revived. The coming conference is expected to do good. I notice the crops are all good. The land in Hoosic, and up through the valley from Eagle Bridge to Hebron, is some of the best for farming I know of, excepting in the far west; and farms are cheap and good. Potatoes were selling at the depots at thirty cents for sixty-five lbs., or twenty-eight cts. per bushel. One acre yields two hundred bushels, and grain in proportion. The land is easy to work, and thirty-five miles east of Troy, N. Y.

Hebron church is still alive. We had a good time with them.

Next to Fort Edward. I had a strange introduction. The house pointed out to me to stop at was across the river, on the island. I called on the man. He refused to keep me. He said he did not like the name, nor my looks, and other hard things; and as I was starting to go out of his nice looking house, supposing I had been directed wrong, or had made a mistake, he got hold of my arm, and stopped me. In a moment a woman came to my rescue, calling me "Bro. Munger," and smilingly invited me into the parlor, when the mystery was revealed. This man was her husband. Knowing I was coming, he treated me in this abrupt way to see of what kind of stuff I was composed, he said. I found him free, and had a good home with him for two days, and a help to the cause, although not a professor of religion. He obtained the Opera House, and circulated the appointment, and got out a large congregation of new hearers, who heard for the first time with marked attention and interest. This is under Bro. Sibley's charge, who preaches to the Sandy Hill church, which I supplied while he went to the Hoosic conference. On coming home, he felt encouraged to see the sudden and unexpected move to get the truth before such a large number of new hearers. This was brought about by the man where I stopped, who hired the house, got out the people, and footed the bills. I preached to them as agreed upon the day before. As strange as this appeared to me, I think God's hand was in it for good, and the brethren think the same. This same Mr. F. got a promise from me to go to Whitehall. He sent up the notice, but not having time to get a suitable place, it was postponed.

Next to Hydeville, Vt., a part of Bro. Mathewson's charge. I preached Wednesday evening. The Baptist preacher was out. We had a good, free time in the Lord. Thursday I visited some five or six State quarries, and witnessed the wonders of getting shingles from the earth. At Castleton saw Bro. D. T. Taylor, who had come on an important errand. After two years suspension and trial of mind, he came and got together as many of the church as he could, and confessed his wrongs with penitence, to the satisfaction of all present, and they all forgave him heartily. The Castleton church stands fast. They have a rock principle for a foundation, and will stand as long as they are united as well as they are now. The congregation and attention were good. Monday I returned home. We are living in strange and eventful times. New things are appearing every day, but as Jesus said, the wicked see no signs.

STILL "MORE GRAVY" WANTED.—I like the idea presented by "Gains" about conference reports being dished up with fewer bones, and more gravy. Allow me to add that if some of the ministering brethren would leave out dry pieces, and fill up with "gravy," it would certainly please the Times' readers better. We don't care what train you took; or to know that you preached to a school or meeting house full at a certain date. Possibly four hundred other Advent ministers did the same thing the same evening; and if every one should report the fact, every time, the Times would be filled with nothing else. We don't care so much about you, as about what the Lord is doing through you. Give us the juicy parts—experience, incidents, new conversions, baptisms, trials and persecutions for the truth's sake, joys and gleams of sunshine, and the like. These are always interesting. In short, write for the whole body, and rigidly prune out all you would not care to read from some other laborer, whom you never saw, nor expect to see, this side of kingdom.

I have made maple sugar some, and I had rather have one spoonful of syrup than a pailful of sap. The pailful may have all the sweet in it, but I cannot drink so much to get it. We want to hear from you all, often; but spare us the details.

In behalf of many, PRISCILLA.

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield Camp-ground, August 23d, 1871, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

BRO. GRANT:—But a few weeks since, I was ignorant of the existence of such a publication as the World's Crisis, and might have remained so for a long time, had not a good brother from Lynn (S. B. Richmond) brought it to my notice. He has furnished me with several numbers, together with a dozen or more of tracts corresponding in sentiment with the Crisis, all of which have awakened an interest in my mind to hear still more of this matter. I am advanced in life (near seventy), but have not lost my interest in the advancement of God's truth. My own perceptions are so benumbed, and my retentive faculties so weakened, that my personal profits may be small; but as I am surrounded by several children and grandchildren, I hope some good may come to them by an investigation of truth, as it is conducted in your publications.

It is true your doctrine of the resurrection is in perfect contrast with the views I have held for many years, which views I have never but once heard disputed; and then by a preacher accounted half deranged, in a school-house in Castile, Genesee Co., N. Y., in 1826; yet as we know errors may sometimes become hoary with age without opposition, it is well to look honestly and earnestly at the objections made to our long-cherished opinions. I am in sentiment a Calvinistic Baptist; have examined, to a limited extent, several of the isms of the times, and with Bible in hand have seen no cause for changing my views. Now, I think, since your publications are so clear and pointed, and your practical sentiments so perfectly accordant with the word of the Lord, we may safely and profitably read and ponder what you have to say.

We like your opposition to Roman Catholicism, Spiritualism, gambling for the support of gospel truth, and the thousand and one wicked and nonsensical things introduced into churches, Sabbath schools, and library books, and trashy, frothy publications, to catch the ungodly with "guile," and draw them into our churches. We highly approve, also, your opinion of Free Masonry. Your manner of handling Universalism is the best we ever saw. How clearly it is shown that the sentiments can claim no pre-eminence above Atheism or Paganism. Now if your opposition to "immortal-soulism" is based on Jehovah's truth, as it may be, down comes Romanism, Spiritualism, and some other dangerous isms, to the honor of truth, the confusion of its enemies, and the joy of every christian heart.

Extracts from Letters.

BRO. P. G. BOWMAN writes from Lydia, S. C., Oct. 31st, 1871:—"On Sabbath last we had a day of peace and joy. I preached at two places about nine miles apart, in the open air both times,—in the morning on redemption, and in the afternoon on holiness of heart and life, with their glorious and ultimate results. The blessed Jesus was with us. Three brethren and two sisters united with us. May the Lord abundantly bless and keep them unto eternal life. Notwithstanding our trials, the truth as it is in the Bible is spreading. I have a pressing call about forty miles distant, by one of the wealthiest, most intelligent and influential gentlemen in this section, to visit him and preach in his neighborhood, stating he believes I have been suspended from the ministry for preaching the pure doctrines of the Scriptures. I have sent an appointment for the third Sabbath in the coming month. I will carry with me a number of works for distribution, and may the good Lord make my visit a blessing to the entire community. If we were only able to build two or three houses of worship, we could accomplish a great deal in a short time; but as it is, I shall have to preach through the winter in school and private houses, which will not contain the congregations. I still hope and pray for help from abroad. Surely one hundred brethren will second Bro. Mackee's proposition, and send to the Board of Missions $25 each, which would establish us here."

BRO. O. B. QUIMBY, Lisbon, N. H., writes, Oct. 27th, 1871:—"Having looked the ground over some, and heard considerable talk on the discussion, I am well pleased with the result thus far. Our chairman for the afternoon and his wife have become about as strong in the doctrine as any we have in the place. I have been with them this evening talking the matter over. They are very much interested, and anxious you should come back here. They are not professors. Bro. Stubbs, the Methodist minister here, said he had learned one thing, that it was best to keep cool in discussion. I think he is not the only one that has learned something by the discussion. I heard one man say last night that it was the greatest thing ever got up in Lisbon. The Bible is discussed in every shop, and in the street, and the people are asking a general interest. The friends of truth are well pleased with the turn it is taking."

BRO. J. TREVOR, Lockport, N. Y., writes Nov. 6th, 1871:—"Sister Stoddard is now settled with us. She has preached four times, very much to our satisfaction, and I hope to the glory of God. Some outsiders, who have heard her, say she has not her peer in any pulpit in this city, and I think so too. She has this advantage, however, that the isms of the day do not clog her in upholding the truth. The Lord bless her."

THE ELEMENTS.—Something is the matter with the elements. Storms, hurricanes, electrical tornadoes, tidal waves, typhoons, earthquakes and all the frightful phenomena which the air and the water can exhibit, are continually desolating the earth, sweeping over the fairest fields, rising up against the coast and harbors, and spreading desolation in all directions. Nor have these demonstrations respected geographical limits or political boundaries. Not only the fervid regions of the equator, long accustomed to elemental strife, but the most respectable and conservative regions, the most staid and quiet portions of the globe, have felt them. Not only are the Western States swept by tornadoes, but sober Vermont has been shaken by an earthquake, and Massachusetts has submitted to something that was very nearly a tidal wave. And even Rhode Island, which refused to submit to changes in her political law, could not resist the convulsions of the elements, and an earthquake, moderate and modest as became our territorial pretensions, just stirred us up a fortnight ago.

Various explanations are made of all this. Some think that great changes in the interior of the terraqueous globe are going on, and that these are responded to by convulsions upon the surface; others hold that great climatic changes, owing to the procession of the equinoxes and other astronomical gyrations that have gone on slowly, but with remarkable regularity, from the time when the morning stars sang together, have come to a crisis. It takes 25,868 years to bring about a complete revolution of the equinoctial points, and during the progress there must be some ugly places to pass, when a disturbance of the elements may naturally be looked for.

Others take a theological view of the matter, and think that the devil has been let loose generally. This theory derives support from convulsions in the moral, social and political world, the Tammany frauds, the Ku-klux outrages, the incendiary fires, the Fenian raids, and the long catalogue of crimes with which the people have grown so familiar that they hardly notice them. There are others, incredulous sort of people, who scout at all the signs and wonders, and who hold that the same sort of thing has been going on always; only that it is but lately that the world has had the telegraph to transmit it, and the newspapers to carry the story to every fireside. We make no account of such infidels. They are old fogy sort of people, who don't believe in spiritualism, condurango, or woman's rights, or much of anything else that has developed since the flood.—Providence Journal.

Obituaries.

HOWE. Died in Cambria, Mich., Oct. 19th, 1871, Margaret Howe, wife of Daniel Howe, of Cambria, Hillsdale Co., Mich., aged forty-one years.

After some months of very severe suffering with a cancer on her breast, she had it cut out once, and then eat out the second time by cancer plasters. Sr. Howe and husband had been deeply interested in our preaching for a year or more, and sincerely loved the blessed hope. Sr. Howe never publicly confessed Christ, but a few months previous to her death sought the Lord with all her heart and found peace. She was an affectionate wife, a kind mother, a good neighbor, and was highly esteemed by all. The funeral services were very largely attended Oct. 22d, at the Wesleyan Methodist church. Sermon by the writer, from Rev. 14: 13,—"Blessed are the dead," etc.

A. N. SEYMOUR.

HARRINGTON. Died in Pitcher, N. Y., Oct. 15th, 1871, Bro. James H. Harrington, aged fifty-eight years.

Our much beloved brother has fallen at his post. He has been set apart for years to his Master's service, a modern Job in this section. For the past two years his sufferings have been extreme, but a murmur has not passed his lips. Frequently would he say, "The Lord does all things well; he knows what is best for me. I am not able to work: all I can do is to glorify God. Brethren, that is all my business. He wants to save me." Thus, in the full assurance of faith, this brother has fallen, but he sleeps in Jesus, in whom he had put all his trust. Words of counsel were spoken by Eld. E. A. Poole, from Psalm 12: 1,—"Help, Lord; for the godly man ceaseth."

F. CORKER.

CAMPBELL. Died in Hollis, Me., Nov. 1st, 1871, William Campbell, aged fifty-six years.

The subject of this notice first had his attention called to our faith in a conversation with the writer last June. At that time he was without Christ. Being a man of more than ordinary intelligence, he soon became very much interested in the investigation of the views I had presented to him. He continued his investigations until he not only embraced them as truth, but also sought, and as he confidently believed, found the Lord. At his request the writer attended the funeral, and discoursed from Job 14: 14. C. H. SWEET.

SHERMAN. Died at West Woodstock, Ct., Oct. 2d, 1871, of ulceration of the bowels, Cynthia, wife of Robert A. Sherman, aged fifty-eight years.

Sister Sherman was for many years a devoted christian, and an ardent lover of the truths that distinguish us as a people. Her last moments were peaceful and happy. The funeral services were conducted by Eld. A. Morse, assisted by Elders I. B. Potter and P. S. Butler.

C. H. SWEET.

WILLOUGHBY. Died at Holderness, N. H., Oct. 17th, 1871, our mother, Jemima Willoughby, aged sixty-seven years, five months, and twenty-seven days.

Again death has entered our family, and taken our remaining parent. We have laid them side by side, to await the bright morning of the resurrection. May God sanctify this bereavement to the good of the mourning friends, and help to prepare us to meet them in a world where death will never come. Words of comfort from Bro. J. B. Brown, from Rev. 14: 13. H. C. WILLOUGHBY.

HAGGETT. Fell asleep in Jesus, in Standish, Me., Sept. 17th, 1871, Sr. Patience B. Haggett, wife of Bro. William Haggett, aged seventy-eight years.

Rest in the silent grave,
All free from care and pain,
Till Christ shall ope the tomb,
And bid thee live again.

Sr. Haggett had been a devoted christian for many years. She died with the bright hope of a better resurrection. May the Lord bless and comfort the mourning ones. Sermon by the writer, from Hosea 13: 14. J. T. JORDAN.

DOWNS. Died in Fairhaven, Ct., Aug. 14th, 1871, Medora A. Downs, daughter of John and Georgiana Downs, aged one year and ten days.

Funeral services at the house of Bro. W. Ford, in Southington, by the writer. Sleep on, little one, till Jesus bids thee arise. D. HITCHCOCK.

PEASE. Died in Hartford, Conn., Oct. 27th, Bro. Orson R. Pease, aged seventeen years and ten months.

During his sickness for three years, the grace of Christ so clearly shone out day by day as to convince all around him that he had been with Jesus, and learned of him. "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his."

E. OWEN.

BLANCHARD. Died in North Adams, Mass., June 18th, 1871, Flora Edith, only daughter of Isaac and Flora Blanchard, aged ten months and twenty-five days.

The funeral discourse was preached by the writer, from Luke 18: 16. MRS. E. A. WARREN.

FINCH. Fell asleep in Jesus, at Milford, Mass., Nov. 2nd, 1871, George A., son of Bro. M. L. Finch, aged fifteen years, seven months, and seventeen days.

Words of comfort were spoken by Bro. J. Scott, of Boston, from 1 Cor. 15th chapter.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

LONDON, Nov. 30. [New York Herald Special.] In Berlin, yesterday, Prince Gortschakoff had a long private interview with the Emperor William, and another with Count Bismarck to-day. The subject of these interviews is unknown.

President Thiers refuses to modify his ultimatum to England regarding the commercial treaty.

Five Cabinet councils were held during the past week, the foreign policy of the Government being the warm subject of discussion. The reorganization of the army is progressing actively, regiments are being brought up to the war standard, and there is an immense accumulation of war material.

A conference of diplomats will be held at Dresden at an early day to devise precautionary measures against the International Society.

PARIS, Nov. 11. Prince de Chigi Albani, Papal Nuncio, had a long interview with Count de Remusat, Minister of Foreign Affairs, yesterday. The Constitutionel of to-day says they discussed the forthcoming protest of the Pope, in which the Holy Father will declare himself sole King of Rome, and will announce his determination to hold no official intercourse with any foreign representatives at court or near the person of Victor Emanuel.

Henri Rochefort has sent the following letter to Albert Jolly: "Allow me, dear defender, to offer you an edition of the Lanterne, formerly supposed to have yielded me so much and which now costs me so dear. What most distresses me is calumnies of all sorts, hurled against not only me but my family and even my children. It is thought that I see vague hopes of the resurrection of the dynasty, thought to be dead, and which I was reported to have buried. I see sprouting in all directions, literary and political mushrooms, which nothing but a Bonapartist dunghill could engender. I daily expect to hear that Napoleon III., returning to his rightful domain, has proclaimed an amnesty, and that I after being condemned by a Republic, shall experience the still more terrible doom of pardon by the Empire."

THE CZAR has been occupied in reorganizing his army, while all the world has been looking at his neighbors further west, and now presents a view of the result, which is indeed formidable. The Russian army can now be relied upon to turn out more than a million and a half of men, fully armed, drilled and equipped, with scores of Cossack regiments in addition. Back of this is a reserve of about a million men, who may be called into the field in case of necessity; and, in fact, the Czar has solved the problem of making for his use a nation of soldiers in an incredibly short time. The artillery, too, has been augmented by a thousand pieces, and every arm of the service put in strong condition. While this work has been going on, Russia has continued its policy of absorbing the independent Khanates bordering on its territory, and has added millions to its population by extending its boundaries. The quiet way in which the Czar strenghtens his empire both within and without, is admirable to look at from a distance, but the huge army which he has now secured at his control may be less pleasant for the consideration of his neighbors.

WHAT NAPOLEON SAYS:—"So long as people shall not have been regularly consulted, no decision of the Chamber can prevent me from being the legitimate sovereign of France. Many officers have written to me to ask if they should place themselves at the disposition of the present government, and if I consented to release them from their oath. I have answered that the question being plainly stated between order on the one hand, and the most frightful anarchy on the other, they should not hesitate to serve their country; but that I could not release them from their oath until, by a direct vote, the entire nation shall have chosen a definitive government. Thus you see, like the man in Horace, I wrap myself in my right and my resignation. Strong in my own conscience, I restrain the impatience of some, and despise the treachery and the insult of others. I observe, with a certain degree of satisfaction, that the republic is forced to act with severity against the very men who, during twenty-three years, attacked my government, and to adopt many of the measures which I regarded as indispensable to the maintainance of order; but, as I am not a man of party, this feeling gives place in my heart to another and a stronger—the pain with which I see the destinies of France delivered over to the hazard of events, the fury of factions, the weakness of the men in power, and the exactions of the foreigner."

DOMESTIC.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 13, '71. Gen. W. T. Clarke, one of the Republican candidates for Congress in Texas, and the Texas Republicans now in the city, report the perpetration of the greatest outrages in that State at the late election. The Democrats, disguised, rode in open day through little towns and settlements, burning school-houses and churches, and whipping teachers. In counties where this work of violence was done in advance the voting passed off quietly as death, few Republicans voting. In counties where there are large Republican majorities, as for example, in Grimes, in General Clarke's district, a ballot-box for white voters was opened and had its desired effect. When all the white men had voted, and seventeen more than had registered, a riot was commenced, the Registrar was driven away, and the election was broken up, thus depriving one thousand colored men of the privilege of voting. In Washington county the same course was adopted, and in order that the Governor might not be informed of the proceedings, two miles of the telegraph wires were torn down and carried away. In Limestone county seven hundred armed Democrats turned out in companies under command of ex-Confederate officers, took possession of the town of Groesbeck, put the officers of election under guard, forced them to open the polls under their direction and voted as they wanted to. One negro was killed as a warning to that class of people. Of eight hundred colored voters in Limestone only eight voted. The roads were patrolled and guarded, and the national mail coaches were stopped and examined. The messengers dispatched to the Governor were captured, until at length a fearless young lady, Miss Bessie Houston, managed to get through the lines and report the condition of things to the Governor. It is not surprising, therefore, that Gov. Davis declared martial law in that county.

Concord, N. H., Nov. 9. One of the most remarkable displays of northern lights that has been witnessed in this section for years was seen between six and seven o'clock this evening. The sky in the north, northeast and northwest seemed to be a vast sheet of deep crimson fire, extending nearly to the zenith. At first the shooting flames were nearly white, but rapidly changed to the hue of a September sunset or the lurid light of a great conflagration. It was a grand spectacle, and will long be remembered by all who saw it.

ABOUT CHICAGO.—One thousand people live in the twelve frame buildings at the corner of Elizabeth and Madison streets.

A row of wooden shanties on Michigan avenue bears the ambitious designation, "The Inter-Oceanic Block."

The first brick house in old Chicago was built by Mr. Kinzie, in 1835. It was situated on the corner of Cass and Michigan streets. The first brick building in course of construction since the great fire is on the same site, and is being built for J. J. Jones, who thus sets an example of genuine pluck and enterprise.

The Chicago Evening Mail says that lumber and building materials of all kinds have been pouring into that city since the fire, and the supply is now about adequate to the demand. The weather has been exceedingly favorable to out-door operations, and new structures are still rapidly springing up. One hundred and four permits for brick and stone buildings on the burnt district were granted in the first two weeks, and some six hundred for temporary structures. Immense piles of rubbish have already been carted away, and the streets are becoming more passable. An open winter will witness astonishing improvements.

By way of correcting the impression that seems to have gone forth that "Chicago has been burned up" the Evening Journal says: "While 18,000 houses have been swept away, 42,000 yet remain; and while 92,000 persons have been rendered homeless, an immense city of 245,000 persons has not been disturbed. The whole of the immense area of the west division, with its miles of dwelling-houses, stores, school-houses, churches and manufactories are almost intact, while upon the south side a great many fine residences yet remain, with splendid business blocks, churches and innumerable manufacturing establishments."

A NEW GOLD FIELD.—Our Minnesota exchanges represent that the excitement at Winnepeg over the recent gold discoveries is on the increase. Numerous specimens of gold dust, nuggets and gold-bearing quartz have been brought into Fort Garry from the region around Lake Shabondwaan. Hundreds of people are swarming to that locality, and the latest reports are of the most extravagant character, representing the region as richer in gold deposits than California or Australia. Laborers employed on the highways and on government works have given up work and emigrated in a body to the gold fields. Some color is given to the reports from the fact that the region is included in a belt rich in mineral deposits. The early explorers through the British possessions discovered gold and silver in this locality. The region is but a short distance from Silver Islet, in Lake Superior, one of the richest silver regions in the world, and only one hundred and fifty miles distant from the copper mines of Ontonagon. The Lake is about four hundred miles from Fort Garry, and is about ten miles in length by two or three in width. It is hardly likely that the liveliest Fenian raid could drive the Winnepegians from their new found wealth, which they are "prospecting," "placing," and excavating with the utmost enthusiasm.—Boston Journal.

FALL OF A METEOR IN THE DAY TIME.—About half-past four o'clock yesterday afternoon a couple of ladies who were driving from South Easton to North Bridgewater were considerably alarmed by the falling of a meteor, which struck the earth alongside their carriage. It had the appearance of a ball of fire, was about as large as a medium-sized cannon ball, and descended in an oblique direction. On striking the earth it rolled along faster than the carriage was going, leaving behind a train of fire nearly two feet in length. As it shot forward it gradually disappeared and in a few seconds nothing could be seen to indicate its presence. The horse was frightened at the phenomenon and shied toward the roadside, but no damage resulted.

THE MORMON TRIALS.—A Salt Lake City dispatch says that, notwithstanding the grand jury and officers of the court have kept their secrets wonderfully well, it is now ascertained that indictments against Brigham Young, Mayor Wells and Hosea Stout for murder were not found on the sole testimony of Bill Hickman, the so-called "destroying angel." It is known that on the trial witnesses will be produced for the prosecution, not implicated in the charge at all, who will testify to all Hickman has sworn to, and perhaps more.

☞ An exchange says that among the latest to throw away Christianity and embrace Spiritualism, was Elder ——, who lives not a thousand miles from Waterford. The Elder had a daughter who struggled hard against the influence, but finally gave up, and became a writing medium. One day, while wrestling hard with the spirit, she prayed that if Spiritualism was God's work it might be manifested; if not, that the name of its parent might be given. Imagine her surprise on recovering from her trance, to find written out in brief, "The Devil."

☞ A man resides in Fond-du-Lac, Wis., who fifteen years ago, was one of the most promising young men in his native state of Maine, but contracted intemperate habits. He married a fine young woman, came west, and settled in his present town. He kept on drinking and soon became a confirmed drunkard. Now comes the saddest story of all. Their child is cross-eyed, tongue-tied and half-witted, and in walking staggers from side to side just as a drunken man does.

Quarterly Conference.

It is high time for a call for a session of the Mass. Advent Conference. If any church would like the meeting held in their place the first week in Jan., 1872, let us know it, and we will issue a call for the same. Let us hear soon.

L. BOUTELL, for the Committee.

Vermont Conference.

The Second Quarterly Conference of the Advent Christian Church, for the State of Vermont, will be held at East Roxbury, Vt., commencing Wednesday evening, Dec. 6th, 1871, and continuing till Dec. 9th. Come, brethren in the ministry, young and old, from throughout the State, and let us prepare for a united effort in the Redeemer's cause. We hope also to have every church represented by a delegate. The Lord is in this place graciously winning souls to Christ. Come prepared to work with God. H. F. C.

New York A. C. Conference.

The second quarterly session of the New York Advent Christian Conference, for the current year (D. V.), will be held with the church in the city of Rochester, commencing Thursday evening, Dec. 7th, and holding over the following Sunday. Immediate attention is asked to the appointment of delegates, and to the taking of the quarterly collections by the various churches. Our extended mission work with the tents this season has left a debt of over ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY DOLLARS upon us, that should be lifted at once, lest the mission preachers suffer this winter for lack of summer wages.

Dear brethren, come up again to the feast. Bring in your tithes and offerings. And while you open your treasures to the work, open your hearts to the Lord for the prosperity of Zion, and for the coming of Israel's King. The opening discourse will be given by Bro. Milton R. Miles.

D. COGSWELL, President.
WM. E. BROWN, Secretary.

Maine Mission Agency.

At our last annual State Conference, I was appointed to travel, and solicit and collect subscriptions and donations for the "Maine Mission and Tract Fund." I can devote but a part of the time to that work, as I go preaching through the State. I therefore appoint Eld. J. A. Libby to act in my stead, in the northern and western part of the State. He will call on you for aid in this mission work. Come, brethren, sisters, children and friends, you can all become members of this Mission Society, and give to help spread the truth.

I. C. WELLCOME.

Protracted Meeting.

The Lord willing, there will be a protracted meeting at the Denett school-house, in Bowdoin, commencing Thursday evening, Nov. 23d, and continue over Sunday. Will Bro. C. Good, H. S. Mitchell, and H. D. Reed come and help preach the word? May God bless the effort put forth for this meeting. For the Brethren,

I. N. THOMPSON.

Notice.

At our last quarterly meeting, there being no request for the next meeting, it was left to me to ascertain the desired place. As it is our annual meeting, and officers are to be appointed for the ensuing year, it should be held in some central place, easy of access to all interested. Any church desiring the next quarterly meeting will please correspond with me at South Killingly, Ct.

E. BELLOWS.

Notice.

Elder James H. Whitmore has accepted a unanimous call from the Rochester Advent Christian Church to become its Pastor, and will enter upon his pastorial labors about Dec. 1st, 1871. Preaching brethren, who desire to send appointments for Rochester, will please correspond with him from that date before sending their appointments.

N. M'CULLOCK.

Protracted Meeting.

The Lord willing, there will be a meeting at Milton Mills, N. H., to commence Sunday, Nov. 26th, and continue through the week, over the next Sunday, and longer if it seems to be duty.

GEO. W. BROWN, of So. Elliot.
JOHN C. SHOREY.

Notice.

The first Quarterly Meeting of the A. C. Conference of Northern Pa. and Southern New York, will be held at Westfield, Tioga Co., Pa., commencing Friday evening, Dec. 15th, to continue over the Sunday following. All are invited.

B. C. and M. R. R. half fare. Purchase regular tickets to Concord. Purchase conference tickets at Concord for Manchester, and receive free return passes at the meeting (good from Concord) signed by J. Couch.

These annual meetings for the past few years have been the very richest seasons of christian devotion that have been enjoyed in the State. It is hoped that all who can will avail themselves of the privilege of attending this convocation of the lovers of Jesus' appearing in the old Granite State. Let every church be represented by delegates or letter. It is expected that every minister who is a member of the conference will be present or send a letter. O ye faithful in Christ, while the shadows of the judgment are gathering around us, and the incipient wail of the last day woes begin to startle the slumbering multitudes, let us rally to strengthen ourselves in christian union, and lift our united voices in warning to save our perishing friends.

The church in Manchester extends a hearty invitation to all to come, and will do all in its power for their comfort and accommodation.

J. COUCH, President.

Springfield Camp-ground.

To those who have buildings on the Springfield Camp-ground:—I find the houses nearly all open, as usual; and I have found a man who will move into Sr. Holden's house. They have no children, but will need something done to make it comfortable for winter, and I have let him move in to-day. The buildings are all shut up, and a man on the ground to keep them shut; and I just ask the owners of buildings to send me in what they think it is worth to them to know there is a man on the ground to take care of their buildings. This I have done on my own responsibility, as the committee have no funds in the treasury. The only way is to call for contributions. Act as you think best. Direct to HIRAM MUNGER, Chicopee Falls, Mass.

Notice.

The Alton Bay Campmeeting Committee are requested to meet at Manchester (Granite Hall), Friday, Nov. 17th, at nine o'clock A. M.

J. COUCH.

Explanatory.

Not having heard from some of our principal churches in New Hampshire, in response to my request, I wish to say that the sole object of getting the information embraced in the notice is, to furnish the W. A. C. P. Association with some statistics relative to the N. H. Conference, to be published in the "Advent Year Book," which will be out about the first of December.

All Advent churches in New Hampshire sending me the information stated in the notice, will be mentioned in the forthcoming Advent Year Book.

A. W. SIBLEY, Secretary N. H. A. C. Conf.

A Request.

Will the clerks of the various Advent churches in Massachusetts, that are in sympathy with the Mass. A. C. Conference, please send to the undersigned, as soon as convenient, the number of members belonging to their respective churches? Also, will those who worship in chapels of their own please say so? By complying with the above request, a favor will be conferred upon the cause at large. C. E. BARNES, Salem, Mass.

Notice.

The Lord willing, there will be a protracted meeting at the Free Baptist Chapel, in South Wayne, Me., commencing Thursday evening, Nov. 16th, to continue over Sunday, and perhaps longer. Brethren and sisters from surrounding towns are invited to come and help in the work of God. We ask the prayers of God's children in behalf of this meeting. Brs. H. B. Sevey, Levi Rhodes, and others, are expected to be present to preach the word. For the Brethren,

WM. H. DOUGHTY.

Notice.

Myself and wife are making arrangemets to travel, and preach the word of life more extensively the coming winter than usual. The preliminaries of the great day of the Lord are so manifest at the present time, we are more than anxious to do all that we can for the salvation of a perishing world; and would say to brethren and friends in Michigan, Northern Ohio, and Indiana, that if any desire series of meetings in their localities, please inform us by letter at Reading, Mich.

A. N. & M. A. SEYMOUR.

THE BEAUTIFUL LAND.

B. M. FREEMAN.

I am journeying on to a beautiful land,
Where the weary will ever find rest;
Where the saints, robed in white, with Jesus shall stand,
In the home of the pure and the blest.

The prophets of old looked forth to that land,
The martyrs by faith saw their home;
In deserts they wandered, a sad pilgrim band,
Believing their rest was to come.

The roses of Sharon shall bloom in that land,
The fir-trees of Lebanon grow;
None but those who are washed in the blood of the Lamb,
Its glories and beauties can know.

But the fairest of all is the King of that land,
Who died that his subjects might live;
He died to redeem them from sin and from pain,
To redeem them from death and the grave.

Not a grave will be found in that beautiful land,
Not a mourner to weep o'er the tomb,
For the presence of God and the light of the Lamb
Shall dispel every shadow of gloom.

Saint John saw in vision that beautiful land,
He saw the redeemed of the Lord
In the city of gold, a glorified band,
Who were washed and made white by his blood.

Come, sinner, and start for that beautiful land,
Why will you its pleasures forego?
Though your sins be as scarlet, the blood of the Lamb
Can wash them as white as the snow.

LETTER FROM CALIFORNIA.

TO THE CRISIS:—Mindful of my voluntary promise to send you an account of the first meeting of the Advent Society in their (to them) new church, on Mission St., nearly opposite the new Mint building, between Fifth and Sixth Sts.,—I sit down to write, though out of the humor of composition of any sort.

It is a plain, unpretending building, as you might expect. Its front is immediately upon the street, and the vestibule is only three or four feet wide—i. e., from the entrance door—by, perhaps, ten or twelve feet long. I do not know the dimensions of the building, but can give an estimated idea of its seating capacity. There are now seats placed for one hundred and fifty persons, on the floor of the house. The place could be made comfortable for three hundred persons, by seats on the side of the wall aisle, in addition to additional pew-benches reaching directly back to the doors. The gallery at the front, over the entrance, will contain seats for one hundred persons. The entire inside has evidently been subject to recent renovation—whitewashing and painting, and looks clean and cheery. Forty-five persons were present at the informal re-dedication. Eld. Reed officiated. He alluded in dedicatory phrase to the new habitation in his opening prayer.

During the preaching I noticed that the room has a bad echo, a constant ringing response to the speaker's words. This will be remedied, to a certain degree, when the audiences are larger. The sound of the rolling of the street cars, in front of the church, occasionally interrupted the definite hearing and understanding of the speaker's words. There is opportunity for good ventilation, the building being as yet free to the sun-light on either side, east and west. (It faces north.) And whoever officiated as sexton had the good sense to pull down all the windows from the top; so that it was not from bad air that I came very near going to sleep during the sermon. It was announced that Eld. Howell was preaching at Vallejo for the day.

This end of the earth is keeping up a full average, agreeable to the prediction of Paul, for the "last days." More and more wicked. More and more false and delusive preaching. Almost every thief and liar and adulterer, now-a-days, in this country, who is "intelligent," is confident that he or she will live forever; it may be at once entering on a state of bliss at death; it may possibly be that there is a little gentle moonshine discipline to be easily endured by their immaterial, uncompounded, invisible, immortal nothings, which constitute their real selves, before they become princes in heaven. And this doctrine is taught in many churches. And true logic from the preaching in almost all the churches runs to the same conclusion. So there is nothing new under this head in this climate.

There is much inquiry as to the probabilities of a second visit from Elder Grant, which I cannot answer direct; and there is also much congratulation over the agreement-to-come of Elder Fassett. C.

AUTUMN.

A. L. ADAMS.

"We all do fade as a leaf."—ISAIAH.

The autumnal season is peculiarly rich in solemnity to the thoughtful mind. These melancholy days are full of instruction; full of warnings; full of sermons preached by God through nature to a dying world. How quickly the seasons pass! So man passeth rapidly away to the tomb. The dying foliage and weeping winds come to remind us that we, too, are swiftly journeying to the grave. In the falling of the dry withered leaf, we may see a striking representation of our own decay and return to dust, for we, too, are mortal, and we, toot must die, but not without hope. Who can tell what a day may bring forth? Who can say that before the leaves shall fade again, he will not have faded too? Who can say that his heart, now warm and active, shall not be cold in death before another spring time? Who can pierce the thick darkness of the future and fix his dying day?

Would you enjoy the teachings of these autumnal scenes to the full, then wander out alone into the forest, and gather a variety of leaves, and study them closely. If you linger until the light of day is extinguished, the scene will be heightened. Take a seat under some veteran tree, and view the luminary of night, surrounded by her starry family, proudly traversing the heavens. All is silent save the fall of a leaf, and the transient breathing of the wild wind among the branches. At your feet the gurgling brook reflects the heavens above. Now a fleecy cloud, and now a lone star sails by. Now all is dark, and you are lost in thought; instantaneously the moonlight flashes out from behind a fleeting cloud, and you are lost in wonder. In this human desert you may find divine teachers. O the grandeur of such a night scene! The rich beauty and worth, language is powerless to express. It may be felt, but not told.—By all things in nature as well as in revelation, we are reminded that time is short, and admonished to be up and doing. My dear friend, can you not see that,—

"There is a tongue in every leaf—
A voice in every rill;
A voice that speaketh everywhere—
In flood and fire, through earth and air—
A tongue that's never still!
'Tis the great Spirit wide diffused
Through every thing we see,
That with our spirits communeth,
Of things mysterious—life and death,
Time and eternity."

WEEPING AND JOY.

WM. KELLAWAY.

"Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning." Ps. 30: 5.

(Concluded.)

IV. Joy cometh in the morning. Joy is composed of pleasant sensations and comfortable feeling, expressed by singing or some other mode of delight. And such a day cometh. Joy cometh because in that day—

(1) The foes who beset, worried, and injured us, shall have been destroyed. The wicked are the enemies of the righteous, and it is written of them, "All the wicked will he destroy." The devil shall also be killed; for Christ shall destroy death, and "him that had the power of death, that is, the devil." The ensanguined and bloody field of conflict shall present us with our foes all ashes under the soles of our feet.

(2) We shall rejoice because wickedness shall be no more. David prayed, under the direction of the Spirit, "Let the wickedness of the wicked come to an end." When the sinner shall be destroyed out of the earth, then sin shall cease. Evil cannot dwell in Thy presence. So David's prayer shall be answered; for the wickedness of the wicked shall be ended. The unclean shall not walk in the highway of holiness, and "thou shalt diligently consider his place, and it shall not be." No drunkard, liar, swearer, covetous nor lustful men shall live there, and our hearts shall be glad when the mystery of sin shall be finished.

(3) We shall rejoice because we shall be perfected wholly. Then every Adamic imperfection shall be forgotten. We shall be changed into the likeness of Jesus. Mortal ills and infirmities shall be swallowed up of life, eternal life, with its fulness of perfection, beauty, freshness, and glory. As Jesus is, so shall we be. "In the beauties of holiness, from the womb [advent?] of the morning, we shall have the dew of our youth." "As we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly." Every thought of our hearts shall then be subjected to Christ. Every organ, ligament, artery, member, of our persons, shall have been brought into full obedience to Christ by the resurrection change.

"There we shall see his face,
And never, never sin."

We shall be perfected in nature, and have every root of bitterness torn up and scorched beneath the sun of righteousness at the change time, when God shall make of earthen vessels spiritual bodies. That is the refining time—that the day when the gold shall be dispossessed of all its dross. Then out of the crucible of the grave, or out of the hand of Almighty power, shall the saints come, fit to deck the home of the blessed—the verdant, fruitful, joyous new heavens and earth—made meet for the inheritance of the saints.

(4) We shall rejoice because we shall lose no more loved ones. There shall be no death there. There shall be no moan of the dying heard "in the sweet by-and-by," "on that beautiful shore." No coffins there. No undertakers there. No funeral sermons there. No waving plumes on the creeping hearse nodding their curled heads in the celestial air. No processions for the dead there. No burial services. No graves or church-yards with stone-marked departed ones. No memorials kept of the dead, for there shall be no more death. Eternal life breathes there its never-failing breath. Everlasting existence is secured for all the blest.

"Where life cannot fail,
And death cannot sever;
Christians with Christ shall be,
Soon, and forever."

A poet has said of that time, state, and land,

"Eye hath not seen it, my gentle boy,
Ear hath not heard its deep notes of joy;
Dreams cannot picture a world so fair,
Sorrow and death may not enter there.
Time doth not breathe on its fragrant bloom,
Far beyond the cloud, and beyond the tomb,
It is there—it is there, my child."

"Life—life eternal" shall hold the winds there, and never shall it allow the pestilence to gauntly walk, or destruction to wantonly waste. The baneful breath of disease shall not be wafted there. Thank God, no!

(5) We shall rejoice because there shall be no sad cases there. Often, in the walks of life, we alight on the sad. The throbbing heart, the quivering lip, the tear-dimmed eye, pump our feelings to the surface. Said one, "The sight of my eye affecteth my heart." But we look, and look, and look in vain, for a case of sorrow there. There shall be no more sorrow, "neither shall any inhabitant say, I am sick." No child shall cry, "My head! my head!" We shall have no more use for sympathy. Our hearts shall no longer bleed for the woes of others. There shall be no more crying, and we shall not need to weep tears of condolence and sympathy.

(6) We shall rejoice because Christ shall dwell with us and we with him. Said Jesus, before he left the world, to his troubled and sorrowful disciples, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, that ye shall weep and lament, but the world shall rejoice; and ye shall be sorrowful, but your sorrow shall be turned into joy. A woman when she is in travail hath sorrow, because her hour is come; but as soon as she is delivered of the child, she remembereth no more the anguish, for joy that a man is born into the world. And ye now therefore have sorrow, but I will see you again, and your heart shall rejoice, and your joy no man taketh from you." Yes, when the true Head comes, then shall fulness of joy sway every power of every believing soul. Blessed thought!

This is the record of the saved—"And they sung as it were a new song." Why do they sing? Because joy, the joy of the Lord, fills their hearts. I hope to join the saintly choir. I trust my now stammering tongue, when unloosed from the fetters of mortality, or the passiveness of the grave, shall swell the song that gives to God, and our own adorable Master, Jesus, praise and honor and glory and power. O look at the saved; how rejoiced they are! What songs they sing! How the light of happiness sparkles in each eye! How their fingers pass over the strings of the heaven-constructed harps! What a sunny radiance spreads over the cheeks of the redeemed! How their anthems roll and spread and widen and rise, and increase in volume and sweetness, till the whole creation echoes it, and the world is deluged with praise! How the saints glory and shine and glisten, like the dear Savior himself on the mount of transfiguration. Happy day! I hope to be there.

"And when in scenes of glory,
I join the new, new song,
'T will be the old, old story,
That I have loved so long."

William Kellaway, by the grace of God, through Christ, expects to dwell in the presence of God, in whose presence there is fulness of joy, and at whose right hand there are pleasures forevermore. All nature catches the thrill of joy in that morning. It groans now. It heaves with under-currents of fire. It is often torn by the storm, devastated by the tempest, convulsed by the earthquake; but in that morning the land shall rest quietly. The hills shall leap for joy. The fields shall clap their hands in an ecstasy of delight. The dumb brute shall look the joy of which it is capable, and "the time of the singing of birds is come." The river of the water of life shall bubble and dance along in its blessed flow in its proper channel, chattering music and pattering praise to God with every motion. "The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them, and the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose. It shall blossom abundantly, and rejoice even with joy and singing; the glory of Lebanon shall be given unto it, the excellency of Carmel and Sharon." O joy! joy! come on! come on! Take large steps. Speed thee at lightning pace over the "little-while" road that separates us from Thee.

My God, when shall the morning come? When shall the earth be laved with the fragrant breezes and odors of joy? When shall its sore bosom be balmed with the gladness and rest of heaven, and the whole creation graced with the immediate presence of its blessed Owner? Come, Lord Jesus! Bring joy. We are joyful in hope, and rejoice in hope; but we pant for the joyfulness of possession, for the gladness of a world full of joy, filled and yet not inebriated with the blessed treasures of God's own joy.

Then shall "the ransomed of the Lord . . . return, and come to Zion with songs, and everlasting joy upon their heads; they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away." Hark! can you hear a groan? Not one. Is there a wet eye? Nay, for God's great, soft, fatherly hand has passed over every eye, and wiped the tears off all faces. He also has dried up the fountains of sorrow, and there will be an eternal sorrow drought. The waters of joy shall not fail forever from those springs. Blessed be God, the heart-healer!

V. "The night is far spent, the day is at hand." "The last order of things has arrived—the last stage in the history of the church has come." "Far spent"—think of that. Its hours are nearly all gone. O what a river of tears has been drawn by heartless, ungodly men from those who worked righteousness. But not many more, my Lord, shall drop. Stay their fall, O Lord. Right early banish them. This night is far spent; it is but a moment long for the saints to weep. Into the lower glass of the past from the higher built glass of the present, sink the last segments of time; and soon, as the "signs of the times" tell us, He will be here. Messiah shall come, and morning begin. There is a "good time coming" for those who turned "from idols to serve the living and true God, and to wait for his Son from heaven." They shall laugh a ringing laugh of joy soon, as they shout victory over conquered death. And when within thy gates, O Jerusalem, the feet of the saints shall stand, what tear of pain shall ever be known by them? Thy golden streets shall never, no, never be burdened with a tear drop. "Jerusalem the golden" cannot be desecrated, or invaded, or visited, or afflicted, with any thing so foreign to its God and itself as a pearly tear from eyes red and swollen with grief. Nay! O nay. Forever nay! shall the porter say to the tear that would try for admittance through the pearly gates. Hold on, then, a little while. Let not impatience possess your hearts. Wait, though it is hard to wait. Restrain complaint that you may not enter this moment. Hold on with firmness, for the joys of the Lord are yours, and it is only a question of time with the trusting soul. The inheritance is certain, therefore let us wait God's time; for sure am I that soon the plaudit of our Master shall greet our ravished ear, as his voice shall chime in heaven this praise and welcome,—"Well done, good and faithful servant!" "Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

"Then we'll rise, we'll rise, we'll rise,
And go to meet him in the clouds."

VI. The other side. Whose? The sinner's side. When the sun pours his glory on one side of the world, there is darkness on the other. So in spiritual things. "Joy is sown for the upright." God is the saints' exceeding joy. They desire Jerusalem above their chief earthly joy; but to the wicked the day of the Lord shall be a day of despair, most horrible; tears most distressing; pains most racking and fatal; terror most panical. The day of the Lord, which "is near and hasteth greatly," shall be "a day of wrath, a day of trouble and distress, a day of wasteness and desolation, a day of darkness and gloominess, a day of clouds and thick darkness." O sinner! what a terrible array! What a fear-inspiring catalogue! In that day, instead of laughing, they shall cry, even the mighty man, the man mighty in his infidelity, mighty in his own wickedness, mighty in his own strength, shall be like a little child, and "cry there bitterly." Among those consigned to the Gehenna fire there shall be "weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth." They shall cry, "Too late!" They shall cry to rocks that cannot hear them. "What will you do in the solemn day?" What can you? Would you be prepared for the day of judgment? Would you escape the many sorrows that shall be to the wicked? Would you be among those who weep now, but shall come bearing precious sheaves with them, and gathering fruit to life everlasting? Is this your desire? Do you wish to have righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost now?

Then learn about the kingdom of God. Receive it as a little child. Mourn your past sin. And says Jesus to comfort you, "Blessed are they that mourn; for they shall be comforted." You shall be comforted. Serve the Lord Jesus Christ; continue in his word, and so in his joy. And when "steps up to heaven" shall appear through the clouds, and Jesus shall come down, you shall meet him, and rejoice with exceeding great joy, being admitted by him into the glorious city of God.

But, O sinner, if you turn away from the word of wisdom, despise counsel, and the pains of death shall get hold on you, you shall find trouble and sorrow; and to crown all, the "second death" shall be your doom; for "the wages of sin is death." We would have you join us in the "new earth bright." We would see you in the ranks of the redeemed. We would delight to have you obtain salvation with eternal glory. We linger with you in entreaty. Encircling your waist with hearts and arms of love, we say, Come, come away to the joys of our "building of God," from the woes of earth. Come away to the "land of pure delight"; from the creature pleasures of time. Obey Christ, and when he asks for you to give an account to him, you will be able to give in your report with joy, instead of being abashed with shame in his blessed presence.

Unconverted reader, I may never meet you in print again; but ponder what I have said, and God give you wisdom to choose aright.

Christian brother, sister, friend, fellow-soldier and pilgrim, we are one. Joy is ours. We will rejoice. We will be glad. We will have faith. We will be hopeful. Bear our burdens. Carry our crosses. Go after Jesus. Follow him right into the glory. Strive to bless others. Endeavor to feel like God, who will have all men to be saved, and to come to a knowledge of the truth. Adieu, till I meet you again. And God grant we may soon "receive the promise." "The time of the promise draws nigh fulfillment." But when will the last day come?

"When shall we meet again?
Meet ne'er to sever?
When shall peace wreath her chain
Round us forever?
Our hearts will ne'er repose,
Safe from each blast that blows,
In this dark vale of woes,
Never—no, never!

Home to the new earth bright,
Take us, dear Savior,
May we all there unite,
Happy forever!
Where kindred spirits dwell,
There may our music swell,
And time our joys dispel
Never—no, never.

Soon shall we meet again,
Meet ne'er to sever;
Soon shall peace wreathe her chain
Round us forever;
Our hearts will then repose
Secure from fears or woes;
Our songs of praise shall close
Never,—no, never."

Fairhaven, Mass.

A SHORT SERMON.

D. PERHAM.

"A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another."—JOHN 13: 34.

In the very next verse we are told, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." In Lev. 19: 18, the Lord says, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." In Rom. 13: 10. we are informed that "love worketh no ill to his neighbor." So, then, if any person will wrong his neighbor, he does not love him, but shows a principle of hatred or revenge. And if those who profess to be the followers of the dear and lovely Savior still manifest a disposition of coldness towards any brother or sister in the church, they must be destitute of the spirit of Christ, and very much in need of the great and noble principle of charity, which comes from the great fountain of love—the Holy Ghost. We know, according to God's holy word, that there is no compromise to be made between love and hatred, and between friendship and revenge, and Christ and Belial. Peter exhorts us to "love one another with a pure heart fervently." It seems to me that if a band of brethren were bound together by the strong bonds of love, they would be very careful not to grieve one of their number; and if they found that any member was grieved, they would hunt up that grieved member and try in a kind and tender manner to heal the wound.

The fact in the case is, that the professed followers of Jesus are too much in the world, and their minds are too much taken up with the fashions of the present age. Brethren and sisters in the church ought to be tender-hearted and kind towards each other, and they should always give each other a kind and pleasant reception. In Eph. 5: 2, we are told that we must "walk in love, as Christ also hath loved us, and hath given himself for us." Do we have any such love to the brethren as that? Do we follow the good Shepherd, according to the pattern drawn by him? Look at Matt. 18: 10, where he tells us to "take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones, for . . . their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven. For the Son of man is come to save that which was lost."

Dear brethren and sisters, have you got enough of that highest and most noble christian grace—"love"—in your hearts, to lead you to join your efforts with Jesus to save the lost sheep of the house of Israel? I mean those who have strayed away from the church, for some cause or other, and perhaps have been wounded in their feelings. Go, dear brethren, and hunt them up. Take the sweet spirit of Christ with you, and show to them the fruits of love, and take them by the hand, and lead them back to Christ. How much is said in the New Testament Scriptures about that wonderful christian grace called love, or charity. I often struggle in prayer before the throne of grace, that my dear Father would fill my heart with his love, and give me the lovely and tender spirit of Jesus, so that I might be led in the right way continually. I know it would be almost impossible for me to tell my feelings, and tell how much I love God and the dear Savior; and also his precious words of truth. I have to read God's word in tears, and sing his praises in tears, and pray in tears, while my heart overflows with love to him. Love is defined as an "affectionate regard for another." Then, of course, love to God will draw us near to God, and will draw us to the throne of grace. It will draw the brethren and sisters together in the bonds of union; and it will have a powerful effect on the purse-strings, and on the pocket book, when we hear of a poor, afflicted, and sick brother or sister on the bed of languishing. It will draw upon the pocket book to help the poor preachers, who labor to spread the truth among the people; and to help the widows and orphans of preachers, whose families are left destitute.

Brethren, I am afraid that we are all too destitute of the love of God in our hearts. May the good Lord help us all to get right, and keep right, till Jesus comes. Amen.

Vernon, Vt.

BONES AND MEAT.—Rev. John Newton once made a visit to a very distinguished preacher in London. The man had a great reputation as a dialetic teacher, and Newton heard him in the multitude of his distinctions so logically and analytically laid down. When the discourse was finished, the preacher came to him, shook him cordially by the hand, and said—

"Well, Mr. Newton, how did you like the distinctions that I made."

"Why, sir, I liked them very well; but I perceive that you forgot one main one that lies at the bottom of them all."

Pray, sir, what was that?"

"Why, sir, the distinction between bones and meat."

RESPECTABLE SELFISHNESS.—George Macdonald says; "One thing is clear to me, that no indulgence of passion destroys the spiritual nature so much as respectable selfishness."

OUR DUTY.

FRANK M. DUDLEY.

Concerning the duty of those who are looking for the advent of the Messiah, tell me, is your daily walk and conversation such that they, who do not realize the fearful condition of the world, can point you out as one who believes just what you advocate?

Are you warning a sinful generation to flee from the wrath to come? Are you living a humble, christian life, devoting your time, talents and means to promote a growth of christianity in your locality?

Are you following the injunction of the blessed Savior, to "watch and pray," praying for a sinful world, for the church, and for his appearing?

Are you earnestly striving to serve your Master in the way he has pointed out, obeying his divine behests in every particular?

And lastly, do you feel confident that, should he appear just now, you could welcome him with outstretched arms, and conscientiously claim the precious gift which he will bestow upon those who love his appearing?

If we are devoted, forgiving, and humble, weeping with those who weep, and rejoicing with those who have an abiding hope in his promise of immortality when he does come, we are doing well.

Dear friends, let us be faithful, be earnest and prayerful, so that, when he comes to make up his jewels, we shall not be among that number whom he will utterly destroy. We are looking for our Savior. Let us so live that they who are careless and unconcerned will know that we believe what we advocate. I know of no better way to reach the hearts of the cold and lukewarm, than to live a humble and devoted life, be consistent, help the sick and afflicted, and converse with those who show the least inclination to hear the glorious tidings. Let us never lose an opportunity to do good.

"We shall not have to labor long, Redemption draweth nigh."

What a sublime theme! What a glorious hope! What a beautiful world we shall inherit! No more sin, temptation, or death. Sorrow, pain and tears will all be banished. Love and endless joy remain for us, if we only do our duty. Let us pray for each other, that we may hold out faithful. May God, our Father, hasten the joyful day, and may we all be prepared when it comes.

Holton, Ind.

LINES.

MRS. W. R. TOWSLEY.

That wicked men will never rise,
I've heard some people say;
That when they die, and go to dust,
They have paid the penalty.

They now have suffered for their sins,
And in the tomb remain;
And Jesus will not call them back
Unto this life again.

Well, then, I ask if this be true,
How is it that we must,
Who are cleansed from sin in Jesus' blood,
Die and return to dust?

And must we suffer for our sins
After they are forgiven,
By Jesus who atones for them,
By him who lives in heaven?

Our little ones, they too must die,
Now for whose sins have they to suffer?
Why must they pay the penalty?
Is it for their father, or their mother?

If wicked people for their sins
Must unto dust return,
For that was all that God required
Of Adam to become;

Then christians had not ought to die
After they are forgiven,
But, Enoch and Elijah like,
Should go right up to heaven.

And little ones who never have
A single sin committed,
The most of all, I think that they
Surely should be pitied.

They ought to have a right to choose,
Before they are condemned
To die for what they have not done,
And come to such an end.

But hark! says one, that is not it;
The penalty is not to die,
But to remain in death's shade
To all, to all eternity.

Well, then, we say, let God be true,
But every man a liar;
And if that is the penalty,
His truth we will admire.

Now to the word and testimony,
If, according to that we do not speak,
No light is us will there be any,
Nor will we find the truth we seek.

Now when the Lord had man created,
In the garden he did him place,
Also the woman, and then told them
Of that one tree they should not taste.

Now if thou eatest of that tree,
Dying, thou shalt surely die;
The penalty is plain, you see,
We can't get round it if we try.

"The soul that sinneth it shall die,"
Not be dead, as our teachers say;
Now to this truth don't shut your eye,
Lest God on you his wrath display.

If after the flesh ye live, says Paul,
Ye all shall surely die;
But through the Spirit, if we all
These deeds do mortify;

Then we all shall surely live,
And sons of God we 'll be,
And joint heirs, too, with Christ the Lord,
To all eternity.

The punishment for sin is death,
Our friends do now exclaim,
And death is to be dead, they say,
And never live again.

But we have shown so plain, we think,
That it is death to die,
That no one need mistake the fact,
Nor dare the truth deny.

Now if the position is correct,
And the punishment (for sin) is to be death,
And that punishment eternal is,
Then no resurrection can be had.

Then only those who are translated,
And thus the penalty escape,
Can ever eternal life inherit,
Although they die for Jesus' sake.

For upon all men death hath passed,
For in Adam all have sinned;
And all will perish then at last,
And Christ hath died in vain.

THE MAN WHO THOUGHT HE NEVER PRAYED.

The Rev. Mr. Kilpin passed a very profane man, and having omitted to rebuke him, he awaited him in the morning in the same place. When he approached, Mr. Kilpin said:

"Good morning, my friend; you are the person I have been waiting for."

"O, sir," said the man, "you are mistaken, I think."

"I do not know you, but I saw you last night when you were going home from work, and I have been waiting some time to see you."

"Sir, you are mistaken; it could not have been me. I never saw you in my life before, that I know of."

"Well, my friend," said Mr. Kilpin, "I heard you pray last night."

"Now I assure you that you are mistaken; I never prayed in all my life."

"O!" said Mr. Kilpin, "if God had answered your prayer last night, you had not been seen here this morning. I heard you pray that God would destroy your eyes and ruin your soul."

The man turned pale, and trembling said:

"Do you call that prayer? I did, I did."

"Well, then, my errand this morning is to request you from this moment to pray as fervently for your salvation as you have done for damnation; and may God in mercy hear your prayer."

The man from that time became an attendant on Mr. Kilpin's ministry, and it resulted in his early conversion to God.

THE TRUE PHILOSOPHY.—Two gardeners had their crops of peas killed by the frost, one of whom, who had fretted greatly and grumbled at the loss, visiting his neighbor some time after, was astonished to see another fine crop growing, and inquired how it could be.

"These are what I sowed while you were fretting," was the reply.

"Why, don't you fret?"

"Yes, but I put it off till I have repaired the mischief."

"Why, then there's no need to fret at all."

"True, that's the reason I put it off."

THE REMEMBERED FALSEHOOD.

"Father, sister Lizzie called me a dunce."

"Fo, I didn't, Katie."

"Yes, she did, father. She said I was a dunce because I couldn't arrange my flowers like hers."

"Lizzie, I never knew you to tell me a falsehood; and though I should be sorry to know my little girl was so rude to her sister, I could forgive her. Tell me the truth, now; I will not punish you. Did you call Katie a dunce, Lizzie?"

"No, father; I did not." But Lizzie did not look up cheerfully into her father's eyes, but hid her face in the flowers she had been gathering, until it was almost concealed by the sweetwilliams and roses.

"I believe you, Lizzie," said her father. But he sighed; for he was afraid still that all was not right. The pleasant walk to Elmwood was saddened; and they all returned in silence to their home. Mr.——— seemed soon to forget that they had ever taken it, and little Katie never to think of it again.

But Lizzie well remembered it. Whenever she took the beautiful walk to Elmwood, she was silent and gloomy.

The merry little rill as it glided along, the robins in the thickets, the very flowers in her path, all seemed whispering, "Lizzie, you have told a lie," and she did not love them as she had before.

Often, too, in the quiet evenings, their mother would tell them stories; and some of them they loved very much. Joseph, with his coat of many colors, little Samuel, David and Goliah, they never wearied of. But there was one that Lizzie did not like. It was the history of Ananias and Sapphira, who told a lie, and fell down dead in a moment.

On a pleasant Sabbath, nearly two years after the incident above mentioned, Mrs.——— was telling them of heaven,—the beautiful home which God has prepared for all that love and obey him. She told them of the "great white throne," of the "river of life," of the golden streets and pearly gates, and, above all, that Jesus was always there. Lizzie was listening with the deepest attention, and her mother went on: "There will be no sorrow there, no suffering or pain. Children will always be good and lovely; none can enter there who quarrel or fight, and none that 'love and make a lie.'"

Lizzie could not bear this, but, springing from her chair, ran up stairs, and, locking the door of her little room behind her, fell on her knees, and prayed to God that He would forgive her sin, and would help her to confess it all to her father.

Rising from her knees, she determined, before she slept, to ask her father's forgiveness, and tell him how she had suffered by concealing her sin so long. She was just beginning to write so as to be understood; and, as she was a very timid child, she thought it would be easier to tell him so than with her lips. So she seated herself at the window, and on a slip of paper, wrote,—

"Father, I suppose you have forgotten all about a walk to Elmwood Katie and I took with you a long while ago. I called her a dunce, then; and when you asked me about it, I told a lie, and said I did not. O, father, I am so sorry! And I have asked God to forgive me; and I think He has. Won't you, father, forgive your little Lizzie?"

The scrap of paper was all bedewed with her tears, and more were added from her father's eyes. They were not tears of sorrow, but of joy, that his child, after so long a time had passed, should remember and confess her sin; for he knew then it was blotted out from the book of God's remembrance. 1 John 1: 9. —Early Days.

THE PRINCESS WITH A FIERY TEMPER.

There is an island in the Atlantic Ocean called Ascension Island. It contains a lofty rock which rises to a great height. The islanders say that a great chief once lived near this rock, and that he married a princess who had been spoiled during her childhood by being permitted to have her own way in everything. This indulgence had made her so impatient that she flew into a violent passion if her smallest wishes were not gratified.

One day, as the legend tells, she wished for the head of a certain fish. For some unknown reason her husband refused to give it to her. In a moment her passion kindled like gunpowder touched by a spark. In a tumult of rage she seized her little babe, bound it to her shoulders, rushed like a maniac to the top of the high rock, walked backward over its edge, and with her innocent child was dashed to pieces on the beach below.

How foolish! Yes, she was foolish; but how much less so is that boy or girl who flies into a rage when refused the gratification of some little whim? When those dark eyes flash angry fires, those rosy cheeks burn, those red lips swell, those little hands dash the hat to the ground, tear off the apron, or throw dirt at playmate and nurse, is not their owner both foolish and wicked? Mark me, my passionate child, it was by indulging in such "tantrums" when a girl that the chieftain's wife lost all her power of self-control, and it is from such beginnings that those violent acts grow of which you read almost daily in the newspapers.

When you hear of one man killing another in a passion, you may be sure that the passion of the murderer was never held in with bit and bridle when he was a boy. If, therefore, you do not intend to let your temper carry you into crime, with the power of a wild horse by and by, you had better bit and bridle it now. Put the bit of conscience upon it, impressing yourself with the sinfulness of a bad temper. For a bridle insert a prayer, "O Lord, help me to govern my temper!" Then, when your will is crossed, pull on the bit with the bridle by silently breathing the prayer, and he who loves children will give you strength. Your temper will be held in, and by being held in it will soon grow weaker and weaker, until you will be its master instead of its slave. What a noble victory that will be! Isn't it worth striving for?—Sel. by S. Tenney.

Hygiene.

"This is for your Health."

CARE OF THE SICK.

In all acute diseases the body and mind of the patient should have rest and freedom from all care or anxiety.

When the disease is attended with great pain or suffering, abstinence from solid or heating food, is usually advisable.

The whole surface of the body should be often washed, so as to remove all obstructions to the perspiration of every pore, preventing, or removing congestion, an establishing an equal circulation of the blood to all parts of the system.

Friction with a crash towel or mitten, excites healthful action in the capillaries, and aids powerfully in restoration.

Talk but little in the hearing of a sick person, and talk calmly, and only loud enough to be heard by them.

Do not manifest impatience, or harsh denial of their wishes, or ridicule of their seeming whims. Do not give large quantities of cold water at a time, but give a small quantity of fresh water so often as they need it, and occasionally alternate it with warm gruel, or the warm juice of fruits. But do not cook the fruits in brass or copper vessels.

The water given the patient to drink should stand in a cool place in the open air; but it should not stand in a pail painted in the inside, as the paint gradually poisons all liquids put in it. (It ought to be fashionable not to paint the inside of pails.)

In severe sickness, visitors should not be allowed to talk with, or in the hearing of the patient, or linger about the bed, or in the room.

Change the clothing and bedding as often as necessary, which must be determined by the smell, rather than the looks.

Air the clothing and bedding, so that it shall be perfectly dry in all parts before putting it on.

Have a constant supply of fresh air circulating from other rooms into the room of the patient; this is a constant need, and may be admitted, in warm, still weather, immediately into the room, if it can be without a direct current upon the bed. If not, let air circulate freely through an adjoining, and the door of the sick room be left open. Sickness is prolonged, and often proves fatal for want of fresh air. People cannot live so long without it, as without food.

No smoking of tobacco should ever be allowed, where the sick would be liable to inhale any of the smoke.

When food should be taken, ripe fruits cooked so as to be very tender, should form the principal part of the diet. The skins, cores, or pits of stoned fruits, should not be eaten.

After the surface of the body has been well washed, feet well bathed, so as to loosen all scurf on them, which must be well rubbed off, if the pain in the head is not eased, wrap the feet and limbs in cloths wrung out of cold water, covered with dry cloths. White flannel or other warm cloths are best, and if the patient is undisturbed he will in most cases soon fall asleep.—Ex.

COLD FEET.—There is no more fruitful source of disease than cold feet. Cold feet cannot possibly occur if the circulation is properly kept up. A sense of coldness in them is an indication that they are not sufficiently protected by clothing. Our bodies are often overburdened with over-coats and wrapping shawls, while our limbs are but imperfectly covered. Now, there is nothing more dangerous than allowing the feet to become damp and cold. Health requires that they always be warm and dry. Recall some of your past experience, and you will soon discover that two-thirds of the colds you have suffered from, were produced by getting cold and wet feet.

The Indians understand this fully. In their wigwams, they always lie down with their feet towards the fire. When they are traveling in cold weather, and are compelled to camp in the open air, they dig a hole in the earth, in the centre of which they build a fire, and then lie down in a circle, each one hanging his legs into the hole. In this custom they have the simple guidance of experience.—Herald of Health.

LOVE'S REWARD.

The loving heart doth not regard
What selfish hearts would call reward;
And yet to acts of goodness true,
It always hath its work to do.

To private aims and objects blind,
It seeks the good of all mankind;
The only aim and work it knows,
Is that of healing others' woes.

It stands a wide and open door,
Where come the lame, the sick, the poor;
It heals the sick, the halt, the blind,
And calms the sad and troubled mind.

To them it lives for others' bliss,
And its reward is only this—
The more its love to others flows,
The more its power of loving grows.

THE PROPHETIC PERIODS.

DANIEL 8th AND 9th CONSIDERED.

D. CLOW.

Now Josephus tells us that the war with the "Romans commenced in the twelfth year of Nero, and the seventeenth of Agrippa"; and this synchronizes with A. D. 66. See Note, B. 2, c. 14, s. 4. And he also tells us that it closed in the fourth year of Vespasian, A. D. 73." Then it follows that seven years intervened, if we have the correct chronology. And this is the fourth demonstration that a week in this prophecy is seven years. "And in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease." Now if we find that this was literally accomplished by the said prince, it will be equivalent to a mathematical demonstration that we have the correct view of this matter. See Josephus again, (B. 6, page 117), where he says that "Titus had been informed that on that very day, which was the seventeenth day of Panemus, the sacrifice called the daily sacrifice had failed." Now there is something very significant in the words—"on that very day," as if it were a fulfillment of prophecy. And what goes to confirm this view is, that in speaking of the signs that preceded the said war, he says "they [the people] did not attend nor give heed to the signs that were so evident, and did so plainly foretell their future desolation." And among the said signs he speaks of one that goes very far to confirm the fact that it was exactly in the midst or middle of the said week, that the sacrifice and oblation did cease. He says, "But what was still more terrible, there was one Jesus, the son of Ananus, a plebian and a husbandman, who, four years before the war began (and at that time the city was in very great peace and prosperity), began on a sudden to cry aloud—'A voice from the east, a voice from the west, a voice from the four winds, a voice against Jerusalem, and the holy house, a voice against the bridegroom and the bride, a voice against the whole people.' This was his cry, as he went about by day and by night in all the lanes of the city." Nay, he goes on to say that he was taken up, "and they gave him a great number of stripes, and whipped him till his bones were laid bare, yet did he not make any supplication for himself, nor shed any tears. But turning his voice to the most lamentable tones possible, at every stroke of the whip his answer was, 'Woe, woe to Jerusalem.' This cry of his was the loudest at the festivals, and he continued this ditty for seven years and five months." When in the midst of the siege, he was killed.

Mark, now, it was four years before the war commenced that he commenced this cry, and he continued seven years and five months "when it ceased; for as he was going round upon the wall, he cried out with his utmost force, 'Woe, woe to the city again, and to the people, and to the holy house.' And just as he added at the last, "Woe, woe to myself also," a stone out of one of the engines smote him, and killed him immediately. Now, four years before the war commenced, when he was killed (and he was killed a little before the sacrifice and the oblation ceased); and this was doubtless exactly in the middle of the "one week."

Now what more can we ask? In the first instance (Dan. 8: 9-12), a power is described under the title of a little horn. And it is positively asserted that by him the daily sacrifice was taken away, and the place of his sanctuary was cast down. That an host was given him by reason of transgression, or, the the host was given over for the "transgression against the daily sacrifice" (margin); and it cast down the truth to the ground, and it practiced and prospered.

Now that the "daily sacrifice" relates to the national religion of the Jews, and "the place of his sanctuary" to Jerusalem, there can be no doubt. Josephus tells us that "the sacrifice" was called "the daily sacrifice."

The declaration that it waxed great even to the host of heaven, and cast down some of the host and of the stars to the ground, and stamped upon them (which certainly relates to the religious body of the Jews, if any body upon earth), plainly implies that he may also (as he certainly did) take away the daily sacrifice, and cast down the place of his sanctuary; yea, he magnified himself, even to the prince of the host. This does not relate to the Prince of princes, as many suppose; but to the prince of the host, the king and high priest of the Jews. Do not be alarmed at the thought; many others, as well qualified to judge of these things as any living, have held to this view. Nay, it will not hurt you, even if you cannot understand it just as I do. But more of this hereafter.

"And an host was given him, by reason of transgression"; or, "the host was given over for the transgression against the daily sacrifice." And it—the same horn—cast down the truth to the ground, and it practiced and prospered." What was "the truth" that was cast down? It was God's holy law, and the Jews were the divinely appointed trustees of the said law, and the whole went down together. Nay, even to this day, paganism covers the land where once the Shekinah sat, and God communed with the high priest, the prince of the host, as some believe, in an audible voice.

Now I need not say that "some of the host have been cast down to the ground"; that the "daily sacrifice has been taken away," or "caused to cease"; that the "place of his sanctuary has been cast down"; that "the truth" has also been "cast down to the ground." Almost every school-boy knows this, or ought to know it. And we all know who did it, how it was done, and when it was done. It was "the little horn," "the people of the prince that came,"—the Romans—that did it all.

Why, then, should we hesitate to decide this matter? The confirmation of the covenant lies in the fact that the people of the prince that came did do the work assigned to them; that it was done exactly at the time appointed, i. e., at the end, and immediately succeeding seventy weeks allotted to the Jews for their national existence, and within the time specified, to wit, one week. Look again at the striking event of causing "the sacrifice and the oblation to cease," exactly in the middle of the week. Have I not satisfied you by the testimony of a living eye-witness (Josephus) that this event did occur, to say the least, very near the middle of the week? For three years and five months after the war commenced he saw with his own eyes the man sent of God to warn the people; and he heard with his own ears the lamentable voice of "Woe, woe to Jerusalem." The said man fell upon the walls by a stone from the Roman engines, showing that the city had not yet surrendered; but it did surrender very soon after. It is faith in God's holy word that makes these things look as brilliant as the sun in a clear day, and without faith we cannot comprehend the simplest facts of revelation.

Can we ask for a stronger confirmation of revealed truth? Shall we signify our disapprobation of the author's style of publishing his covenants, and executing his laws? Nay, shall we be found smiting our fellow servants, and scoffing at what our God has been pleased to reveal to us through his servants the prophets? I tell you, we have no time to lose; we have no time to fritter away with caviling and doubting; no time to speculate upon obvious facts. The vision lies in the past, except the cleansing of the sanctuary, and this is at hand. O that my God would give you wisdom, and incline your hearts to see these things as others see them!

But I hear the feeble voice of one saying, I understand these things to be true in a general sense, but I cannot see the evidence or time as you do; and I am in doubt about those days being years. Many believe them to be literal, and yet in the future.

Well, have I not satisfied you that the seventy weeks, the sixty-nine weeks, the sixty-two weeks, and the one week, are years? Have I not satisfied you also that the little horn of the eighth chapter and "the people of the prince that shall come" of the ninth chapter, are reciprocal and correlative texts? nay, that they are identical in every feature? and that being true, that these two chapters are reciprocal throughout? I certainly have demonstrated, as clearly as one fact can demonstrate another, that the people of the said prince did do the work assigned to the little horn, and that it was done exactly at the time appointed; and you will not deny that these were Romans, wielding the sceptre of universal empire, and bringing all into subjection to their resistless power. And then we have the significant fact lying open before us, that Daniel himself did not understand the vision, until after the second interview with Gabrial, as related in the ninth chapter, and this must forever settle the controversy. If he did not understand it before the ninth chapter, and did understand immediately after, is it not conclusive, nay, positive, that these two chapters are correlative in every feature?

Nay, if the beloved prophet could not, and did not understand the vision, who, I ask in all kindness and sincerity, could understand it? Was it left for you and me to unfold? Poor tools, indeed, we would be in explaining what God had left unexplained, even the "secrets of the wonderful numberer" (margin). Nay, nay, had not Gabrial returned to Danial, with power to unfold the vision and to make him understand it, the whole thing would lie concealed in the bosom of its author to-day, and no one, in heaven or upon earth, could understand it. I repeat the thought, without the fear of contradiction from any intelligent source, that the whole vision would be a total blank, and a dead letter upon the page of prophecy to-day, had not Gabrial returned to do what he was commanded to do: "Gabrial, make this man to understand the vision." And his own declaration—"I will make thee know what shall be in the last end of the indignation; for at the time appointed the end shall be." No criticism can possibly weaken this view of the case. Nay, it is invulnerable, and carries us far beyond the reach of the simple caviler.

Now after Gabriel had turned away, Daniel fainted, and was sick certain days, and he says he was astonished at the vision, but none understood it. This was the last of the eighth chapter interview. Now what shall we say? That Gabriel has failed to "make this man to understand the vision," is clear. Will he not return? He must, or God is dishonored, and Gabriel himself must be charged with the crime of falsehood. Did he return? "Yea, while I was speaking and praying, and confessing my sins, and the sins of my people Israel, ... even the man Gabriel, whom I had seen in the vision at the beginning, being caused to fly swiftly, touched me about the time of the evening oblation. And he informed me, and talked with me, and said, O Daniel, I am now come forth to give thee skill and understanding. At the beginning of thy supplication the commandment came forth, and I am come to show thee. Therefore understand the matter, and consider the vision."

Now if this language both of Daniel and Gabriel does not plainly imply a former interview, and a matter unexplained, then there is no sense in the law of language. Daniel does not call this last interview with Gabriel a vision at all. But he speaks of the vision at the beginning; and of Gabriel, whom he has seen in the vision. Now there is no vision on record in which Daniel recognized Gabriel, save the one in the eighth chapter, of which he speaks in the ninth. And the moment that Gabriel touched him about the time of the evening oblation, the vision with all its mysteries recurred to him in the most vivid form. And hence it is that Gabriel addressed him in the significant language—"I am now come forth to show thee . . . therefore understand the matter, and consider the vision."

To illustrate: Imagine yourself a captive among the wild aborigines of the west. A messenger is sent you from the executive department of your government with a message. He unfolds to your view a government scroll, and begins to read, and you imagine that it contains treaty stipulations for your release from captivity. Your bosom begins to swell with emotion. Your heart is filled with gratitude. You wait to hear the message read with mingled joy and love to God and man. You hear the messenger say, I will make you to know and understand the contents of this message. He goes on with the reading. Not a word do you hear in relation to your release. Nay, it seems to relate to greater trials. Now your hopes begin to fail you; he shuts up the message, and tells you "it is true," but no farther explanation will be given for many days. Now he turns and leaves. Like Danial, you faint. Your disappointment is more than you can endure. Now all seems to be lost, and you are a captive still.

A few short years intervene, and the very same messenger greets you again, while you are praying over this very matter. He salutes you kindly and says, I am now come forth to show you, for thou art greatly beloved. Therefore understand the matter and consider the message. Would you say, What message? Would you say, I do not understand you, sir; I have no knowledge or remembrance of any message whatever? Nay, nay, the whole thing would flash into your mind like vivid lightning in the darkness, and your hopes would rise again like the morning sun, to dispel the gloom of night.

Now I appeal to your judgment, and ask your decision in this matter. You are aware of the fact that Daniel and his people were all in captivity when he saw the vision, and we can easily imagine how sad he must have felt when Gabriel told him to shut up the vision "for many days." Daniel understood that Gabriel would return "after many days" and explain the matter more fully. Indeed, this was the only rational view that he could take of the matter, as Gabriel had told him that he would make him understand it, and had charged him to remember it by telling him that the vision of the evening and the morning, or the 2300 days, was true, just as he was about to leave him. "Behold, I will make thee know what shall be in the last end of the indignation, for at the time appointed the end shall be." The end of what? The end of the indignation, of course. The time appointed is 2300 days. It was quite natural for Daniel to infer that the time was literal, and that it must commence on the very day that it was uttered. And this view of the matter is strengthened by the fact that he knew that the seventy years' captivity (Jer. 25: 11) was drawing to a close. There can be no doubt but that he supposed the time specified and the seventy years' captivity would run out together. Then we can imagine his disappointment when the literal 2300 days had expired.

And now we find him mourning over the desolation of Jerusalem, and praying to God to let or "cause his face to shine once more upon the sanctuary that lay desolate." Babylon had fallen, and the Medes and Persians were now in power. When in the first year of Darius, Daniel says he "set his face unto the Lord God, to seek by prayer and supplications" evidently to know what the end was going to be. He had learned, or "understood by books, the number of the year whereof the word of the Lord came unto Jeremiah the prophet, that he would accomplish seventy years in the desolations of Jerusalem"; and he knew therefore that their deliverance was at hand. On reviewing the vision, he saw that it was to commence with the Medes and Persians, but did not understand that there was a specific point from whence the vision was to commence; so therefore he conjectured that whereas the Medes and Persians had taken the empire, the vision must of necessity commence with them, and that 2300 literal days would bring them to the end of the seventy years' captivity. He looks forward with great assurance that at the end of 2300 literal days, from the day that Babylon fell into the hands of the Medes and Persians, they would be set at liberty, and restored to their ancient home.

And now it is that Gabriel comes to correct his second mistake; and he addresses him in language that plainly implies a previous interview with him, by telling him to "understand the matter, and consider the vision." And Daniel positively declares that he had seen Gabriel before in the vision. And we may reasonably infer from this that the whole vision flashed upon his mind in a moment; especially that portion of the vision that related to the time appointed, and which Gabriel had charged him to remember, by telling him that "the vision of the evening and morning [the 2300 days] which was told is true."

Gabriel commences to unfold the vision just where he left off; i. e., with the 2300 days; and he says, "Seventy weeks are cut off upon thy people, and upon thy holy city." Daniel understands the time (2300 days) to mean years, because he knows that the said weeks are years, from the common use of the word among the Chaldeans, as also among his own people. Then he goes on to tell him what is to be done within the said seventy weeks—"To punish transgression [margin, to restrain transgression]; to make an end of sins; to make reconciliation for iniquity; to bring in everlasting righteousness; to seal up the vision and the prophecy, and to anoint the Most Holy." This is all that was said about the seventy weeks, in any way, shape or manner. The smaller periods are all independent of this, and have no other relation to the seventy, than to point to events that were to transpire within them.

Some two years subsequent to this, in the third year of Cyrus, Daniel says "a thing was revealed to him"; and he says "the thing was true, but the time appointed was long; and he understood the thing, and had understanding of the vision." The thing revealed was the vision. The vision was the one that was coupled with time; and the time was long. Now in this case there is no room for equivocation or doubt. Nay, we are forced into a positive point of decision. It is the vision of the 2300 days; and what was revealed to him upon this occasion may be seen in what follows in the tenth, eleventh, and twelfth chapters. Here we have an explanation in detail of the said vision.

How significant the declaration—"The vision of the evening and the morning, which was told, is true." Why was this uttered just as he was about to leave the beloved prophet? Evidently for the purpose of charging him to remember the time vision, and not to abandon it because he could not at once comprehend its meaning, till he returned to explain it more fully. And this view of the case is confirmed by his own declaration—"The thing was true, but the time appointed was long"; even 2300 days, or years.

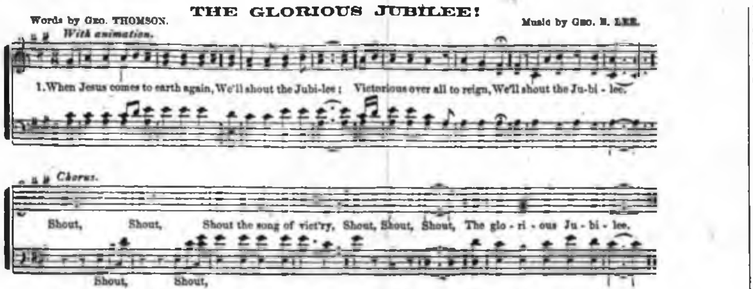
I have said that the following text—"Yea, he magnified himself even to the prince of the host," does not relate to the "Prince of princes" (8: 25), but to the king and high priest of the Jewish people, who was considered by the Jews and other nations as the highest dignitary upon earth. He was the Melchisedek of the Jews, through every succeeding change of government down to the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans; sometimes indeed more highly esteemed than others, because of political corruption; but during the theocracy he was the prime minister of state, and God the king.

Subsequent to their return from Babylon, the Asmoneans united the regal and pontifical power; but when Rome usurped dominion over them, she appointed her kings and high priests. Then it was that the little horn began to magnify himself "even to the prince of the host." The host I understand to mean the Jews in a national sense; and if this be true, it certainly must follow that the "prince of the host" means the king and high priest of the host, as he was the highest dignitary of the nation. I know full well that criticism will do its best to set aside this view of the case; but something more reasonable and consistent than I have ever seen yet must be brought to view, to satisfy me of error. It is not my own, but the honor and the glory of my Lord and Master, that I seek, in this feeble effort of mine; and all I ask of any is a candid hearing.

Now do you ask how the said horn "magnified himself even to the prince of the host"? I answer, by pride, arrogance, and usurpation; by assuming the reins of government, and appointing all the government functionaries, even the kings and high priests, and proudly commanding the priests to offer sacrifices for Cæsar and his household. Cæsar Augustus proudly called himself high priest. And this is standing up against the prince of the host in the most literal sense. "He magnified himself, even to the prince of the host." This implies that the prince of the host will be regarded in the light of a superior, as occupying a position of pre-eminence. And to "mangnify one's self," Webster says, "is to raise one's self in pride and pretensions." Now if the little horn magnified himself even to the prince of the host, it must be understood in this sense; and Dan. 8: 25 confirms this view—"And he shall magnify himself in his heart." Let us apply the said text (in the popular style) to "the Prince of princes" (whom we all understand to mean the Savior), and see how it looks. The Roman empire then (the antitype of the little horn) magnified itself even to the meek and lowly Jesus, the humble Nazarene, who was scorned by the common people, and murdered by a Jewish mob. Was there anything in this man to excite the envy of the Roman emperor or empire? Did any of the Cæsars attempt to imitate his deeds and moral character? You say nay; and I say nay. He was not an object of envy and political strife, but of hatred, scorn, and contempt. But I am told that the marginal reading is "against" the prince of the host. It is all the same, kind friend, as the word "magnify" has but one meaning.

THE GLORIOUS JUBILEE!

Words by GEO. THOMSON. Music by GEO. E. LEE.



With animation.
1. When Jesus comes to earth again, We'll shout the Jubi-lee; Victorious over all to reign, We'll shout the Ju-bi - lee.
Chorus.
Shout, Shout, Shout the song of vict'ry, Shout, Shout, Shout, The glo - ri - ous Ju - bi - lee.
Shout, Shout,

2. When earthly dynasties shall fall,
We'll shout the Jubilee;
And Zion's King be all in all,
We'll shout the Jubilee.

3. The captor then shall captive be,
We'll shout the Jubilee;
And Rachel's children shall be free,
We'll shout the Jubilee.

4. O how the ransomed host will sing,
And shout the Jubilee;
O'er conquered grave, and death its king,
We'll shout the victory.

5. When earth's dread night of gloom is o'er,
We'll shout the Jubilee;
And thorns and thistles rise no more,
We'll shout the Jubilee.

6. When all in earth, and air, and sky,
Shall blend in symphony,
And praise the Lord in harmony,
We'll shout the Jubilee.

7. O what a thrilling shout 'twill be,— Eternal victory
From sin and death, and Satan free,
A glorious Jubilee.

THE TWO WAYS.

F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

"Thus saith the Lord, Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest unto your souls."—Jer. 6: 16.

"I will teach you the good and the right way."—1 Sam. 12: 23.

The question is often asked, why all this evil and sorrow and anguish is permitted to exist in the world? And the answer in part may be found in the words of the prophet to Rehoboam the king, after he had humbled himself. Although the nation was saved from being destroyed by the vast army that came up against them at that time, yet the Lord said that they should be servants to the king of Egypt; "that they may know my service, and the service of the kingdoms of the countries."

Here are the two ways. The service of God is one way; the service of the world and "the prince of this world" is the other. Our first progenitors were led to rebel against God. They forsook the way of peace, the way of obedience, and chose the way of death. For this the whole world, and all that is in the world, came under the curse, and felt in a greater or less degree the evil consequences of sin. For this the "whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now." There was strife and bloodshed very early in the history of the race, and these things still continue. And not only the worst of men suffer in the general calamity, but all, even the least, and those who have no power or knowledge to choose or discern between good and evil, all are involved, all are "subject to vanity," all are subject to the varied and numerous evils of time; as the wise man says, "time and chance happeneth to all."

Do you ask, "Then what advantage shall we have, if we serve the Lord? Or what profit is there in his service?" There is certainly a present advantage, though with the peace and joy promised, there is tribulation also. Storms beat upon the head of the righteous and the wicked. The destroying elements often seem to make no distinction, but fall alike upon both. But this is only for "a little while." The day is coming, "it is near, and hasteth greatly," when "ye shall return and discern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that serveth God, and him that serveth him not."

To-day the way of life is set before you, therefore choose life, that ye may live and enjoy all that is promised. A good land is promised, far better than the ancient land of Canaan; though even that flowed with milk and honey, and, by reason of its great fertility, was called "the glory of all lands." A far better land than this is promised to all who walk in "the good and the right way." "Abundance of peace" is also promised. No thorns or briers will be there; no evil nations to be as thorns to those who dwell there, as the Canaanites were to the chosen people of old. No lion shall be there, neither shall any ravenous beast be found there. But the redeemed of the Lord "shall be there; they shall return and come to Zion with songs, and everlasting joy shall be upon their heads; they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away." "And there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away." And there is that glorious city, "that great city, the holy Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God, having the glory of God; and her light is like unto a stone most precious, even like a jasper stone, clear as crystal. . . . And the city was pure gold, like unto clear glass." There also is the pure river of the water of life, and the tree of life bearing twelve manner of fruits. And when the saved ones arrive there in that blessed land, doubtless they will say as the queen of the south said long ago—"The half was not told me."

Reader, are you now walking in "the good and the right way?" If not, you are this day invited to come and enter in at the strait gate, and walk in the narrow way that leadeth unto life. For the end of all other ways is death. "Turn ye, turn ye, for why will ye die?" "We beseech you in Christ's stead, as though God did beseech you by us, be ye reconciled to God." And the Spirit and the bride say come. And let him that heareth say, come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will let him take the water of life freely."

PECULIARLY DANGEROUS TIMES.

In a recent number of the Sunday School Times, H. S. Osborn, LL.D., remarks: "We are living in peculiarly dangerous times from the reading which is now brought out. At no former time in the history of our country has light reading been so much in demand as at the present day. All classes of persons, learned and ignorant, professional men, business men, educated ladies as well as the nurse and help, the cook and the chambermaid, demand light reading—tales, stories, novels, or something 'exciting.' I have heard it asserted more works of this character have been sold in the past two years than had been sold during the preceding sixty years!" He then refers to Dr. Ray, of the Butler Insane Asylum, of Providence, R. I., as attributing the increase of insanity to "excessive indulgence in the reading of the novels, and works of similar character, which have, of late years, swarmed from the presses of New York, Philadelphia and Boston," and makes this quotation from the official report:

"The coarse exaggeration of every sentiment by every posible form of unnatural excitement, giving no addition to one's stock of knowledge, no element of mental strength being envolved, prepares no one better for the stern realities of life. This indulgence is a characteristic of our times, and it is asserted, with distressing evidence, that many of the irregularities which prevail among us, to a degree unknown at any former period, are chargeable to this very alarmingly prevalent habit."

We do not believe this alarm of danger is uncalled for. Our land is being flooded with this pernicious "light literature." It is the principal kind offered for sale at the news-stands, in the railway cars, and places of public resort. It behooves every christian parent to look well to the character of his own reading and of that which he allows his children to have. "A paper will fill a void that nothing else will; and remember, both for yourself and for your children, that no paper ever came into a family for one year which did not exert an influence of a moral character, either good or bad, on some one in that family."—Selected.

REST.

JENNIE M. PRATT.

"Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning."

How cheering are these words to the weary, sad ones; and how we long for the day to come when all the faithful will be gathered home, free from sighing and sorrow; where all will be peace and joy, not only for a little season, but throughout eternity. How comforting to know that soon this night of weeping will be over, and joy unspeakable be ours. While in this world, we meet with changes, and feel at times almost discouraged, and are weighed down with sorrow; but let us ever remember the precious promises of Jesus to the faithful ones; and though we meet with trials, disappointments, and afflictions, let us look to the Lord, casting all our cares on him who careth for us, that when he comes we may be gathered home with all the redeemed, to live with him forever, where the inhabitant shall not say I am sick, and the weary ones will find sweet rest; where separations will be unknown, and we shall meet all the loved ones to part no more.

Let us then press onward, and strive to be good and faithful, that we may be accepted of Jesus when he comes to make up his jewels.

SANCTIFICATION.

C. W. SARGENT.

"Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you."—2 Cor. 6: 17.

To "come out" signifies a change of company. God is very particular as to what class of companions his people have, and therefore he designates those from whom we must separate ourselves. Unbelievers and unrighteous persons, or worshipers of idols, are classed as unclean; from them his people are called out; and in order to prove that they are a called-out or sanctified people, they must keep themselves unspotted from the world, from the time they commence serving the Lord until they have completed their labor for him in this life.

"From among them"; thereby showing us that we cannot be saved unless we do separate ourselves, for he is against all workers of iniquity, as illustrated by the march of the children of Israel through the wilderness. Those who were worthy of his blessing were obliged to separate themselves from those who had sinned, that they might escape the judgments which were made manifest.

"And be ye separate." Action and correct position both are here set forth. We can not be a separate people without obeying the Lord, nor can we understand his command unless we are willing to meet the consequences. The example of Abraham illustrates this remark. When called to offer up Isaac he obeyed; and by so doing, he gained not only the understanding of his Lord's command, but gained also a knowledge of the manner in which redemption would be accomplished. The same principle of faith that separated him from his father's household, separates us also. And as he was faithful, in that he thus separated himself from unbelievers, and lived by faith on the promises of God; so he became the father of the faithful—of those who walk in his footsteps; of those who desire to gain eternal life at the appearing of Jesus.

The benefit. "I will receive you, and will be a father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." But when do we come into such a close, family relationship as is here set forth? Answer. At our conversion, or our perfect separation from unholy companionship. And thus we read from John's writings: "Beloved, now are ye the sons of God." Paul confirms this by writing thus to the Ephesians: "Now, therefore, ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints and of the household of God."

But do we enjoy perfect sanctification when we become members of the household of God? The offering for sin, which Christ declared himself to be, was sufficient to save all who believe his testimony. In commenting on this sacrifice, Paul says: "We are sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all." Heb. 10: 10. In the Bible Union translation this text reads, "We have been sanctified," etc. To the Ephesians he writes: "Christ so loved the church, and gave himself for it, that he might sanctify and cleanse it." Evidently Christ's sacrifice was sufficient for the object designed; namely, to gather out a people, zealous of good works, and separate them unto himself in order to provide a class of people suitable to inhabit the new earth, wherein "the righteous shall dwell."

But does the sanctification set forth in Heb. 10: 10, embrace all that is connected with our work of separation from the world? I think not. As the Lord once said to the children of Israel, "sanctify yourselves"; so Paul says to the Thessalonians: "This is the will of God, even your sanctification, that ye should abstain from fornication; that every one of you should know how to possess his vessel in sanctification and honor." They were to keep free from the evils of their day; and believers now must keep themselves free from the evils of this age; by so doing they will obey the Lord and enjoy the blessing of perfect sanctification.

Notwithstanding Christ has done much for us, we are to maintain good works; for the Lord has ordained that we should walk in them—not in evil works. We shall enjoy what we live for. If to the Lord only, then we can claim him as our Father, share the privileges granted to the household of faith, and reap the reward which the "sons of God" are to receive when their "elder brother" comes again.

Christ, in this age, is set forth as our "wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption." Once we could be found among the railers, the extortioners, the idolaters, the drunkards, and others who are enumerated by the apostles. "And such were some of you; but ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God." For the Spirit is given us as a witness, that the work of separating ourselves and coming out from former unholy companions, is acceptable to God; and this also seals us unto the day of redemption, and proves to us our adoption into the family of God.

Suffer this word of exhortation: If you would enjoy perfect sanctification, obey the Lord in all things; grieve not the Holy Spirit; understand what the will of the Lord is concerning you; redeem the time; watch and be sober unto prayer; for the end of all things is at hand. Jesus is about to gather unto himself all who are without spot, or wrinkle, or blemish, or any such thing.

Some able writers on prophecy have looked, and are looking to 1881 as the time for the ending of the 2300 days of Dan. 8: 14. They have come to this conclusion because of what they find in Dan 9: 24, where we read: "Seventy weeks are determined [cut off] upon thy people, and upon thy holy city." As it is understood that the seventy weeks begin with the 2300 days [years], of course, if we can find where the seventy weeks, or four hundred and ninety years end, then we may know that 1810 years from the ending of the 490 would bring us to the end of the 2300. Those who think the 2300 end in 1881, believe the destruction of Jerusalem in A. D. 70, marks the end of the seventy weeks [490 years] that were determined upon Daniel's people [the Jews], and the "holy city." Evidently, this is the outside limit for the ending of the seventy weeks; but our own conviction is that they end in A. D. 65, and the 2300 days, in 1875. Events show that the coming of Christ is at our doors. Are we ready to meet him, and enter into the company of the pure and the holy?

TRACTS.

We wish to say to all interested in scattering the truth, that the tract fund is nearly empty. Calls for tracts are numerous from various parts of the country. Every dollar appropriated for this purpose will scatter over a thousand pages of tracts, which may result in great good. Rich fruits have already proceeded from the circulation of these silent messengers. They return much joyful news as the result of their visits. Bro. and Srs., look over the Lord's treasury entrusted to your care, and see if there is not a portion to be appropriated for this important work. Would it not be well to lay aside something every week for the purpose? The people are hungering and starving for the blessed truths on which we are feasting. Let us divide our good things with them, that they may rejoice with us in the same blessed hope.

MEETINGS IN STAFFORD.

Tuesday, Nov. 14th, we went to Stafford Springs, Ct., to commence meetings, according to a previous arrangement made with Bro. I. B. Potter. When we arrived at the depot, at seven in the evening, we could find no one who knew anything about the meeting; hence we concluded that no appointment had been made. We then hired a man to take us to the residence of Bro. Potter in West Stafford, three miles from the depot. We took him by surprise. We soon found the cause of the disappointment—our letter had not been received.

The next day, Bro. Ira Pettibone, the pastor of the Congregational church, called at Bro. Potter's, and, in compliance with a request, kindly gave us the use of his meeting-house for preaching in the evening. We had a very pleasant visit with Bro. Pettibone, who was formerly pastor of the East St. Congregational church in Winsted. He is a true man. Our meeting in the evening was one of rich interest. Bro. Pettibone made telling remarks, and several others followed with warm testimonies. We felt it was good to be there; and that a few extra meetings would result in much good.

Thursday evening we had our meeting in Stafford Hollow, in the Baptist meeting-house, where Elder F. L. Batchelder is pastor. Our discourse was on Spiritualism. The Spiritualists have many sympathizers in that part of Ct. It seems strange that candid men and women should be led away by such a terrible delusion. Spiritualism is the most bitter enemy with which christianity has now to contend. It is gathering under its demoniacal banners all forms of antichristian elements, to make war with the Lamb of God, our Savior. The spirit of antichrist is pervading all its plans and movements. It is filled with a spirit of hatred for all sacred things. In short, the whole system is purely Satanic, and is casting a dark shadow and a blighting influence wherever it finds a foothold. It has long held sway in heathen lands; and is making gigantic efforts to turn the people of this country from the doctrine of christianity to the doctrines of old Pagan Rome.

"CHARITY OF JUDGMENT."

Wm. H. H. Murray, the able pastor of the Park Street Church, Boston, preached an excellent sermon Oct. 15th, in which he said:—

"Every third man you meet has a stone in his hand to throw at some one. Many of these are professed christians. They are perhaps honest; that is, not consciously malicious. I should not for one dare to question their piety; but they are bigoted, intolerant, and wofully lacking in tenderness,—that divinest characteristic of Jesus. They exemplify the severe virtues of Christianity, to the almost total exclusion of the milder graces. Had they lived in the age of Jonah, they would have been excellent heralds to have sent down to Nineveh. They would not have flinched from hurling the needed malediction against its grossness and wickedness. They would have set the edge of their censure against the swarming and cursing mob as a scythe is set against a field of bulrushes. But woe to the thief on the cross, to the recreant Peter, to the poor woman whom the Pharisees were so eager to stone, if brought into their presence for judgment! They are men and women who seem absolutely incapable of exercising mercy. Their bosoms are strangers to such divine sentiment. They cannot overlook a failing, forgive a fault, or understand that virtue may exist with weakness.

A branch is an emblem of peace; but, strip it of its twigs and leaves, and you have a rod, —the emblem of chastisement. So take from Christianity its mild graces, its forgiving tempers, and its charitable tendencies, and you entirely change its character, making it seem what it is not. Now, purity is not judicial; it is not warlike; its symbol—a dove—is the most harmless bird that flies. A person may be intensely earnest in his christian life and convictions, and yet not to be intolerant. Intolerance is no sign of piety, though it may be of earnestness. And, as I conceive, those christians who make themselves sharp-worded censors of other people's foibles, who seize every opportunity to inveigh against the habits and customs of brethren which happen to run counter to their views, who have no mercy and no hope for the fallen and the falling, do not act as Christ would have them do."

AN EXPERIENCE.

The following is from the Methodist Home Journal, an excellent weekly, published at 14 South Seventh Street, Philadelphia. Price $2 a year. The scene was located at a western campmeeting, and the person is a young, accomplished lady of high standing. She says:

"Spiritually, I enjoyed all of the meeting in a quiet way: it strengthened and built me up; but the very last day, of the meeting, an experience came to me which forms an epoch in my history, from which I date the opening of my full life, perhaps (who knows?) my entering into the heavenly state! It was on this wise. Much talk and many meetings were held on the subject of entire sanctification, in all of which I joined with a glad heart, feeling so much of God's rest in my soul; and and yet, I could not speak the words that others spoke; I was not in full sympathy with those who talked of consecration and purity of heart; I kept looking to God saying, 'Teach me thy way;' yet I expected no specific change.

On Thursday, I fell into conversation with some christian friends; and, to my astonishment, finding that they understood me, I revealed to them my whole heart—all its unbelief, all its weary longing, and how, like healing balm, did their words of guidance fall upon me. I went with Mrs. ——, my good friend, out into the congregation before the stand. I did not listen to the sermon, but thought, and talked with God in my heart, and there dear J—— out under those broad-leafed trees, with the blue sky peeping through at me, and the pleasant breeze caressing my brow, I said, 'Dear Lord, accept the gift of myself; take that is thine own; take me as I am, doubts and fears and all.' Thine would I live, thine would I die; be thine to all eternity.' And just there something like a robe of whiteness seemed to fall from heaven over my heart; I felt so clean, I felt the presence of the Holy Ghost. It seemed as real as a tangible thing. I kept saying to myself: 'The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin.' O, so much became plain, that before was dark! It was a light which streamed back to the beginning of my Christian life, and onward to the gates of Paradise. This is the most wonderful thing that has ever happened to me. My lips were opened, and I could not tell the story too often.

And now, dear J——, I feel as if I were treading this earth by the side of a heavenly guide. My one, and only care is to keep his hand, to hold him always, then he will keep my feet from falling, mine eyes from tears. Doubts have vanished like dew before the sun.

I do not look ahead one moment to take any care; God will keep me. Never before did I know what christian fellowship meant; I never knew how to pray before; I want you to thank God for me. The last thirty-six hours on that camp-ground were glorious ones. I cannot stop to rehearse all that was so beautiful. We came back regretfully, but with great hopes.

You do not know how this has opened my life before me! I am treading a straight path right on and up. Where God calls me I will go. I have begun at my home relatives, and all through my life I find things must be changed. How I have wasted my powers of mind and body. I want to begin now, with such a will as shall enable me to make up some lost time."

Health Journals.—We have received the November number of "Home and Health," "Health Reformer," and "Herald of Health." They are all valuable. The first is $1.50 a year, and published by W. R. De Puy and Bro's., 805 Broadway, N. Y. The second at Battle Creek, Mich., at $1. The third at 15 Laight St., New York, at $2. We think every family should take some health journal. These journals give much valuable information, that all should possess.

QUERIST.

Bro. Grant:—I present the following questions to you for solution through the Crisis, both for my own benefit, and that of others: In your editorial of Nov. 8, on "what is truth?" in speaking of man's identity, you say, "If the identity is (?) in the thoughts, then that which has no thoughts has no identity; but this is not true, for we identify our friends by their bodies, after they have ceased to think; therefore the identity inheres in the physical constitution."

Without disputing the claim, I would simply ask, what would become of the "identity" if man's "physical constitution" were blown to atoms by some premature explosion?

Or when the "physical constitution" has been burned to ashes, and scattered to the winds, in what does the identity then inhere?

Or again, when the buried "physical constitution" has dissolved, and gone back to dust, or has been absorbed in vegetation, where is the identity then?

Is man's personal identity preserved through all these changes of matter, or does it become extinct?

An answer to the above will oblige.

Yours, etc., C. E. Barnes.

To us, the man is "extinct," and could not be identified again till he is reorganized. Suppose we have a stone building which is to be taken down. Before the work of demoralization begins, let each stone be numbered, and labelled so that when it is taken down it can be reconstructed. Those stones could be identified as belonging to the building; but the building itself could not be identified till it was reconstructed. So, when man is taken in pieces, the parts may be identified by the Creator, but the man, as such, has no identity till he is reorganized at the resurrection; hence if he should not be raised at all, he would never be identified again as a man.

Transfiguration.—Was the transfiguration of Christ a vision or a reality? that is, were Moses and Elias actually present?

Vallejo, Cal. A. J. Young.

At the close of the transfiguration scene, as recorded in Matt. 17: 1-9, "Jesus charged them saying, Tell the vision to no man, until the Son of man be risen again from the dead." The word horama, rendered vision, is from horao, to see, behold, to be admitted to witness, to see mentally. The word horama signifies "a thing seen, sight, appearance, a supernatural appearance, vision." Greenfield quotes as an example this very verse,—Matt. 17: 9. The word occurs in Acts 9: 10, 12. "And there was a certain disciple at Damascus, named Ananias; and to him said the Lord in a vision, Ananias. . . . And hath seen in a vision a man named Ananias coming in, and putting his hands on him." We have the word again in Acts 11: 5. "I was in the city of Joppa praying; and in a trance I saw a vision. A certain vessel descend, as it had been a great sheet, let down from heaven." In Acts 12: 9 we read: "And he . . . wist not that it was true which was done by the angel; but thought he saw a vision." This passage shows that if it had been a "true" or real person present, it would not have been proper to call it a "vision." Again: "And a vision appeared to Paul in the night. There stood a man of Macedonia, and prayed him, saying, Come over into Macedonia, and help us." Acts 16: 9. We think no one would claim that the Macedonian man was actually present with Paul. The word occurs in Acts 2: 17: "Your young men shall see visions." John uses the word to represent what he saw. "And thus I saw the horses in the vision, and them that sat on them." Rev. 9: 17.

We think these facts afford proof that the transfiguration vision was a supernatural appearance, hence it was not necessary that Elijah and Moses should be actually seen in vision as John saw the martyrs before they were born; also the new heavens and earth which are not yet prepared.

"In my Flesh."—Bro. Grant:—Will you be so kind as to inform me through the Crisis as to the proper rendering of the Hebrew of Job 19: 26: "Yet in my flesh shall I see God." Is "in my flesh" correct? If so, what authorities sustain this rendering? I have heard it asserted that the proper rendering is, without my flesh shall I see God. I cannot harmonize this rendering with many other passages of Scripture. J. J. Smith.

Long Island, Jackson Co., Ala.

C. P. Carey, Geo. R. Noyes, American Bible Union, Breeches, Boothroyd, and the Bishop's Bible render it "in my flesh." Fry renders the verse as follows: "After I awake, shall this be brought to pass, that I shall see Eloah of my flesh," i. e., "of my nature and kindred."

The ancient Coptic version reads: "That he may raise up my skin which endures these things; for these things have come upon me from the Lord."—Henry Tattam, LL.D. DD., F. R. S.

The Bishop's Bible reads: "For I am sure that my Redeemer liveth, and that I shall rise out of the earth in the latter days; that I shall be clothed again with this skin, and see God in my flesh. Yea, I myself shall behold him, not with other, but with these same eyes."

Some understand it to mean "from my flesh"; i. e., Job would look upon God from the same flesh, from the same eyes that he then possessed, thus declaring the literal resurrection and reorganization of the same eyes. We believe this was his meaning. He will look "from without" the same eyes, in the same body.

Casting out Spirits.—In Matt. 8: 16, we find: "When the even was come, they brought unto him many that were possessed with devils; and he cast out the spirits with his word, and healed all that were sick. Can you understand from this that he cast out the "breath of life?" If you do, I cannot."

E. Shepard.

Certainly not. It is very evident that the word "spirit" in this passage has no reference to the "breath of life," but to the spirit of devils, who had taken possession of certain persons. The devils, or demons, take possession of men just as a mesmerizer does of his subject. The mesmeric power cast upon the medium is the spirit of the mesmerizer. By means of that magnetic influence, or spirit, he takes possession of the man and controls him. When he is cast out, that spirit, or magnetic power is taken away, and the medium is now no longer under his control. The demons operate just as a mesmerizer operates upon his subjects.

Bro. Grant:—Please explain Heb. 12: 22, relative "to the spirits of just men made perfect." J. B. B.

It should be observed that the word "just" is applied to the "men," and not to the "spirits." It does not read just spirits of men, but "spirits of just men." We understand the passage to mean that these "just men" were thus called because their spirits, or dispositions, had been subdued by the Spirit of God; and the old nature, or filthy spirit had been removed to make room for an indwelling Savior. Hence they had become new creatures in Christ. They had the dispositions, or spirits "of just men." The term men represents the personalities who had the moral character; else the word "just" would not be applied to that term, instead of the word "spirits." The men are "made perfect," and their "spirits," or feelings, are in harmony with the character "of just men."

Bro. Grant:—Please tell me the meaning of the following text: "No man can come to me, except the Father which has sent me draw him." Wm. Jackson.

San Francisco, Cal.

We understand this passage to mean that all are drawn to Christ by the power of the Holy Spirit. Says Paul: "The manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal." 1 Cor. 12: 7. We do not think any one would come to Christ if it were not for the drawing power of the Holy Spirit. Some yield, and some resist its invitations. Stephen said to the Jews: "Ye do always resist the Holy Ghost; as your fathers did, so do ye." Acts 7: 51. Men may yield or resist as they may choose. Some accept the drawing, while others refuse.

Light Wanted.—Bro. Grant:—I desire light on the following subject:—Did the thief die with the Savior? that is, on the same day? Where is the proof? and when did he die?

Vallejo, Cal. A. J. Young.

The Jews began their day at sunset. The Savior expired at three o'clock in the afternoon. The next day was the preparation day for the Sabbath. On the "preparation" day following the one in which Christ was crucified, the soldiers came and brake the legs of the then living thieves, so that their bodies could be taken down before the Sabbath commenced.

"But when they came to Jesus, and saw that he was dead already, they brake not his legs." John 19: 31-33. Here we think is positive proof that the Savior died the day before the thieves expired.

Bro. O. R. Fassett, 472 Jessie St., San Francisco, Cal., writes Nov. 3d, 1871:—

"There is a great desire that you should revisit this city, and adjacent cities, if possible. The fruit of such a visit would tell more than at first. We want a protracted meeting in our house of worship, which is of large capacity. We want your help in this protracted effort, and need you as soon as you can arrange to come. The churches since you left, I have understood, have determined, through their ministers, to "put this jackass doctrine down," as they indecently call it. But, the Lord willing, we will, if you come, or do not, make it the beast to bring the Lord into this city. We could covet no greater honor. We do hope the Mission Board will deem it advisable to send you this way to help us."

"SUPPOSED THAT THEY HAD SEEN A SPIRIT."

Did the disciples fancy that they were gazing upon a disembodied human spirit? Some who suppose that the disciples were formerly Pharisees, and knowing that the Pharisees believed in the dual nature of man, have been led to suppose that the disciples conjectured that they saw a ghost. But this impression is incorrect; for (1) the Pharisees believed that those souls which were not entitled to transmigration immediately went down into the bowels of the earth, whether good or bad, and consequently could not be walking around on the sea to scare folks; so even if the disciples had not been dispossessed of the views of the Pharisees, they knew better than to look for human ghosts above ground. (2) It is not true that all the disciples were once Pharisees, but all saw alike under the teachings of Christ, and consequently their old theories had been revolutionized. (3) They knew that Jesus was constantly casting out evil spirits, sometimes called devils, and consequently knew that such spirits existed among men; and it is far more reasonable to suppose that they imagined that they saw a satanic spirit, than a kind of spirit that they did not believe lived above ground after the death of the body, especially as not a word is said about a human, or disembodied spirit.

Others have conjectured that the disciples merely supposed, at the time of the sight, that they were gazing upon a phantom, a mere appearance without a reality. This is but charging the disciples with superlative folly, for they were "terrified and affrighted," which would have been excessive foolishness on their part, provided they supposed at the time that it was what we call a phantom. They understood both phantasma and pneuma to sometimes indicate an evil spirit, and used the terms in this sense. W. S.

UNIVERSALISM IN NEW CLOTHES.

The older phase of Universalism has sought to maintain the final salvation of all immaterial men, leaving all material men eternally enveloped in death; but I have recently met a new phase of this lenient theory, claiming that all material men (save a few notorious rebels) will be saved after experiencing a resurrection from the dead, in a new probation. Not a single passage of Scripture is adduced that says a word about saving resurrected sinners; but the whole superstructure is built upon inferences deduced from illegitimate premises, or misapplied scripture, and that, too, in opposition to the strongest statements of inspiration, affirming that the dead shall come forth to reap a reward in harmony with their character, "they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation."

To say the least that can be said about damnation, it indicates something entirely different from salvation. As Christ is to "judge the quick and the dead at his appearing," and as that judgment is infallible, how can it be rescinded, or changed into salvation in the case of the sinner, seeing it is pronounced "everlasting punishment," or "everlasting destruction"? As it is affirmed that he "shall reward every man according to his works," will the divine Judge repudiate his own decision, or revoke his own execution of reward? Will he undo his own work? As all whose names are not written in the book of life are to be cast into the lake of fire, which is the second death, let one text be brought to prove that God will resurrect them from the second death, before attempting to invalidate God's judgment decree. W. S.

"BLESSED IS THAT SERVANT."

A blessing is pronounced upon the servants who shall be found "giving meat in due season" at the Savior's return; and the opposing class, who smite those who are thus giving this meat, are represented as saying, "My Lord delayeth his coming"; from which, as the two classes are antagonistic, we are led to the conclusion that the class who give meat in due season are proclaiming the coming of the Lord. Without doubt, the proclamation of the Savior's coming is here represented as meat in due season to the household of faith; and it is equally true that those who array themselves against this message, and cry, "My Lord delayeth his coming," fall under divine censure, and incur a fearful doom among the rest of the Lord's enemies.

But while this is true, we should not for a moment conclude that all who are not engaged in giving meat in due season are to be cut off; for there are many who have never seen the light, and consequently have not rejected it. While on the one hand, they are not proclaiming this great truth; on the other hand, they are not fighting it; so while they are not entitled to this special blessing, they have not incurred the fearful woe pronounced against those who willfully array themselves against this great judgment message. It is not wise to fight against God. W. S.

"A NATION BORN AT ONCE."

Isaiah's question, "Shall a nation be born at once?" is often applied to the conversion of the world, when it is supposed whole nations, by the interposition of irresistible, converting power, shall be christianized. While listening to such an exposition of this scripture, the query arises, Has God so far in this dispensation acted upon the right principle in offering salvation to the nations of earth? If so, will he, in the same dispensation, repudiate that right principle, and resort to overwhelming power that shall carry all before it like an irresistible tornado? If he should really hereafter exert his saving power in such a miraculous manner as to take the world by storm, could not the unsaved ones in the first part of this dispensation justly plead at the judgment that they, too, might have been saved, provided the same power had been exercised on them, and thus charge God with being a respecter of persons? If God has correctly commenced the work of saving men by faith, he will not repudiate it for the principle of compulsion, for the sake of saving a whole nation at once. But the text does not refer to conversion at all, but to a resurrection birth—"Before she travailed, she brought forth, . . . was delivered of a man child [the man Christ Jesus, "the first born from the dead"]. . . . Shall the earth be made to bring forth in one day? Or shall a nation be born at once?" They are born from the "earth," by a resurrection. W. S.

CONGRATULATORY.

THE CAUSE IN PHILADELPHIA.

W. D. BRICKNER.

Bro. Grant:—I deem your "Hygiene" department in the World's Crisis very valuable indeed. "The Children's Corner" is cosy, inviting, and instructive; affording, doubtless, a great deal of pleasure and real enjoyment to the little ones. I like it much, deeming it quite a relief, shall I say the sunshine, over the heavier and argumentative portions of the paper. The column of correspondence is entertaining, and your "letter" extracts I love to read; meeting as they often seem to do a ready response in my own emotional nature, they have afforded me many sweet and happy repasts.

The cause appears to be in a healthful condition in Philadelphia, though progressing slowly. The brethren meet regularly on Sundays at some four or five places. The "Evangelist's Christian Church," Brandywine St., east of Sixteenth, appears in a very flourishing condition, having frequent feasts of love. I am reminded just here, and doubtless there are many believers yet among us, who will remember with happy pleasure, the many precious seasons we enjoyed as we sat together in heavenly places in 1844 and '5, when filled with the warm and burning zeal imparted by the every-day living, and bright expectancy of the coming of Jesus. The simple mention of the Julianna St. church, and its happy services in 1844, will fill the breast of many with fond recollections, when Father Miller, Geo. Storrs, Lemuel Osler, Joshua V. Himes, Stuart, and many others of like precious faith, imparted to crowding, eager, anxious and earnest listeners their powerful argumentary conclusions from the long line of fulfilled and unfulfilled prophecy, with all the convincing logic and ardor of holy men, believing, nay, expecting the certainty of what they said. The very singing of this zealous, working Zion; their ardent songs of praise, and expectation sweet, were so transporting in the buoyancy of its heavenward bearings, that even then and there we met, at least by faith, our Jesus in mid-air.

But, ah, what changes! Sorrows and distress have many of us experienced since then. Many temptations without, certainly, if not fears within. "Many shall be made white and tried." But have we attained the purity that should accrue through patience and trial? Have we thereby learned the wisdom and the practice of holy living that shall brighten our character, our nature, more and more to the perfect day? Some are still pursuing the humble, even tenor of their way.

How it Worked.—The progress of the Chicago fire was marked by one peculiarity—it resembled a warlike advance and battle. The wind carried the embers and burning brands to a great distance, and thus like skirmishes were always going on far in advance of the main body. The advanced guard or light divisions followed these, and swept away the buildings which had resisted the flying sparks, but left the great blocks—the Custom House, Sherman House, Post Office, Tribune building, etc., almost unscathed, until the main body, traveling more slowly, came up and swept these into utter nothingness. Thus the sight was terribly grand. Perhaps a mile to the northward small jets of smoke showed where the embers had alighted. A few hundred yards nearer five or six small fires, at some distance from each other, had broken out. Behind these again came a long and unbroken line of flame, sweeping away everything light, and behind this was a confusion of smoke and flame burning nearer the ground, while here and there stood up the stouter buildings, each a burning pyramid, like islands of fire in a sea of flame and smoke. It was this that baffled the firemen. They could never reach the outskirts of the fire. If they moved back and took a fresh position, the fire went over their heads and flanked them.

LETTER FROM CALIFORNIA.

To the Crisis:—An audience of one hundred and fifty or more attended at the Christian Chapel, Mission St., where Eld. Fassett officiates, last Sunday. A strong sermon was preached on the first chapter of 1st Thess.,—a "running commentary"; and two deacons were ordained. Eld. Howell was also in the pulpit, and participated in the ordination ceremonies.

I send you a S. F. Bulletin, in an editorial in which it is admitted that the greatest war of modern times appears to be threatened; and the general disintegration of the governments of Europe is regarded as an event of probable record within a short time. Says the Bulletin of to-day:—"The precise significance of this vast armament [Russian] is, as yet, matter of conjecture; but it is a menace to all Europe, which indicates the probabilities that the Continent is soon to be the theatre of war on a larger scale than has been witnessed in modern times;—and recalls the predictions of the great Napoleon, as to the Cossack overrunning Europe." "The 'local forces' comprise every man between the ages required for the service, and no exemption is granted except upon petition and proofs presented to special courts, constituted to hear such cases. This enormous force is to at once go into training, and is being rapidly supplied with arms and equipments."

This is a notice of the day's development, made in a daily printed "way off" on the Pacific.

And you are reading to-night, undoubtedly, of the destruction of the whaling fleet in the Northern Pacific; and the tragedy of shipwreck, in which one man is mercifully spared one hundred and nine days, though without bread, and with only such brackish water as he could obtain from a sail set to catch the rain! The latest contribution from our side to the growing misery of the world.

And to-night, Elder, we have tidings of the destruction of a large amount of property in Vallejo—the pleasant and growing city where you found so many kind friends, and where a thriving Second Advent church has been established.

I am satisfied that the San Francisco church will grow steadily and healthfully under Eld. Fassett. He presents the appearance of being a man who will wear well; and his discourses are of the building-up kind. Now if Eld. Grant would come here next month, and make a "thorough canvass"—as petitioners say—there would be a great uprising all over the State, and out-coming, on the Second Advent truths. The signs of the times are getting too plain to admit of any scoffing among entirely sensible christian men. And now you will hear men saying, daily, at the stock-brokers' corner on California street, in the midst of the crowd's conversation—"It looks as if that fellow Grant was right in these days!"

Prof. Fowler has been here lecturing on "The immortality of the soul demonstrated from the nature of man" (the funniest title I ever read)—and Dr. B. J. Smith has been lecturing in refutation of many of the pet fallacies of the ancient Phrenological Professor. Dr. Smith said to me to-day that "that man Grant did more to awaken people in this city, so that they could comprehend the real nature, physiology and powers of man, than any one who has ever visited these shores. Why don't he come again?" Dr. Smith is a Hydropathic physician, who has a large Cure in San Francisco; and is a very able and candid man.

Constable's work on the "Duration and Nature of Future Punishment" has met with a large sale in this city; and any republications from his pen hereafter will be eagerly sought for by inquiring minds among the Orthodox in San Francisco. It seems to me as if it only required a little more time to drive out the God-dishonoring doctrine of eternal torment from all the Protestant churches of the land. So far as the belief of the masses is concerned, it may be said to be "out" already—Universalism and Restorationism taking its place. And it does look as if it was to be—that the truth should slip in on the life and death question. May be not. C.

San Francisco, Nov. 7th, 1871.

Correspondence.

From Sr. Hattie Spear.

Bro. Grant:—While reading the cheering letters from others, I feel like adding my mite with the rest in offering praise to that dear Jesus, who has done so much for us all. Oh, praise the Lord. Let all that have breath praise him. He says, "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." Now this promise is just as sure as any; and if we believe, we shall ask in faith, and be heard, for his ear is opened to our cry, and his eyes are over his children.

I will write you what the Lord has done for me. A year ago last spring, I was taken sick. We employed one doctor after another, but to no avail. I grew no better, but weaker. About the first of last August, Bro. William Hawke and Bro. Sevey, moved by the Spirit of God, came to our place to visit me. They asked me the question, "Can you throw away your medicine, and trust in the Lord?" I told them I could; and we kneeled down. They laid on hands, and offered prayer for my recovery. Prayer was heard. The prayer of faith healed the sick. Oh, praise Him who is able to do such things, and give him all the glory. I have not taken one drop of medicine since that time. Before I was healed, I could not ride but a very short distance without being very weary; but since then, I have been thirty miles away from home to attend a conference, enjoyed the meetings, came home refreshed, and attended to the duties of a coming conference at our place the next week. Who can doubt for a moment that there is a God in Israel? There is a balm in Gilead, there is a physician near. Why not trust in that arm which is able to save, instead of the arm of flesh which is weak. Oh, for a faith like the good Daniel's, a faith that will not shrink, but trust patiently in the Lord.

West Gardiner, Me., Oct. 14th.

From Bro. E. A. Graham.

Bro. Grant:—I sigh for the land of rest. O when will the glad moment come, when I shall lay down my armor and dwell with Christ at home, in the kingdom? O for our great and glorious King to hasten his appearing, and take his subjects to dwell with himself. We know no joys in this world of sin and wickedness. This wilderness world is not our home; we look for a better home coming down from God out of heaven; a holy city and a heavenly, the New Jerusalem. We are weary of wandering round and round this vale of sin and gloom, when we are so oft by affliction sharply tried. We long to leave the unhallowed ground, and dwell with Christ at home. O, how sacred and sweet these two words, Christ and home. There shall we know those tranquil joys that cannot be known here. There shall we rest secure within the vail. Now we see through a glass darkly, but there we shall see face to face our blessed Redeemer, who is the light of our holy city.

"And the city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it; for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof." Rev. 21: 23. "And God shall wipe away all tears from our eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things have passed away." Rev. 21: 4. O what a blessed place that will be! Let us all strive to enter therein, for "he that overcometh shall inherit all things." Rev. 21: 7.

Portland, Me.

From Bro. John Maxim.

Bro. Grant:—I saw by an editorial in a late Crisis, that you suggest that your correspondents and brethren should write their experiences for publication in the Crisis. I think this is a good idea. Nothing would please me more, and I think the brethren and readers of the paper in general would be equally pleased and benefited by the perusal of those experiences. I find the experience of christians often published in other religious journals, and I think that one or more columns of the Crisis should be devoted to this object.

In respect to my own religious experience, I would merely say, that my attention was called to the importance of seeking religion in early life. At the age of thirteen years, in 1808, I united with the Congregationalist church in this town, "running well" for a while, until about the year 1820, when Universalism began to be preached here, showing the absurdity of orthodoxy and endless misery. I then embraced the doctrine, and wrote and labored hard to support it, until about the year 1842, when I renounced it, and subsequently embraced those Bible truths advocated in the Crisis. I say Bible truths, for after long experience and prayerful study of the Scriptures, and the various opinions and traditions of men, I found no other religious system so congenial with the character of God and Christ. Pray for me, that I may "stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ has made us free, and be not entangled again in the yoke of bondage."

South Carver.

From Sr. P. M. Marston.

Dear Brothers and Sisters in Christ:—With sincere joy I again take my pen to write a few lines for the dear "Exchanger," to whom our Father bids us give the talent, one, two, or five, with which he has entrusted us, that at his coming he may receive his own with increase. Dear christian friends, my heart is glad for this "fellowship of the saints." I do love to assemble with all my Father's sons and daughters, whatever their name or country. And I do and will rejoice for the spread of the light and truth. The Lord's is an everlasting dominion. Defeat is not inscribed on his royal banners. The knowledge of the glory of the Lord is yet to cover the earth, as the waters now do the face of the great deep.

Believing, as I do, that our bodies are the "temple of the Holy Ghost," and that he who "defileth this temple, him will God destroy," I rejoice with the going forth of the noble men and women now laboring for health reform. Dear christian friends, let us join ourselves to this band who are so earnestly laboring to prepare a bride for the Lamb, cleansed from the filthiness that now defiles our land. "Put on thy beautiful garments, O Jerusalem."

Newport, N. H.

From Bro. D. Cogswell.

Brn. and Srs.:—Our next quarterly conference is called for Dec. 7th to 10th. You notice what our secretary, Bro. Brown, has said in regard to the debt of over $150 that rests upon us, which we must meet at once. Let every church in every place connected with this conference see that a collection is taken and sent in to the secretary, so that we shall be able to pay off the debt at the conference. I hope we shall not be disappointed in this matter. Our brethren with the tent have been laboring in new fields this season, where they have received but very little pay, so far as dollars and cents are concerned. The seed is sown. The judgment is coming. Let us do our duty as the people that the Lord has called out to do this very work.

Extracts from Letters.

Sister E. A. Pierce, Worcester, Mass., Oct. 16, 1871, writes:—"One year ago to-day, I spent a few moments in writing to you, telling you of the goodness of the Lord in leading me to see the truth; and now I want to say to you, that I am still rejoicing in hope, and that my love for the Lord is increasing every day. I can feel to put my whole trust in him, and if I have any trouble or difficulty, I tell Jesus, and leave all with him, knowing that all things will work together for good to those that love him. But sometimes I doubt, and ask myself, am I truly a child of God? for it says in his word, 'whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth;' but my cup overflows with blessings, of which I am unworthy, while many, who have spent a long life in active service for the Lord, and seem wholly prepared to see him, are suffering and afflicted; but I hope that will not be a test. My prayer has been, 'Lord, show me my own heart, and help me to live nearer to thee.' Pray for me that I may not be deceived, for I must have a home in the kingdom. I only ask to sit at Jesus' feet, and I shall be satisfied. It seems as if we had but a short time longer to watch and be faithful. Soon we shall see the sign of the Son of man, and my prayer is that we may be waiting and ready for his appearing."

Bro. B. Wing, New Providence, Iowa, writes:—"I want to tell you and the readers of your most valuable paper what I have seen. I am a poor man, who works by the day to support my little family; consequently take no paper; but a copy of the Crisis has by some means fallen into my hands, and I find it contains so much valuable reading, and gives so much light to one that is striving to gain an entrance into the kingdom of our Lord, that I must have it. So my mind goes to work to find out how to pay for it; and by a little calculation, I find that the money I spend in one year for tobacco will give it me just seven years; and as I am certain there is no good in tobacco to be compared with the paper, I have resolved to make the change. So enclosed you may find the first fifty cents that would go for tobacco; and if you will send the paper, I will keep it paid up by doing without my tobacco."

Bro. M. J. Hughes writes from Philadelphia Oct. 14th, 1871:—"I was much pleased to learn through the Crisis, and other sources, that at the Springfield campmeeting there had been a decided step taken towards spreading the light, and proclaiming the gospel of the kingdom to the people of the sunny South. I am very much interested in the prosperity of the people of the South. I wish to say to those who wish to correspond with me, that my address will be Woodsdale, Person Co., N. C. where I was for six months this last year. I was two months in Virginia, trying to hold up the gospel light. God speed the work that is to be begun this winter by his faithful servants. Pray for me, as I return to my field of labor. Pray for all that are engaged in mission work in the South, that the Lord may have a bride that shall enter at the strait gate."

Bro. A. J. Young, Vallejo, Cal., writes Nov. 6th, 1871:—"Sister Fassett has spoken to us the last two Sabbaths. We had large and attentive audiences. All were greatly interested, and listened with satisfaction. We feel impressed that there will be a good work here this winter. Bro. Fassett will be here next Sabbath; and next week, with the united labors of Bro. and Sr. Reed, will commence a protracted meeting. We wish you were here too. We feel encouraged to think you may be with us, and are asking the Lord to direct you this way, if consistent with his will."

Sister B. F. Farnham, Hillsdale, Mich., writes:—"We do not know how to do without our beloved Crisis. It is the best religious paper that we know of. It advocates the truths we love, and is all the preacher we have that speaks confidently of the speedy return of the Master. I hail with joy every additional sign, and every encouraging word. I am happy to know that there is a waking up to the subject of holiness, and entire consecration of heart and life. My brother, pray earnestly for me, that I may know the height and depth and length and breadth of perfect love."

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

Constantinople, Nov. 13. A firman has been issued by the Porte directing the Minister of Works to inaugurate a comprehensive system of public improvements in view of the network of railways projected by foreign capitalists in the Ottoman Dominions. The harbors will be improved, the rivers made navigable, new roads built and the old ones repaired, and every effort be made to establish lines of connection with the new railway from all parts of the country.

South America.

A heavy earthquake occurred at Iquique and the interior of Peru on the 5th of October. There was considerable damage done to the buildings in Iquique and a great panic among the people. The effects were more disastrous in the interior where the towns of Pica and Matilla were destroyed. There was scarcely a house left standing. A fire succeeded the earthquake in Pica. At Parapaca the church, Pantheon, eighteen houses and the dam of the river were destroyed.

The towns of Usmagama, Guaquina and Pachica also suffered severely. Very few lives were lost. The steamer Panama felt the earthquake at sea and Arequipa had shocks on the 4th and 10th, but no buildings were damaged.

DOMESTIC.

Terrible Ravages of the Famine.

New York, Nov. 14. In a letter in the London Times of the 1st inst., from Bushire, Persia, Sept. 23, an English official states that the people there are more emaciated than ever. At least twenty-five hundred besiege the English residence for food every morning, and in their rush actually crushed two women to death on the 21st. Infants and young children are lying about the streets scarcely recognizable as human beings.

Barbarous Outrages in North Carolina.

New York, Nov. 16. A Raleigh (N. C.) dispatch of the 14th states that six Ku-Klux were arrested in Yancey county, who are charged with murder, arson, burglary and other crimes. They had whipped Mr. Hensley and son, drove out W. C. Blakins and his wife and burned his house. They then went to the house of Alfred Brakins, a blind man, burst the doors open and beat him nearly to death. They then tore an infant from Mrs. Brakins, dashing it across the room. Three of the villains then outraged her. She is dying.

A Yorkville dispatch states that the prisoners there will be turned over to the United States civil authorities for trial next week. An official there states that it is evident that the Ku-Klux were supplied with funds from Tammany Hall, New York.

Another Ku-Klux Outrage.

Louisville, Ky., Nov. 17. The Courier Journal to-morrow will publish a startling letter from the South, which states that a society strong in numbers and wealth is organized, having for its object the importation of negro ruffians into the Northern States. The letter is very positive and specific. It says the plan is to furnish such negroes as are dangerous in every community the means of getting away, requiring them to go north of the Ohio river.

The society is opposed to the Ku-Klux. It claims that it has the right, in the absence of legal justice denied by the General Government, to get rid of its murder and marauders by money. It is alleged that the increase of negro criminals in the North during the last three months is the result of operations of this society. In a double-leaded leader the Courier Journal discourages the movement as revengeful and dangerous, and advises instead education and kindness to the negro.

The Plans of the Mormons.

Salt Lake, Nov. 14. There was nothing of interest in Court to-day. The jury at an early hour retired for business in charge of the Marshal. It is said that a number of well known citizens, polygamists, are making arrangements to send away their plural wives, should the decisions in the forthcoming trials for lascivious cohabitation go against the defendants. Nobody believes that any well-to-do Mormons think of abandoning their present homes and property because of the enforcement of the law against polygamy. The Mormons claim and earnestly believe that their plural wives doctrine is of God, but many express grave doubts as to the expediency of continuing its practice in violation of law.

New York, Nov. 17. A special dispatch from Scranton reports that the caving in of the mine at Hyde Park created great excitement. The first shock was felt about three o'clock of the morning of the 16th, when the people fled terror stricken from their dwellings. The caving of the ground, which occurred over the Oxford mine, caused a settling in the buildings overhead of some two feet. The area of ground covered in all about twenty acres. The damage to property will amount to over $150,000. Immense fissures were made in the principal avenues and streets. Many of the houses have been pulled down, and the whole town is in danger, as the ground is still settling. The post office has sunk some eighteen inches, and is still settling. The mines are deserted. At Scranton various streets are crowded with people discussing the situation.

Napoleon.—The London Times has received from a trustworthy source an account of a conversation recently held with the ex-Emperor Napoleon at Chiselhurst, and published with his permission. This may be regarded as strictly official, and as such is sure to command very wide consideration. "It is pretended," says the ex-Emperor, "that the Bonapartists are conspiring. I do not believe it. It is only parties who feel themselves in a minority in the country who have recourse to occult practices. Without illusions and without discouragement, I rely upon the justice of the French people, and I am resigned to my fate, whatever may be the decrees of Providence. Moreover when one has fallen from such a height, the first sentiment one experiences is not the desire to again mount upon the pinnacle, but to seek the causes of the fall in order to explain one's conduct and combat calumny, while still recognizing one's faults. To all those who have come from France to visit me I have held the same language: 'I am opposed,' I have said to them, 'to either intrigues or plots. France needs repose to enable her to recover from her disasters.' He would be most culpable who should seek to foment trouble for the advancement of his personal interests. The present Government is merely provisional, and does not in the future exclude any form of Government. To attempt to overthrow it would be a bad action; though my rights remain still intact, and so long as the people shall not have been regularly consulted, no decision of the Chamber can prevent me from being the legitimate Sovereign of France. I observe, with a certain degree of satisfaction, that the Republic is forced to act with severity against the very men who, during twenty-three years, attacked my Government, and to adopt many of the measures which I regarded as indispensable to the maintenance of order." Such in brief are the leading ideas expressed. In short, it will be seen that as aforetime he trusts that sooner or later a popular vote will re-instate him upon the throne of his uncle.—Christian Union.

Rev. S. H. Tyng, Junior, at the dedication of St. Paul's Episcopal church, in New York, made the following significant announcement:

"Let it be distinctly understood that this church will be free and independent, standing on the basis of the broadest sympathy with all those churches in its vicinity that hold to the common faith; and thus, while still clinging to our peculiar forms, which have come down to us from our fathers, we can extend a hand of welcome to all who worship in the name of our Savior."

Quarterly Conference.

It is high time for a call for a session of the Mass. Advent Conference. If any church would like the meeting held in their place the first week in Jan., 1872, let us know it, and we will issue a call for the same. Let us hear soon.

L. Boutell, for the Committee.

Vermont Conference.

The Second Quarterly Conference of the Advent Christian Church, for the State of Vermont, will be held at East Roxbury, Vt., commencing Wednesday evening, Dec. 6th, 1871, and continuing till Dec. 9th. Come, brethren in the ministry, young and old, from throughout the State, and let us prepare for a united effort in the Redeemer's cause. We hope also to have every church represented by a delegate. New York A. C. Conference.

The second quarterly session of the New York Advent Christian Conference, for the current year (D. V.), will be held with the church in the city of Rochester, commencing Thursday evening, Dec. 7th, and holding over the following Sunday. Immediate attention is asked to the appointment of delegates, and to the taking of the quarterly collections by the various churches. Our extended mission work with the tents this season has left a debt of over one hundred and fifty dollars upon us, that should be lifted at once, lest the mission preachers suffer this winter for lack of summer wages.

Dear brethren, come up again to the feast. Bring in your tithes and offerings. And while you open your treasures to the work, open your hearts to the Lord for the prosperity of Zion, and for the coming of Israel's King. The opening discourse will be given by Bro. Milton R. Miles.

D. Cogswell, President.
Wm. E. Brown, Secretary.

Protracted Meeting.

Providence permitting, a protracted meeting will commence in the Advent Chapel at Bonny Eagle, Me., Tuesday evening, Dec. 5th, and continue over the following Sunday. Elders Jesse Gay and A. Bellows are engaged, and Bro. A. A. Robinson is expected to be present and preach the word. We cordially invite the lovers of the "blessed hope" in this vicinity to come in and assist us in our efforts to prepare men for the soon coming judgment. C. H. Sweet, Pastor.

Protracted Meeting.

There will be a protracted meeting at Hall Stream, Hereford, P. Q. (Wesson school-house), commencing Thursday evening, Nov. 30th, and continuing as long as the good of the cause may require. For the Brethren, L. F. Cole.

I. N. Thompson.

Notice.

At our last quarterly meeting, there being no request for the next meeting, it was left to me to ascertain the desired place. As it is our annual meeting, and officers are to be appointed for the ensuing year, it should be held in some central place, easy of access to all interested. Any church desiring the next quarterly meeting will please correspond with me at South Killingly, Ct.

E. Bellows.

Geo. W. Brown, of So. Elliot.
John C. Shorey.

3. The names of the officers of the church in their place.

N. H. Adv. Chris. Conf.

Explanatory.

Not having heard from some of our principal churches in New Hampshire, in response to my request, I wish to say that the sole object of getting the information embraced in the notice is, to furnish the W. A. C. P. Association with some statistics relative to the N. H. Conference, to be published in the "Advent Year Book," which will be out about the first of December.

All Advent churches in New Hampshire sending me the information stated in the notice, will be mentioned in the forthcoming Advent Year Book.

A. W. Sibley, Secretary N. H. A. C. Conf.

Springfield Camp-ground.

To those who have buildings on the Springfield Camp-ground:—I find the houses nearly all open, as usual; and I have found a man who will move into Sr. Holden's house. They have no children, but will need something done to make it comfortable for winter, and I have let him move in to-day. The buildings are all shut up, and a man on the ground to keep them shut; and I just ask the owners of buildings to send me in what they think it is worth to them to know there is a man on the ground to take care of their buildings. This I have done on my own responsibility, as the committee have no funds in the treasury. The only way is to call for contributions. Act as you think best. Direct to Hiram Munger, Chicopee Falls, Mass.

Maine Mission Agency.

At our last annual State Conference, I was appointed to travel, and solicit and collect subscriptions and donations for the "Maine Mission and Tract Fund." I can devote but a part of the time to that work, as I go preaching through the State. I therefore appoint Eld. J. A. Libby to act in my stead, in the northern and western part of the State. He will call on you for aid in this mission work. Come, brethren, sisters, children and friends, you can all become members of this Mission Society, and give to help spread the truth.

I. C. Wellcome.

☞ Notice.

At a meeting of the Advent Christian Publication Society, held Aug. 23d, 1871, the following Preamble and Resolutions were adopted:—

Whereas, The churches have been misled, divided, and the cause of Christ injured, by the labors of unworthy men, who have been advertised as approved of the body by the publication of their appointments in the Crisis, therefore,

Resolved, That the Editorial officers be requested to withhold the publication of all appointments for persons to them unknown, and also those whose labors tend to divide the church, and those who preach doctrines calculated to drown men in perdition.

Resolved, That when local and personal difficulties in any place cause brethren to establish an opposition meeting, that no appointments for that meeting be published until a proper investigation of the difficulties shall be made; and when sufficient time has passed for such an investigation, and no effort has been made by the original meeting for it, then the appointments for that meeting shall be withheld also.

Resolved, That the question of publishing appointments, and notices of meetings, be left to the Editor, Editorial Committee, and Business Agent.

A. W. Sibley, Secretary Adv. Chris.
Publication Society.

"PEACE LIKE A RIVER."—Isaiah 48.

Give me a heart of calm repose
Amid the world's loud roar;
A life that like a river flows
Along a peaceful shore.

I would roll onward to the deep
In brightness, not in foam;
And 'mid earth's noise, in stillness keep
My soul's interior home.

Come, Holy Spirit, hush my heart
With gentleness divine;
Indwelling peace thou canst impart,
O, make the blessing mine!

Above these scenes of storm and strife,
There spreads a region fair;
Give me to live that higher life,
And breathe that purer air.

Allay this feverish, restless mood,
Arrest life's eager chase,
And quench the thirst for earthly good
With thy bedewing grace.

Come, Holy Spirit, breathe that peace
Which flows from pardoned sin;
Then shall my soul her conflict cease,
And find a heaven within.

A SERMON.

The Resurrection, the First Fruits and Harvest.

C. B. BARNES.

"And God hath both raised up the Lord, and will also raise up us by his own power."—1 Cor. 6: 14.

This passage of Scripture contains a statement that constitutes the basis of our hope as Christians, both for the present and future. The resurrection of our Lord is the foundation of our hopes for pardon and justification in the present; while the future resurrection of the human race becomes the foundation on which we build our hopes of eternal life. One clause in the text is the statement of a fact: "God hath . . . raised up the Lord;" the other clause is the statement of a doctrine: he "will also raise up us by his own power." In the Scriptures, all doctrines are based upon certain facts, and the doctrines grow out of the facts; hence, to establish the doctrine we must prove the alleged fact to be true. For this purpose let us devote our attention to Paul's statement.

I. "God hath . . . raised up the Lord." All who receive the Bible as supreme authority profess to believe this statement; but when we come to compare views with one another, we find a diversity of opinions entertained as to the nature of the fact therein declared. One class understand the resurrection of Christ to be a "spiritual" resurrection, which occurred at the moment of his death, and which consisted in the release of an immaterial entity from its bondage in a tenement of clay. Another class understand it to be a literal resurrection; a resurrection of that which was born of Mary, and which died on Calvary's tree. Now what we want to learn is, which of these two theories is according to the Bible. It is affirmed here that the Bible sustains the view of the literal resurrection of Christ, because

1. It did not occur until three days after his death. It will be seen by all that if this assertion can be proved true, the theory of a spiritual resurrection, occurring at the moment of death, will be proved. In speaking of his death to his disciples, Jesus said, "The Son of man shall be betrayed unto the chief priests, and unto the scribes, and they shall condemn him to death, and shall deliver him to the Gentiles, to mock, and to scourge, and to crucify him: and the third day he shall rise again." (Matt. 20: 18, 19.) And on the "day that followed the day of the preparation, the chief priests and Pharisees came together unto Pilate, saying, Sir, we remember that that deceiver said, while he was yet alive, After three days I will rise again. Command therefore that the sepulchre be made sure until the third day, lest his disciples come by night and steal him away, and say unto the people, He is risen from the dead; so the last error shall be worse than the first." (Ib. 27: 62–64.) It is very evident from this latter passage, the chief priests were looking for a literal fulfillment of the Savior's words. Had they supposed the rising again, to which Jesus alluded, was a spiritual one, they would not have had so great anxiety about the contents of the sepulchre. Further, as the Savior had said the Son of man should "be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth" (Matt. 12: 40), and on the third day he should rise again; and as we know the disciples found the sepulchre empty on the morning of the third day after his crucifixion, we are safe in concluding his predictions of his own resurrection were literally fulfilled.

2. The Scriptures affirm it was a resurrection of what was crucified and buried. It must be admitted by all that if this proposition can be sustained, it also will cause the theory of a spiritual resurrection to fall.

In the Jewish synagogue at Antioch, when Paul was given liberty to address the assembly, in speaking of Christ, he said, though his enemies "found no cause of death in him, yet desired they Pilate that he should be slain. And when they had fulfilled all that was written of him, they took him down from the tree, and laid him in a sepulchre, but God raised him from the dead." Acts 13: 28–30. And similar testimony comes from Peter when addressing the Jewish rulers—"We ought to obey God rather than men. The God of our fathers raised up Jesus, whom ye slew and hanged on a tree." (Ib. 5: 29, 30.)

And again we have still more conclusive testimony, if possible, in the Epistle to the Corinthians: "I delivered unto you first of all, that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures; and that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the Scriptures." (ch. 15: 3, 4.) Here it is declared as plainly as words can declare it, that the resurrection of Christ was a resurrection of what had been slain, had been hanged on a tree, and had been laid in a sepulchre; so again we think we are correct when we maintain that God literally raised his Son, Jesus Christ, from the dead.

Thus far I have been merely presenting what is taught in the Scriptures as being the nature of this alleged fact, without inquiring into the credibility of the statements therein made. Hence I wish to present a portion of the evidence we have that these statements are true. We have the testimony of men who died in consequence of their faith. Rather than retract what they everywhere affirmed, all but one met violent deaths. If it is admitted that they were honest men, the point is gained, because honest men would not deceive the people by telling that which they knew to be utterly false. It will not do either, to say they were deceived themselves, and thus preached an error, although sincere in it. That which they alleged to be true was of a nature that they could not have been deceived in. It was an allegation of what they knew positively to be either true or false. Had the resurrection they declared been like what we hear so much about at the present time, namely, a spiritual one, there might be a little probability that they were deceived, as their shadows upon the wall would have had as much substance as the spirit entities of theologians of the present day; but what they declared was nothing of the kind. The disciples testified that they had heard Christ speak; that they had handled him; that they had eaten and drank with him, and associated intimately with him during a period of forty days after his resurrection, that they had seen him taken bodily from the earth, and ascend until the clouds hid him from their view. Now these things are of such a nature that a man in his right mind could not be mistaken about them. It would be utterly impossible to work such a monstrous deception upon the senses of so many. Some five hundred in all. 1 Cor. 15: 6.

The force of this having been seen by certain infidels, they have boldly declared that the apostles knowingly deceived the people when they told the story of the resurrection. But if this be so, then the onus probandi lies upon them who make such declaration, and they must show some motive or motives sufficiently strong to incite them in the propagation of this falsehood, for no man even wilfully does wrong without a motive of some kind or other.

If, then, this story of the resurrection be a falsehood, what could have been their motive in telling it? It could not have been to attain worldly honor, for never were men more unpopular than they. It could not have been riches they sought, for, in consequence of their firm adherence to this story, they were obliged to sacrifice their all—business, houses, and lands, and all that man naturally holds most dear. It could not have been a desire for revenge, because in their teachings they urged the necessity of, and in their lives manifested, a meek and forgiving spirit toward all their oppressors. Neither could their object have been to lead lives of quiet and peacefulness, for they had been told previously that in the world they would have tribulation; their Master had told them the time was coming when men would think they were doing God service in killing them. And one of the foremost of his apostles declared that they were counted as the filth of the world, the offscouring of all things.

Now, if these men sacrificed everything which conduced to insure their temporal welfare; if we fail to find anything in their lives which manifests a selfish motive; if we find them adhering persistently to this story at all times and under all circumstances, candor must acknowledge their honesty and sincerity. And, as we have already shown, they could not have been deceived in the matter, it follows conclusively that their story was true, and we can quote Peter's words with assurance: "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead." (1 Pet. 1: 3.)

This truth, the foundation of all our hopes, is firmly established. It is the pillar of truth that successfully resists all attempts at its overthrow. It has stood, it stands, and will stand, until that day when it will be most certainly manifested by the bright and glorious appearing of Him whom infidels have derided, whom apostates have denied, yet who has been the hope and trust of his people until now. Christ lives! and because he lives, his people shall live also. This brings us to the latter part of the text:

II. God "WILL ALSO RAISE UP US."

This is the doctrine that grows out of the fact. But here, as before, we must ascertain the meaning of the promise, before we can fully appreciate it.

1. I affirm first, it is not a moral resurrection. It is readily granted that a moral resurrection is meant in a few passages, as for instance in Eph. 2: 1, "And you hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins"; but that is not the meaning of other passages wherein the resurrection is spoken of. As the Scriptures speak of a moral and literal death, so they also speak of a moral and literal resurrection.

Further, this theory of a moral resurrection, if correct, would prove Jesus to have been unholy, because he is called the "first fruits." (1 Cor. 15: 23.) And if the harvest be a moral resurrection, then it follows conclusively that the "first fruits" must be moral also, and in that case Jesus must have had a resurrection from trespasses and sins — to affirm which, is at once to destroy our only hope of atonement.

2. I affirm in the next place, it is not a spiritual resurrection. This has already been established concerning Christ's resurrection; it can also be thus proved concerning the resurrection of his people. The resurrection of Jairus' daughter was a literal one; the revivification of the widow's son, and of Lazarus, declare most plainly a literal resurrection; but that which must forever settle the question is the resurrection of our Savior. That was literal; a resurrection of what had been buried; and being the "first fruits" of the harvest, it follows that the future resurrection must be literal also.

And this we find to have been the belief of all the Old Testament saints. Job expresses his expectation in these words: "Man lieth down, and riseth not; till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep. O that thou wouldest hide me in the grave, that thou wouldest keep me secret until thy wrath be past, that thou wouldest appoint me a set time, and remember me. If a man die, shall he live again? All the days of my appointed time will I wait, till my change come. Thou shalt call, and I will answer thee; thou wilt have a desire to the work of thine hands." (Ch. 14: 12-15.) In the midst of troubles and calamities, David's belief led him to say, "Thou which hast showed me great and sore troubles, shalt quicken me again, and shall bring me up again from the depths of the earth." (Ps. 71: 20.) The Spirit of inspiration led Isaiah to say, "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust: for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead." (Ch. 26: 19.)

It is not necessary to quote further; enough proof has been furnished to demonstrate that the resurrection promised in the Bible is a literal one. Indeed, so plain and forcible is the language of these texts here brought forward, that those believing in a literal resurrection, adopt their mode of expression in preference to any other. In thus showing that the resurrection is neither a moral nor a spiritual one, it has been sufficiently proved that it must be literal.

3. It is not a mortal resurrection; i. e., it is not that resurrection of christians to a mortal life and corruptible bodies, like what they had when living in the flesh. In 1 Cor. 15: 42-44, Paul states the true view as follows: "So also is the resurrection of the dead. It is sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption." Aphtharsia, here rendered incorruption, is elsewhere rendered immortality (Rom. 2: 7; 2 Tim. 1: 10.) Hence Paul's statement would as correctly read, "it is raised in immortality."

If, in the process of rising again, the body would have not undergone a change, why should such a marked contrast have been declared between the buried body and the resurrected body? If the body that was "sown in dishonor" is not to become glorious until after the resurrection, even if but an instant subsequently, what propriety in saying "it is raised in glory"? If the weak, "natural body" is to be such in the rising again, how could it have been truly affirmed by Paul, "it is raised in power" — "it is raised a spiritual body"? From this passage, then, we learn that all who are asleep in Jesus will have a resurrection to glory and immortality. They have seen their last of "weakness"; never again will they possess a "natural body"; when next they open their eyes, it will be with immortal sight that they shall gaze the landscape o'er. When next they breathe, it will be with immortal lungs. Blessed be God for the assurance we have that when the suffering christian closes his eyes in death, his experience with mortality is forever ended. Never again will he be liable to sorrow, pain or death, for "the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed." (v. 52.)

From the train of thought which the text has suggested, a variety of reflections might be made. I call your attention to the following:—

1. The security of God's people. If he in whom they trust had remained in the tomb; if he had been held powerless and lifeless in the grasp of death, then they might well be fearful of heart, for in that case their faith and hope would be in vain; they would be yet in their sins, and, in a word, they would be of all men most miserable. But in that the Holy One of God was not permitted to see corruption, his people can and do have confidence, knowing that they have "a merciful and faithful high priest", who "ever liveth to make intercession for them."

2. The confidence they have in the hour of death.

"Sad were the life we may part with to-morrow,
If tears were our birthright, and death were our end;
But Jesus hath cheered the dark valley of sorrow,
We'll rise when he comes, and to meet him, ascend."

All mere earthly hopes are ended forever in death. The proudest monarch on earth, if he despises the claims of Jesus of Nazareth, will be brought down in death to the level of the lowest wretch. The only hope that can give consolation and confidence in the hour of death, is the christian's hope. When Mr. Henry was dying, he said to a friend, "You have been used to take notice of the sayings of dying men; this is mine: that a life spent in the service of God and communion with him, is the most comfortable and pleasant life that any one can live in this world." Dr. Watts said, "I bless God, I can lie down with comfort at night, unsolicitous whether I awake in this world or another." Dr. Gill said, "I have nothing to make me uneasy." And his last words were, "O my Father! my Father!" (Buck on Experience.) Here it is that the power of Christ's religion is seen and felt. The infidel may die perhaps with no fear, but he also dies with no joy. He may deride the christian's faith, and die without it, but he dies with no bright hopes of a future.

On the other hand, the christian has experienced the joys coming from a vivid knowledge of sins forgiven, and acceptance in the Beloved, and he therefore knows that He who first gave him life, who first gave him sight, and has ever since been a present help in every time of need; he knows that he who has been thus steadfast through life, will not fail him in the last hour of death, and therefore he says with calmness, "God hath both raised up the Lord, and will also raise up us by his own power."

SALVATION FROM SIN.

There is much said and written at the present time, on the subject of sanctification, or full salvation, and many profess to be saved to the uttermost, who, according to the Bible, are at the most but reclaimed backsliders from justification. Yet they profess to enjoy all the fulness of the gospel, and teach in accordance with this experience, that the work is not very great, and obtained at little cost to carnal self.

It has become quite fashionable to speak on the subject of holiness, and to profess it in certain circles. Many have a kind of sentimental holiness which they profess, that has cost them none of their sins, or conformity to the world; but which brings to them the name of Rabbi! Rabbi! in which they greatly glory, not remembering that "that which is highly esteemed among men is an abomination to God."

Notwithstanding the many fine theories presented at the present day, it appears to be a very simple, although a very radical work, to be saved from self and sin.

In order to obtain full salvation, it is necessary to be

1st. Clear in justification. Standing full in the favor of God.

2d. There will be deep and pungent convictions in the soul. Often more pungent than that felt by the soul seeking justification. As the penitent sinner feels pungent conviction for his actual transgressions, so the seeker of full salvation will feel deep and pungent conviction for all inbred sin.

3d. The soul will drink deep of the cup of repentance before God.

4th. The process of humiliation before the Lord must be perfect.

5th. There must be an entire consecration to God, and this not a wholesale consecration as at justification, but a particular one, or one thing at a time, must be laid upon the altar.

6th. When these conditions have all been complied with, it is then the soul must believe and enter into full salvation in Christ.

And when this is done, we shall sooner or later receive the sealing of the Spirit, or the impress of the Holy Ghost whereby we are sealed unto the day of redemption. And we can then reflect the image of the blessed Savior perfectly, and go forth strong in the Lord and in the power of his might.—The Earnest Christian.

LETTER FROM SR. C. TULLER.

To the friends of Jesus, and the poor freed people, I again send greetings. By an action of the A. A. Missionary Society, in making me a beneficiary, I feel more than ever, if possible, allied to those of like faith. I discard sectarianism, and dearly love Christians of every name, but cannot help feeling more at home among those looking for the coming of Jesus, and what funds I receive from them, I wish them to know how they are appropriated. I feel that money is a choice article in these last days, when there is so much to be done, so many openings for spreading the word of life, to raise fallen humanity to a condition of heirship with us to a life forever enduring, of spotless purity. When I realize the deep degradation of human nature, and to what a transformation it may attain, I feel that no sacrifice is too great to help raise even one soul.

Allow me to ask, do we as a people have enough care for the children and youth, especially of this people, who have been all their lives kept in ignorance? There are very many among them who inherit so much of beastly nature, and what intellect they ever had is so smothered, that it seems a hopeless task to try to teach them. They are pitiable objects; but our God will know just what to do with them. But there are many others, who, with a little care and encouragement, spring right upward towards light and knowledge, and are very happy in the attainment of ability to read the Bible and other books, to write letters to their friends, and advance to other branches of science; and the effect of this upon their character and habits is marked. Then their parents are so happy to see their children improve, and often say, Your humble sister is a "mighty nice teacher, only she don't whip enough." But that is just what I don't like to do. I try to entice them upward by love, and the presentation of their accountability to a higher power than the rod. Several of my scholars are real helpers, ready to pray when called upon. Last composition day, one writing to a friend says, "We are trying to be good down here." Another, "I am trying to be good every day." Their selections for declamation are mostly poetry from the "Young Pilgrim."

I know we are near the end of all things, but will not the Master be pleased to have us occupy this department of labor? Will it be lost? Had I a hundred lives, I could employ them in as many "little corners" like this. While women called to preach should go, or be sent, and evangelists should be scattered far and near, should not the teacher go and sow also? True, it requires sacrifice. Since my return to West Point, I have ate, drank, and slept in my school-room. Their congregations became so enlarged, it was thought best to remove the remaining partition, which took my room. There is a back kitchen, but too open to live in. But I do not suffer in anything but my pride, and the medicine for that has been severe, and I try now to take it with a good grace; for, dear brethren and sisters, we must be stripped of every thing unlike Jesus.

I have been greatly interested in reading of the movement among our people, and among other christians, pertaining to holiness of heart; and it seems to me that it is the blessed Spirit that is moving the people upon this subject. I am sure that an intellectual knowledge of the truths we so much love will not fit us for the marriage supper. Many there are, myself also, who have dwelt upon and contended for doctrinal points, when we are in heart and life far from being like the Pattern. Multitudes of us have lived from youth up in the seventh chapter of Romans, and contented ourselves therein, being scared at the cost of getting into the eighth; and even when the loving Spirit would sometimes force, as it were, into our minds glimmerings and gentle foretastes of deliverance from sin, we would allow Satan and our own sluggish natures to whisper, "'Tis not for us till these vile bodies are changed." And so we would go on, sinning and repenting. For one, I feel that we shall not be ready in this way for translation. May we never more rest till we reach our high privilege, and live free from condemnation.

The appropriation just made was in part for a stove, for which I had expressed a need. Allow me, dear friends, to explain in as few words as possible my financial condition in part. You who have read my letters from the first, remember my asking you to help pay for this house, for which I lacked $100. I received from you at that time between $30 and $40. It not being sufficient, and as it was late in the season, and my mind was so pressed to go forward, I hired $100, came, and paid for the house, and deeded it to the colored people for school and church purposes forever. There were many needs to get started, and sick and old ones to be cared for, and every dollar received was spent where it seemed absolutely needed. I applied to the Supt. of the Freedmen's Bureau, and he encouraged me that he would make an appropriation to meet the debt. But he neglected it till the Bureau expired, and I was afterward informed that he was a drunkard and unreliable. The note drew ten per cent interest, and was not pressed, and I always felt that I should have strength given to earn the amount, or it would be provided; and now my expectations seem in the way of realization. The lot, with this house, was not needed, and it has now been sold for $55, which will soon be paid and applied on the note, which now amounts to $120.

Now I shall feel so much lighter to have that off my hands, that I feel it is best to apply the gift of the Society for that purpose, which will reduce the debt to $15; and get along as I have done for two years with my little parlor-cook stove. This I shared last winter with two women, who were anxious to learn, and can do so again when we get our kitchen made warmer. I live as plain as I can and be comfortable; do all my own work, give to my school full seven hours a day; night school to the older ones, two evenings in a week; and Sabbath school, temperance society, and meetings, fill up my time. The sums I receive are shared where needed. I feel that I ought to put my little son in school this winter. The confident belief that if the Master wants me to stay here he will see to the hire, as he has from the first, quiets my heart, and I love to trust him, and can conceive of no good in all the universe separate from his favor and blessing.

I have a great desire that Bro. Sheldon should come this way as he goes South. Louisville should be reached, and this is but twenty miles by packet down the river, and if there is any place that needs light, it is this region. "Plan of Redemption" has been read with favor by several white men, but the lethargy upon religious subjects generally is very deep.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.—From Sister Henderson, Santa Clara, Cal., $1. From Charles Green, Phila., $1.50, part from a sister; but I left the letter in the country, and have forgotten the name. A friend in Lockport, N. Y., $5; and through him from Gerritt Smith, $5. From the A. A. Mission Society, $50, by Geo. T. Adams. These favors I take as from God and his people with gratitude, and crave your prayers that I may have grace and wisdom, that good be done, and nothing be misapplied. Your sister,

West Point, Ky. CAROLINE TULLER.

To bring it into form to be discussed, it was

Resolved, That in receiving females into conferences or churches, it does not thereby entitle them to the right to discuss or to vote on business matters, but to the exercise of all the rights the Scriptures have given them as females. This resolution was freely discussed pro and con. The following Scriptures were cited and applied: Gen. 3: 16; 1 Cor. 11: 3, 7, 8, 9, 11; 14: 34, 36; Eph. 5: 22, 24; 1 Tim. 2: 11, 12; Judges 4: 4, 6, 9; 1 Kings 21: 5, 9, 14, 23; Esther 5; with others.

The resolution was adopted, with one dissenting vote. The report of the committee chosen to examine and report in relation to the difficulties existing between the two societies in Portland being called up and examined, it was

Resolved, That we accept the committee's report as originally given by them to the church in Portland. Adopted. Adjourned. Friday, 8 A. M., met as per adjournment.

Resolved, That we raise $500 the coming year for mission and tract funds, and that we choose an agent to travel, and solicit and collect funds and subscriptions. Adopted.

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with Eld. A. W. Taylor and his wife in their sad calamity, by the severe injuries they received in being thrown from their wagon, and badly maimed and bruised, by which they are laid by from labor for a time. And as they are in destitute circumstances, we commend them to the sympathies and charities of our brethren and sisters generally, who can give them of their substance in this time of need. Direct donations to them at Byron, Me. Adopted.

Voted, That the Secretary forward the minutes of this conference to the "World's Crisis" and the "Advent Christian Times" for publication.

Voted, The thanks of this conference to the brethren, sisters and friends in this community, for their hospitality in entertaining us during this session. Beside the above business, we had preaching afternoons and evenings, and several very interesting social meetings, and a session of the "Ministerial Bible School." Bro. Jeremiah Hill was ordained for the work of the ministry.

Our conference was deeply interesting, and we felt the assurance that the end of probationary time is indeed at hand, and that we should do all we can to gather sinners to Christ the little time that remains prior to his coming. Ministers present were: C. Goud, F. A. Baker, R. R. York, Wm. H. Mitchell, Jesse Gay, H. S. Mitchell, I. C. Wellcome, E. M. Haggett, Jared Whitman, Jeremiah Hill, J. A. Libby. Delegates: T. THE LIVING FOUNTAIN.—In a village on the Welsh coast, the people fetch all their water from a well.

"Is this spring ever dry?" I inquired.

"Dry? yes, ma'am; very often in hot weather."

"And where do you go then for water?"

"To the freshet, a little way out of town."

"And if the freshet dries up?"

"Why, then we go to the rock-well, higher up, the best water of all."

"But if the rock-well fails?"

"Why, ma'am, the rock-well never dries up, never. It is always the same—winter and summer."

This precious well, which "never dries up," reminded me of the waters of life and salvation, flowing from the heart of the "Rock of Ages," and freely bestowed upon all men who believe in the gospel of Jesus Christ. Every other brook may grow dry in the days of drought and adversity, but this heavenly spring never ceases to flow.

Without waiting till earth's wayside brooks shall fail, let us all hasten at once, with hearts athirst, to the heavenly well, "which never dries up."—Ex.

"This is for your Health."

WHAT IS THE TRUE EFFECT OF TOBACCO ON THE TEETH?

The Dental Office and Laboratory settles this question thus:

"If we subject this tobacco question to the experimentum crucis of figures, we will arrive at conclusions which will astonish us. Let us consult our arithmetic:

An habitual 'chewer' will consume four ounces per week of hard tobacco. This is two hundred and eight ounces—seventeen and one-half pounds per year! In twenty-five years, more than five hundred pounds—more than a hogshead will hold—of 'hard stuff,' mingled with sand, copperas, stems, impure molasses, olive oil, chips and filth; the sweat from men's hands, the impurities from their bodies, saliva, and all the concentrated dirt and refuse of all kinds.

One of the speakers at the State Dental Society spoke well when he said that the destructive effects of tobacco upon the teeth were to be attributed to mechanical action, but he spoke better who said that tobacco destroyed the teeth by both mechanical and chemical action.

A word as to its mechanical attrition upon teeth. What force would be required to comminute and reduce to fineness five hundred pounds of the black mixture of sand and poisons sold under the name of chewing tobacco? Why, one steady force of many thousand pounds, continuously applied for months. The burred millstone, the most elaborately finished and finely tempered graver's tool would wear out in the process! What, then, must be the effect of so much grinding upon the finely arranged cusps and delicate enamel of the human teeth?

It is not necessary to detail the effects of tobacco upon the general health. The habitual smoker looks as if he had just stepped out of his coffin to take a little walk, and was anxious for somebody to carry him back. Who ever knew a heavy chewer or inveterate smoker whose teeth were not cracked and split into blackened fragments! whose breath did not remind one of—something which does not smell as sweet as perfumes from 'Araby the blest?'

Returns from Guy's and St. Bartholomew's Hospitals tell us that in all cases of cancer of the mouth, the patient had been using a pipe.

Nervousness, loss of appetite, bad dreams, vertigo, indigestion, consumption, sterility, and all the other ills which affect the nervous system, may be traced to tobacco.

A lady once said to us, when we found her husband in dressing gown and slippers, enveloped in a cloud of smoke, and surrounded with all the confusion of a disordered house, 'Oh, doctor, do not disturb my husband at his smoke. I am fond of the martial cigar. The smoke covers the ugly scenes in the field of battle.' Poor lady, she was willing to endure the fumes of the 'fragrant Havana' for present peace; but we lived to see the bad effects of the vile habit upon the gentleman. Let the profession set their faces steadily against this vile habit. Tobacco is the twin brother of rum, and they are usually found together at last.—Herald of Health.

VOICE AND MANNER IN THE SICK CHAMBER.

I call attention to this, for I have been led to consider it particularly. Some persons have no notion at all of adapting their voice and manner to the circumstances of a sick chamber. A man sometimes has a thundering voice, and never thinks of controlling or limiting it to the size of the room in which he is speaking; and, if he comes into a sick chamber, what will the poor man do, who is lying there racked with pain, and perhaps with a splitting headache? What will he think when he hears the man speak with a voice which is enough to fill the large room above? He will say when such a man goes away: "Never let that man come to me again; never let him enter the door again; his voice was enough to distract my poor head; I cannot endure it."

Another fails in another way. He speaks gently enough, but so indistinctly that the poor man cannot for the life of him catch the meaning of what he says; and he is worn out and distracted with an anxious desire to lay hold of some precious instruction and spiritual comfort, which he strives in vain to understand. The former is an extreme case, perhaps not at all likely to occur among you; though it is one which, among students for the ministry, has actually come before me. The latter is, I fear, not uncommon.

But you will see from such cases that a man lying on a bed of sickness must be treated with a great deal of tenderness and consideration in regard to voice and manner, as well as in regard to the matter and measure of the instruction which you give him. And if a truly considerate christian comes in to visit him, and his voice is so gentle that it does not disturb him by a loudness which he cannot bear, and, at the same time, is so distinct that, without difficulty, he can catch every word that is spoken, the impression will be quite different. He says, when his instructor is gone, "O, what a nice gentleman that was! How soft and gentle his voice was! and yet so clear and distinct that without the least difficulty I could understand every word that he said. Whenever he comes let me see him."

This combination of gentleness of voice with distinctness of articulation, is very important in a sick room.—Home and Health.

☞ To obtain a good night's sleep, sponge the entire length of the spine in hot water for ten or fifteen minutes. This will reduce the circulation, quiet the nervous system, and induce sleep better than any drug.

"THAT'S HOW."

After a great snow storm, a little fellow began to shovel a path through a large snow-bank before his grandmother's door. He had nothing but a small shovel to work with.

"How do you expect to get through that drift?" asked a man passing along.

"By keeping at it," said the boy, cheerfully; "that's how!"

That is the secret of mastering almost every difficulty under the sun. If a hard task is before you, stick to it. Do not keep thinking how large or hard it is, but go at it, and little by little it will grow smaller and smaller, until it is done.

If a hard lesson is to be learned, do not lose a breath in saying, "I can't," or "I do not see how," but go at it, and keep at it. Study. That is the only way to conquer it. If a fault is to be cured, or a bad habit broken up, it cannot be done by merely being sorry, or only trying a little. You must keep fighting it, and not give up fighting until it is got rid of.—Ex.

ASHAMED TO TELL MOTHER.

Such was a little boy's reply to his comrades who were trying to tempt him to do wrong.

"But you need not tell her, no one will know anything about it."

"I would know all about it myself, and I'd feel mighty mean if I couldn't tell mother."

"It's a pity you wasn't a girl. The idea of a boy running and telling his mother every little thing!"

"You may laugh if you want to," said the noble boy, "but I've made up my mind never, as long as I live, to do anything I would be ashamed to tell my mother."

Noble resolve, and one which will make almost any life true and useful. Let it be the rule of every boy and girl to do nothing of which they would be ashamed to tell mother."—The Nation.

THE LITTLE MISSIONARY.

What can I give to Jesus,
Who "gave himself for me"?
How can I show my love to him
Who died on Calvary?

I'll give my heart to Jesus
In childhood's tender spring:
I know that he will not despise
So mean an offering.

GOOD LANGUAGE.—Young people should acquire the habit of correct speaking and writing, and abandon, as early as possible, any use of slang words or phrases. The longer you put this off, the more difficult the acquirement of correct language will be; and if the golden age of youth, the proper season for the acquisition of language, be passed in its abuse, the unfortunate victim will most probably be doomed to talk slang for life. You have merely to use the language which you read, instead of the slang you hear, to form a taste in agreement with the speakers and poets in the country.

SEEING JESUS.—A little girl was lying in bed, so ill that her disease had taken away her sight. Her teacher went to see her, and said: "Are you quite blind, Mary?"

"Yes," she replied; "but I can see Jesus."

"How do you see Jesus?"

"With the eye of my heart."

Happy child! Mary knew the Lord.—Well Spring.

LITTLE SINS.—A little hole in a ship sinks it; a small breach in a sea bank carries all away before it; a little stab in the heart kills a man; and a little sin, as it is often improperly called, tends to his final destruction. A little drop has been many a man's ruin. Every drunkard began with a single glass. Remember this, children.

DOTH THY GOD LOVE THEE LESS?

M. J. HERRON.

What though the warm heart lies cold that loved thee best?
What though the dear hands that gladly toiled for thee, rest;
Ah! eyes that beamed only with love's fondest ray,
Can never again lighten thy dark, lonely way?
The kind voice which spoke but to cheer and to bless,
Is silent forever? Doth thy God love thee less?

Some flowers of hope still bloom 'mong life's tangled grass,
To cheer with their smiling, the way as ye pass;
And see! as lifts He the rod, with tend'rest smile,
Holds He the cup of comfort to thy lips the while;
He loves thee not less; this chast'ning only proves
His fatherhood, and how tenderly he loves.

O heart, how thankless! to murmur and repine,
Because God's ways and purposes are not thine;
Why must thou, like poor, willful children, fret,
And all thy Father's loving kindnesses forget?
Canst thou not join in life's sweet harmony again,
E'en though it be only with plaintive minor strain?

"THE GOOD TIME COMING."

O. R. FASSETT.

There is a universal expectancy of a change—a great change to be effected on our planet and in our world, immediate and impending, even though it be by the baptism of fire and sword!

The Christian church at large is dreaming of a temporal millennium—a thousand years of peace and holiness, when all the world will be evangelized, christianized, and converted to God; when Mohammedanism and Roman Catholicism, those twin sisters of apostasy, and when Atheism and Deism, and all the forms and systems of error and false religion, shall give way before the light of the gospel, and the triumphant march of christianity. This is the church's dream! I say dream, because night is the time for dreams, and now is the night of this world (1 Thess. 5), and sleep is the condition which gives rise to these mental creations, and now is the time when the "virgins" are sleeping and slumbering. Matt. 25. But, alas! how soon shall the church be awakened from her slumbers to the realities of so sad a mistake, and so fatal an hallucination.

The world's progressionists are confidently predicting that we are on the highway to a state of perfection; that the spirits of the departed dead have already entered into spheres of endless progression, ad infinitum; and that the world of the living are advancing "onward and upward" toward "a new heaven and a new earth" (stealing the words of Scripture to express their idea of the coveted state); and this to be under the direction, leadership, and tuition, of angelic human spirits.

Philosophers and wise men are prophesying of a coming age of intellectualism and moral grandeur, unexampled, and exceeding all the historic ages of the human race.

Politicians and statesmen are looking for and glorying in the downfall and destruction of all kingly, imperial, and priestly rule and dominion, and the establishment of democratic and republican institutions and forms of government upon their ruins, after the model of "The Great Republic."

So all are anxiously waiting, and looking in fevered excitement for the long predicted "good time coming." How many will be gravely disappointed, however, in the character and suddenness of this universal and world-wide anticipated change!

The origin and foundation of all this faith and hope respecting a happy state on earth, and the future of man connected therewith, is scriptural prophecy. Strange as it may appear to many, who are "willingly ignorant," the Bible—the good old Bible, reveals the encouraging promise which from the beginning has given hope to the race, though its sacred record be despised and rejected as a divine revelation. The oldest and most remarkable prophecy and promise is this—"It shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel." Gen. 3: 15. From this, the families and tribes and nations of men have gathered hope of a coming Redeemer of some kind, and from some quarter, who will destroy the curse and repair the ruins of the fall. The promise and prophecy have become co-extensive with the habitable world, and a tradition among all nations. Hence Virgil sings—

> "Now a great progeny from heaven descends!
> The sacred Babe is born! mankind defends.
> From the old iron age of sin makes free,
> And gives again the golden age of liberty.
> Around thy cradle sacred flowers shall spring,
> And the old Serpent lose his fatal sting."

Human reason in its fall, unaided by divine promise and revelation, never could have anticipated or hoped for a bright future to our sin-smitten planet, and its inhabitants peopling it, both groaning under the curse, and hasting to destruction; the one by its internal fires of literal flames consuming its structure, and burning at the foundations of the mountains; the other, by its consumptive fires of disease and death, preying upon the vitals and the whole human frame. What human reason does now, even illuminated by diviner rays, is to blur, and obscure, and eclipse the glories of that happy period, by endeavoring to make it appear that it is a mere temporal and mortal state; whereas the Scriptures declare it eternal, immortal, abiding; "as the days of heaven upon earth."

As to the Church's hope of a temporal millenium, it is a "fable." It rests upon a theory and new method of interpretation of the promises relating to "the restitution," introduced and projected by Daniel Whitby within a century; and when thus advocated by him, he declared it to be an innovation and "a new hypothesis." Yet his has come to be the received interpretation of the christian church at large in so brief a period! Neither do the Scriptures teach any millennium before the resurrection of the just, nor the conversion of the race by the gospel anywhere; but just the reverse. To be made to teach these doctrines of men, they must be most manifestly misinterpreted, corrupted, and wrested from their true sense. And to anticipate such a hope is against all human appearance in the moral condition of the world, the increased wickedness, lewdness and infidelity of the times, as "evil men . . wax worse and worse" under the increasing light of divine revelation, and the richer displays of divine grace than have been given to any age since the fall.

The prediction of the world's progressionists is mere vanity. As to the condition of the conceived spirits of the dead, they know nothing about them. And if the pretended spirit manifestations through "silly women," or in any other manner exhibited in this age, are to be received as evidences of human progress in the fancied angelic existence in advancing spheres, the progress made by departed human spirits since they have left this "mundane sphere" has been anything but flattering to the race. Neither George Washington nor Benjamin Franklin would have condescended during their life-time to have joined the society which make up some of the spiritual circles where now it is claimed their spirits are wont to resort and are desirous to hold converse. And they had no need when on earth, in order to communicate with their fellows, to use media like those now required, nor to tip tables, break crockery, ring bells, rap, peep, or mutter, from under tables, or out of the ground, in order to obtain a communication with the living. The communication from the pretended spirits of such men are unworthy of them, and show an advancement downward and backward, rather than "onward and upward," if it could be proved they were veritable communications. History refutes the idea, too, that the earth is advancing with its teeming millions toward a condition of "a new heaven and a new earth" under the guidance and leadership of angelic human spirits.

"The curse is devouring the earth." Certain portions of its surface which once supported populous cities, are now barren deserts; and the whole earth "waxes old as doth a garment," and is ready for its final conflagration! And certainly the inhabitants of the earth are "desolate" in their corruption and vices and crimes and ignorance, when we survey the world at large. There is here and there only a green spot on earth but what is contaminated. And where Spiritualism most abounds and prevails, it happens to be that there, in all countries and among all nationalities, is the least evidence of any progress in the direction of the new creatiön.

The prophecy of philosophers and wise men, respecting the future, is also a vain hope. History reveals the sad fact that nations and races of men have advanced to a certain height of intellectual and moral excellence, and have then fallen and relapsed into a condition of ignorance and degradation. Our first parents fell from their state of bliss, innocence and holiness, in possession of the Eden and Paradise of God; and the whole dominion of the earth, with all it contained under their intellectual control, revolted from their sovereignty. The old world attained a certain height of intellectual advancement which was swept away and buried in oblivion by the waters of the deluge. The Egyptians, numbered among the wisest of all nations, under the malediction of heaven became "a base kingdom," and "the basest of nations," leaving buried in desert sands and in ruins the monuments everywhere of their former exaltation. The Grecian states attained from the rudest barbarism of its people a height of intelligence and moral culture unexcelled; but from those heights of wisdom and excellence, which have attracted the passing ages, Greece has fallen, the grandeur of her cities is gone, and the tongues of eloquence are no longer heard in her legislative halls.

Roman wisdom, power, and martial glory are gone, and the world's last proud Capitol has become "the hold of every foul spirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird," ready for the burnings! And since Jesus, the Christ of God, was upon earth, the great Teacher from heaven, who was the founder of Christianity, sent to bless the nations, the world has passed through "the dark ages." And a longer and darker period of prevailing error, superstition, fanaticism and crime, the human race has never seen; when the light of science, literature, and true religion were extinguished among the nations. What, then, may be hoped in the future from such a historic record of the fallen race? These philosophers and wise men cannot reason from the present favored elevation we enjoy, that it will always last, and progress to even higher heights of wisdom and moral culture, specially as the latter does not keep pace with the former, and when there are most deplorable and irrefutable indications of the world's rapid demoralization. Too much is made, in ignorance of divine prophecy, of a most remarkable sign of the times: "Many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased." Dan. 12: 4. Which prophecy is to be fulfilled in "the time of the end," a well defined period just prior to the end of time.

The hope of politicians and statesmen of the overthrow of kingdoms, and hierarchal assumptions, and dominion over secular and temporal powers, and the establishment of republics, or a republic, after the model of the "great republic," is destined to a disappointment.

First. All such forms of government in the old world have been unsuccessful and short-lived.

Second. All attempts to establish republics in Italy, France, Spain, and elsewhere, since the decline and fall of Rome, have proved abortive to this day.

Third. The people are not sufficiently educated and instructed in such form of government, nor have they the time and patience to be so thoroughly schooled and trained in the political principles of a free government, as is needful to make such governments a success. Our own effort to establish a Republic on this continent, came near to a failure; and had we not the few Puritans, and the fewness in number first to school in republican principles, and the time for education in democratic ideas, as well as the patience to endure the first ordeal, and pass the first crisis, we should never have witnessed the towering supremacy of this Republic on this continent. Our fathers fought and maintained the right of the people to govern themselves, after they had first determined, after due study and deliberation, to throw off the oppressive yoke of kingly and priestly dominion.

Fourth. The kingdoms of Europe and the world will show no favor to such governments arising in their midst, and will put down by sword all such aspirations of the people, and in due time all such governments which may attempt an existence.

Finally. "The sure word of prophecy" is against all such hope. There are to be "kingdoms of the world" to the end. And "kings of the earth" are to witness the coming of the "King of kings, and Lord of lords," when "he shall take to himself his great power and reign." Rev. 6.

What "the good time coming" in reality is, as revealed in the word of God, is set forth in the following graphic prophecy—"And in this mountain shall the Lord of hosts make unto all people a feast of fat things, a feast of wines on the lees, of fat things full of marrow, of wines on the lees well refined. And he will destroy in this mountain the face of covering cast over all people, and the vail that is spread over all nations. He will swallow up death in victory; and the Lord God will wipe away tears from off all faces; and the rebuke of his people shall he take away from off all the earth; for the Lord hath spoken it. [The epoch is at the coming of Christ in his glory.] And it shall be said in that day, Lo, this is our God [Emmanuel], we have waited for him, and he will save us; this is the Lord; we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation." Isa. 25: 6-9.

By comparing this prophecy with Isa. 65, it will be observed that it relates to the "new earth" which is after "the day of judgment," as will be seen by reference to 2 Peter 3, and Rev. 21. "And after the resurrection of the just to immortality, as noticed by Paul. 1 Cor. 15: 50-57. See also Rev. 11: 15-18.

First, the earth is to be "utterly broken down, the earth clean dissolved"; and its wicked "inhabitants burned," with the righteous preserved. First, the Lord cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity," and "punish the host of the high ones that are on high, and the kings of the earth upon the earth." "Then the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of hosts shall reign in Mount Zion and Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously." Isa. 24. Then in the renewed earth, the new heavens and the new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness" (2 Pet. 3), naught "shall hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain," saith the Lord; "for the EARTH shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord' as the waters cover the sea." Isa. 11 and 65.

HOW ESCAPE?—No. 1.

M. H. HALL.

A more momentous question cannot be propounded than the following by the great apostle of the Gentiles (Heb. 2: 3):—"How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation?" How escape? Can you tell? can any person tell? can an angel from heaven tell? nay, can God tell? If you cannot, and no being can tell, then can we escape?

My impenitent friend, will you not candidly think and reflect upon this most serious and important question until you can give a satisfactory answer? or failing in this, will you not cease to neglect that which your reason and conscience tell you is perilous? Do not, I beseech you, treat it lightly, or refuse to consider it honestly, as in the sight of Him who knoweth your thoughts, and who will judge you in the great day. Think and reflect upon it now; to-morrow may be too late. Let this question settle down in your hearts and thrill your whole being; let it be uppermost in your mind, driving out all buyers and sellers, until you can answer the question, how can I escape if I neglect so great salvation? Can you escape? If so, how? Perhaps you may imagine that by some means you can escape, though others may not; that you are not so very wicked after all, and that, as God is good and merciful, he will let you pass, or that his eye will not detect you. Is this a safe basis to act upon? Do you expect to deceive the omniscient God? Can you measure arms with Omnipotence? Can you rely on God's goodness and mercy to save you, when you refuse his proffers of mercy; when you refuse to obey his commands, or persist in neglecting the great salvation? What surpassing folly!

Do you thus judge and act in worldly matters? Would you expect to make a fortune by folding your arms, and neglecting the ordinary means by which fortunes are made? Would you expect to make a living and do nothing? You would consider such a course the height of folly; you would not thus deceive yourself in worldly things; then why suffer yourself to be deceived in the infinitely more important matter of salvation? Why take such a fearful risk? Why not think as deeply, reason as fairly, judge as correctly, decide as wisely, and act as promptly in matters that pertain to eternal life, as you do in temporal things?

But can you escape? Escape implies danger, something harmful to flee from, or be delivered from. There may be physical peril, some catastrophe to avoid; your life may be in danger; but what is the peril, or loss of temporal life, compared with the loss of eternal life? You may escape physical harm, or be delivered from a terrible death; but if you neglect the great salvation, you cannot escape. It is not necessary for you to wilfully reject it, or "trample under foot the Son of God, and count the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing, and do despite to the Spirit of his grace;" it is not necessary to profane and blaspheme the holy name of God, and treat with contempt the religion of Jesus Christ, and its votaries, in order to be condemned at the day of judgment; you have only to neglect the "great salvation." It does not require a course of out-breaking sins, or a life steeped in crime, in order to lose your soul; inattention on your part as to the great future, and a persistent yielding of your affections, your time and talents to "to the god of this world," and the work is done. You are lost beyond redemption. God cannot save you—Christ cannot save you; then

HOW ESCAPE?

Yes, who can solve the problem that if we live in sin,
Neglect the great salvation, amid earth's pomp and din—
How, in the retribution to enforce the law's demands,
Escape from condemnation—thus breaking God's commands?

Canst thou escape, O sinner, from his all-piercing eye,
When Christ, in power, to judgment shall cleave the vaulted sky?
Will you a crown of glory at his right hand receive,
Who ne'er had loved his story, nor would in him believe?

For you a home in Canaan, where saints and angels meet,
'Mid scenes of pure devotion at Christ Immanuel's feet?
When you on earth would never with christians humbly bow,
To ask for God's forgiveness, and strength to keep your vow?

What, you to "live forever" 'mid heavenly joys, untold,
Where all the saints together will tune their harps of gold;
And join the heavenly chorus, in loudest notes of praise,
When you had e'er neglected or spurned his saving grace?

What, sing with them you hated because they loved their Lord,
And looked for his appearing to keep his faithful word!
And bow in humble homage to Him you here despised,
And cry, "O live forever—all hail the Crucified!"

You'd call for rocks and mountains to hide you from his face,
And grind you all to powder, because you scorned his grace;
And broke his holy Sabbaths, or cursed his holy name,
When you were massing riches, or seeking worldly fame!

'Tis Satan's base deception that you can thus escape
The awful condemnation—Gehenna's burning "lake";
Then flee to Christ for refuge before he shuts the door,
That you may gain admittance, and LIVE FOREVERMORE.

Yes, how escape? Escape from what? from some imaginary punishment threatened by designing priests to frighten poor mortals into propriety? Nay, but from the consequences of sin; from

THE PENALTY OF GOD'S LAW.

Does any man need to be told that God has a law which has been written, not only upon tables of stone with his own finger, but on the tablets of the heart, in burning letters of fire? Does any man require to be told that he is a sinner—that he has broken God's holy law, and is therefore obnoxious to its penalty? then let him look into his own heart, and there see selfishness, covetousness, bitterness, enmity, pride, lust, and other propensities, which, if not controlled, go raging on until the whole life is steeped in sin. God has a law; if a law, then a penalty; for there must be of necessity, a penalty to every law to make it such, and enforce it. To God's law there is, therefore, attached a penalty.

The question now arises, what is that penalty? As there has been and still is great misconception, as we believe, in the minds of the masses of the Christian world upon this subject (though thousands are getting their eyes open), we now address Christians as well as others, and humbly ask their candid and serious consideration of the views and arguments we propose to present, in a short series of articles on this interesting and important question, hereafter to be headed, The Penalty of God's Law.

But where shall we go for an answer to the question? Shall we go to the ponderous volumes of theology, the commentaries? Shall we take the ipse dixit of those who stand in the pulpit, be it ever so unreasonable? Shall we consult the systems of heathen mythology, or shall we receive answer from the Pope, and be content? Where do we go to ascertain the import and penalty of any law, if not to the law-maker, or the law itself? Then to the law and the testimony, and if they do not speak in harmony with reason, justice, and mercy, "it is because there is no light in them." The object of every law-maker, or legislative body enacting laws, by which the people are to be governed, is, or should be to employ language so plain that the laws and penalties shall not only be understood, but so plain that they cannot be misunderstood. In a word, they never use figurative language. It is true, ambiguity is sometimes found in human laws; but none whatever in the penalties annexed. Here all is plain and positive. The judge upon the bench, and the jury in the box never have any doubts about the true import of the penalty. So we should expect that God, in announcing the penalty of his law, would use the plainest and most literal language; to think otherwise would be to charge him with deception. God deceives no man, but man too often deceives himself.

To illustrate the subject of penalty which we now approach; suppose, in a case where a man had been tried and found guilty of murder, and had been sentenced to death by hanging, according to law, the execution should get it into his head, through some heathen or papal influence—as our thelogians have in regard to the penalty of God's law—that death means separation and torment, and in executing the sentence, he separates the criminal from all good citizens by shutting him up in a dark and loathsome prison, and then proceeds to torment him in the most excruciating manner possible, yet so as not to deprive him of life, his object being to prolong it as long as he can that he may torment him, and thus execute, as he believes, the true intent of the law! What would be thought of such an interpretation of law and penalty as this? And what would be thought of such a punishment? All would pronounce such an interpreter and such an executioner of law a crazy man, who ought not to run at large, or a demon in human shape. Such a punishment could not be inflicted among savages; even they would kill him and end his misery. Is man more merciful than God? But would such an interpretation of our criminal law, by such supposed executioner, be any more inconsistent, unwarrantable, and absurd, than that of God's law and the penalty annexed, by our theologians? Let us see. God says, as we shall see, the penalty of sin is death. "Divines" say, this death-penalty is not extinction of life, but it means that the wicked shall be separated from all good people, and shut up in the dark prison of hell and tormented forever! God says the wicked shall be destroyed; but we are told by these great men that this means they shall be preserved! God says, the enemies of the Lord shall perish; but this means, they say, that they shall live forever in misery. God declares that the wicked shall be BURNT UP as chaff, as tares, as dry branches, as stubble fully dry, as the fat of lambs; burnt up root and branch; but our theologians and clergymen say, all this means they shall burn forever! Why is not such an interpretation of the penalty of God's law just as unwarrantable and absurd as that in the supposed case in reference to human law? The only difference we can see in the penalties is, that, by our law the culprit suffers death by being hanged, while by God's law the sinner suffers death by being BURNT UP! Everlasting torment is not the penalty of God's law. How any intelligent, reflecting mind can believe that the God of love and mercy would inflict on any of his creatures unending torture, such as is described by Benson and other commentators, is more than we are able to see. Many honest and noble minds have been driven into Universalism and infidelity, simply because they could not believe such a horrible doctrine. Even Bishop Newton, being a firm believer in the immortality of the soul, was forced to adopt restoration as a relief to his mind, because he could not reconcile the doctrine of endless misery with what he conceived to be the true character of God.

The Bishop says: "But the words everlasting, eternal, forever and the like, are sometimes used in a limited sense, and do not always signify an endless duration. . . . When Sodom and Gomorrah, and the cities about them, are spoken of by Jude, as suffering the vengeance of eternal fire, the fire continued no longer than till it had reduced them to utter destruction. The sense, therefore, is limited by the nature of the thing." After proceeding with a long and labored argument to show that it is possible for the righteous in heaven to commit iniquity, he asks if they should still continue in glory. So if the wicked should turn away from his wickedness, he should be plucked as a brand out of fire. "This (he says) I conceive is the notion and representation of the eternity of rewards and punishments. Repentance, therefore, is not impossible in hell; but you may ask, what reason then to think it possible? And I answer, because it is impossible for any living creature to live in eternal torments. Who among us can dwell with the devouring fire? Who among us can dwell with everlasting burnings? Nothing can be more contrary to the divine nature and attributes, than for God, all-wise, all-powerful, all good, all perfect, to bestow existence on any beings, whose destiny he foresees and foreknows, must terminate in wretchedness and misery, without recovery or remedy, without respite or end. God is love; and he would rather have not given life, than render that life a torment and curse to all eternity. . . . Imagine a creature, nay, imagine numberless creatures produced out of nothing, delivered over to torments of endless ages without the least hope or possibility of relaxation or redemption. Imagine it, you may, but you can never believe it, nor be reconciled to God and goodness. God could never make any creature whose end he foreknew would be misery everlasting."

Bishop Newton is not the only great man who has been sorely perplexed, puzzled, and compelled to shift here and there with the futile hope of finding rest to a troubled mind, in seeking a solution to the great problem of the doctrine of endless torment with the justice and mercy of God. They have not all been as frank and honest as he, however, in confessing this fact. Could such great and good men have seen that all this perplexity has arisen from their having given heed to the vain imaginings of heathen philosophers, and so adopting the pagan and papal dogma of the immortality of the soul, instead of giving heed to and adopting the true teachings of the Bible, they would have found as many did before, and as thousands have since, a most satisfactory solution to their problematic doubts and fears. And then there would have been no occasion for adopting as a dernier resort, the doctrine of Universal Restorationism.

THE FIRST MAN.

C. E. BARNES.

"And so it is written, The first man Adam was made a living soul."—1 Cor. 15: 45.

It is not to be wondered at that infidels assail the teachings of the Bible. Their only safety lies in proving them unreliable, and therefore they have at different times assailed nearly every article of revealed religion, hoping thereby to shake the faith of the christian world, and lead them to reject the only book that makes known with certainty a "life beyond death." Among other truths which have been assailed, is that of the origin of man. Not satisfied to believe he was the creation of God, since Darwin has concluded himself to be the descendant of some ape, or member of the monkey tribe, others have accepted his theory, and rather than believe the consistent account we have in Holy Scripture, have likewise endeavored to establish their relationship to the apes.

It is not strange that men who live an entire life-time without God in the world, should try to account for their present being in such a way as to relieve him of all responsibility in the matter. It is not strange that men who ignore all claims of God upon themselves, should ignore his agency in giving them the life they now enjoy. It is not strange that they who reject our Savior should also reject the entire revelation whereby he is made known, and so we find them searching and digging into the mysteries of nature, in hopes that nature's revelation will contradict the written revelation of nature's God—but vain endeavor it is. Nature and Revelation are sisters, and agree with each other most lovingly; and he who truly understands the language of both, will never hear any conflicting statements coming from them.

To admit what is claimed by some scientific (?) infidels, namely, that hundreds of thousands of years before Adam's creation there were races of men upon the earth, would be to sanction and endorse a principle which would be destructive of all faith in the Bible. If a christian believes this theory, if consistent, he will go further, and reject the Scriptures altogether, and then he will be a christian no longer. But that no believer in the truthfulness of the Bible may be led to receive as true any such undermining principle, I shall endeavor to prove that the Scriptures do teach that Adam was the first man, by establishing the following propositions: That Adam was the first man, may be proved

1. From the general tenor of the first chapter of Genesis. In this chapter we have the only complete record of creation it has pleased God to give us. In it we may expect to find knowledge sufficient to enlighten us concerning its main features; and our expectation is realized. After the comprehensive statement that "God created the heaven and the earth," we are introduced to a chaotic state of matter, from which period the account leads us briefly through its various changes, until the earth and seas were separated, each having its appropriate location and place. We next see the fruitfulness of the earth in bringing forth the various kinds of vegetable life. Next, the various planets were caused to cast light upon this our earth, and their various motions and locations were also appointed to serve as signs, and to regulate the seasons, and days, and years. Next the water is caused to "bring forth abundantly," and we have the origin of the fowl and fish; and still again, we read of the creation of the beasts of the field. And now, having thus carried us mentally through the various stages of creation, the account is completed by telling us of God's final and crowning work, namely, the creation of man. "And God said, "Let us make man in our image, after our likeness; and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth." Gen. 1: 26.

Are we not justified in inferring from this, that this is the beginning of the race of man? Yes, would we not be condemned by untrammeled reason, if we inferred anything else? Every unprejudiced person, who has no theory to support, must admit this.

Without enlarging further upon this point, I simply observe that if hundreds of thousands of years prior to this sixth and last day of creation, there were races of men upon the earth, the Bible account is exceedingly defective, and so far from leading us to believe, it tends directly the other way. Therefore, from the general tenor of the first chapter of Genesis, we may safely conclude that man's origin dates back, not to hundreds of thousands of years, but to the closing portion of the sixth and last day of creation, which was about six thousand years ago.

From the significant name Adam gave his wife: "And Adam called his wife's name Eve (more properly Life for the Hebrew chavah corresponds to the Greek Zoe. See Dr. Clarke in loc;) because she was the mother of all living" (Gen. 3: 20), referring undoubtedly to "all living" of the race of man. But how can we believe Eve "was the mother of all living," if scientific men, within the last half-century, have demonstrated that races of men lived on the earth hundreds of thousands of years before Adam's creation? And further, suppose it to be true, what is sometimes claimed, the present races of Negroes and Mongols had their origin in some other head than Adam, and far anterior to him; then of course they must have been on the earth at the time of his creation. And if this be true, it follows that Adam's knowledge was exceedingly limited, for it is evident that he at least, had no knowledge of other races of men from the fact that he thought Eve was the "mother of all living," and named her accordingly. It is to be presumed that had our wise, "scientific men" of the present day been near Adam when he thus named his wife, they would have jogged his memory a little, and set him right, by telling him he was claiming that for Eve which did not belong to her, as there are two races of men at least, they might say, which have been living and dying during ages that are in the past already. But believing Adam knew more of the inhabitants of the earth in his day, than scientific skeptics can learn by their modern researches, we again infer that as he called Eve "the mother of all living," there could have been no races of men prior to that time.

3. From the express declarations of Scripture. This argument is not designed for them that reject the Scriptures as being unreliable, but for such as are willing to have their belief governed by them. Therefore we expect the declarations of the Bible to be received by such implicitly, as well in deciding the question of man's origin, as in deciding that of his destination. In Paul's address to the Athenians on Mars' hill, he said God "giveth to all life, and breath, and all things; and hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on the face of the earth." Acts 17: 25, 26. If these words do not teach that all nations of men, Negroes and Mongols included, had one common origin, how could the passage be framed to express it? If there be races of men living to-day, whose genealogy can be traced back independently of Adam and his posterity to hundreds of thousands of years before his creation, they are not of his blood, and therefore Paul's assertion is contrary to the truth, for certainly in that broad statement, "all nations of men," he must have intended to include all nations of men dwelling on the face of the earth. Had he had the benefit (?) of reading the results of modern scientific researches, he might have qualified his statement by saying "all nations of men, excepting the Negroes and Mongols; these had their origin from another stock." But as Paul did not say so, therefore we do not believe it.

In the first epistle to the Corinthians, we have another passage, as plainly stating the truth. In contrasting the present with the future, the mortal with the immortal, the natural and earthy with the spiritual and heavenly. Paul says, "And so it is written, The first man Adam was made a living soul. . . . The first man is of the earth, earthy; the second man is the Lord from heaven." ch. 15: 45, 47. This passage is so plain and decided that attempts to make it more forcible would only detract from it. I simply remark that he who advocates the theory of pre-Adamite races, is advancing no doctrine of revealed religion as found in Moses or Paul, but a theory which both most decidedly repudiate. Many more propositions may be advanced equally conclusive in demonstrating the true Scripture theory, but perhaps enough has been said for the present. I hope, however, that notwithstanding Advent preachers are so free to accept the truth, wherever it is developed, none will be so eager for a new hobby as to leave the oracles of truth for the uncertain and contradictory demonstrations (?) of modern scientists.

If we were to accept scientific demonstrations as our guide, we would have to give up the entire account of creation as found in Genesis; we would have to give up our faith in the resurrection of the dead, for scientific men claim to have "demonstrated" that that, also, is an impossibility; and so we might continue to accept their demonstrations, till at last we should rob ourselves of the Fatherhood of God, and all the glorious blessings promised in the gospel, through his Son Jesus Christ, and at last find ourselves "without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world." Eph. 2: 12. But instead of thus selling our birthright for a mess of pottage, we will say with Paul, "Let God be true, but every man a liar." Rom. 3: 4.

THE DEATH BY ADAM.

J. B. CLARK.

Death entered the world by Adam's sin. Death is passed upon all, for "that all have sinned"—as Levi in Abram's loins paid tithes to Melchisedec. Heb. 7: 9, 10. Whatever death was the penalty of the Adamic law, all his posterity were liable to, whether they personally sinned or not. Hence, we see multitudes of little children die, who have never personally sinned. The death-penalty, then, for Adam's sin is not the penalty for the personal offences of his posterity. Men do not, therefore, receive the penalty of their own sins by the corruption and death flowing from Adam's transgression. But the unchangeable law of God is—"The soul that sinneth, it shall die," and "the wages of sin is death." The second Adam, the Lord from heaven, reverses not the penalty of the Adamic law, but restores all men to life again. But the continuance in life, after such restoration, is another and a very different matter. This depends on personal character. Those who believe in Jesus Christ, and receive abundance of grace, shall reign in life, by Jesus Christ. They not only live again, but live forever. But if men will not come to Christ, "that they might have life," then they die for their personal transgressions, and this death must necessarily be after the restoration from that death brought on all men by Adam's sin.

There is a "second death" spoken of in the Scriptures; and whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire, which lake of fire is called in another place in this book the "second death," meaning, as I understand, the destruction of all the wicked. I believe Christ redeems us from the curse of the Adamic law, and restores all men to life, so that what we lost by Adam we regain by Christ. And, furthermore, he has become our kinsman, and the one mediator. Through and by him we can now approach unto God, and receive a pardon of our personal sins, and obtain "the gift of God, . . . eternal life," and not be "hurt of the second death."

The World's Crisis
AND
SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, Nov. 29, 1871.

☞ Please Remember!
☞ All remittances to this office, in the form of Drafts, Bank Checks, and Postal Money-Orders, should be made payable to the Business Agent, GEO. T. ADAMS.

☞ Take Notice!
☞ All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable in Advance, at the rate of $2.50 a year.

☞ Those who send articles for the Crisis, should direct them to Miles Grant, Boston, and not to the Business Agent.

☞ If any of our subscribers have numbers of the Crisis of Sept. 20, 1871, or of Oct. 18, 1871, we would like to have them send them to us, and we shall be much obliged for the same.

Another Trip to California.—It is now our purpose to visit Caliornia again the last of December. We do so because we believe it is the Lord's will. The Macedonian cry is very earnest from the Pacific coast. Permit us to request a special interest in the prayers of all saints who sympathize with us in this important work. We believe the Lord heard the many earnest prayers in our behalf last winter, while in the far west; and again we go forth trusting in the God of our fathers. We hope for blessed results.

Southern Mission.—Bro. Wm. Sheldon intends to go South about the middle of December. Pray for him, that his labors may be greatly blest.

CONFERENCE REPORTS.

We would specially request that the reports of conferences be as condensed as possible in relation to the business items which are common to all conferences. Such as, who prayed at the opening of each session, or what hymn was sung; or what hour in the day the conference opened or closed. Such minute records can be kept by the secretary of the conference, for reference; but they are of no particular interest to the mass of our readers. If there were only six or eight reports in the year, the case would be different; but when each conference has from four or more sessions in a year, and some of these reports cover ten or a dozen sheets of foolscap, they become a real burden to our readers, and a cause of much complaint. Within two days we have received four conference reports. If all should be inserted the same week, valuable reading matter would have to be laid aside, and the paper largely filled with matter that would be interesting to but few outside of the conferences. If they are not published at once, and in full, then the members of the conference complain.

Instead of sending to the Crisis the full report of all the common business particulars, entered by the secretaries, we would recommend that they be instructed by their respective conferences to send for publication only that which is of general interest. Tell us what the Lord has done, rather than the deeds of men. Was there any religious interest? Were any convicted or converted? We read of the acts of the apostles, but not much about their resolutions. In short, just send us the meat without the shucks. Our readers will remember a short article in a late paper, taken from the Advent Christian Times, about "more gravy." Will not those who report conferences keep this in remembrance?

MEETINGS AT STAFFORD SPRINGS.

Our meetings at Stafford Springs were of special interest. We began there Friday evening, in the Central Hall, with a large and very attentive audience. At the close of the meeting, Bro. Hawks, the Congregational minister, invited us to preach in his meeting-house Sabbath P. M. We accepted his invitation, and at the time appointed spoke to a full house, and felt free in the Lord. Bro. H. manifested a kind, christian spirit, and expressed hearty thanks for our services. The Lord bless him.

The meetings at Central Hall, on Saturday evening and Sabbath A. M. and evening were peculiarly interesting. Saturday evening, a number of questions were asked in relation to the nature of man, and the personality of our heavenly Father. The questions and answers awakened a deep interest to hear and know more about those things. It might be truly said that some of the people were astonished at the doctrine; not only because it was new, but because it looked so plain and so full of Bible and common sense. Some, of course, thought otherwise.

Sabbath evening more came than could get into the hall. The best of attention was given to the evidences that prove our Savior is soon coming to set up his kingdom. There is a wide door open for a good work at Stafford Springs. Bro. I. B. Potter was with us to assist in the meetings. He is a true man, whose labors have been much blest in various localities.

Spirit Teaching.—In the "Banner of Light," Nov. 11, 1871, is a record of a conversation with a spirit, as follows:—

"Q. (From the audience). You say Jesus was inspired by the spirit of truth. What do you mean by "the spirit of truth"—the Almighty?

A. To me there is no other Almighty. Truth prevails over everything, even in the lowest kingdom of life. It exhibits itself in the chemistry of Nature, in the philosophy of mind; it is the God, the only God that the soul will ever know."

It will be seen from the foregoing that the spirits acknowledge no personal God. They would have us deify truth, and only call that truth which they teach, setting aside the sacred Scriptures as a revelation from God. We can truly say we have no inclination in that direction. Let us have for our God, the God of Daniel and his fathers, and for our Savior the Son of God, Jesus of Nazareth, and we will be satisfied.

Bro. Wm. M. Ingham.—It has been sometime since our readers have heard from Bro. and Sr. Ingham in their affliction. Some years since, Bro. Ingham received a blow upon his head, which produced very sad results, and rendered him unable to preach the word of life since that accident. Those who knew him need not be informed that he was a true man, who, with his dear wife, practised much self-denial for the sake of carrying the gospel of Christ to the perishing. We trust Sr. Ingham will pardon us for the following extract from her private correspondence:—

"Bro. Grant:—Do you ever think of the sad hearted 'pilgrim,' Wm. M. Ingham, and his unworthy wife? I know I, at least, am not deserving of much notice. As I lie here on the lounge with a nervous headache, my mind has been running upon the past, and of the many places I have visited with this 'dear one' who sits beside me, when my heart was joyous, and I knew no sorrow; and it does seem sometimes as though we were shut out from all intercourse, and sympathy too. I often wonder, why am I thus afflicted. Why does the Lord deal so long with us. Why do some of my requests remain unanswered? I know such questionings only keep me from rest and peace; and it is very seldom that I allow myself to dwell upon them, for I think there is a silver lining to every dark cloud, and if I know not what to-morrow will bring, I know that my heavenly Father orders all events. It is his to proportion its duties and difficulties, and I will trust in him, and not be afraid.

I receive the Crisis weekly, for which accept many thanks for the continuance of it. I should feel lost without it. Two numbers of the Banner came to us marked 'free subscriber,' and then they stopped. The Advent Times stopped last winter. I would love to be at the campmeeting, and hear the word of life dispensed, and breathe the freshness of the consecrated grove, forget care and anxiety, and get nearer to God, for the pure in heart only will dwell with him.

Some wrote to me some time ago, if they had a chance, they would send us something. There are two vessels that go to Boston from here all the time, and any thing left at Rickford & Co., 148 Broad Street, Boston, will come to me safe, as our people always go there to purchase. There have been a number of letters, containing in all $40, sent to us, that never reached us. Those parties are afraid to send again, so they say. I write thus freely to you, Bro. Grant, so that if any one should inquire of you about us, you can tell them. I don't ask you to enlist sympathies in our behalf, though if some knew our circumstances, they would send us a present, unless they have changed.

Our Father knows just what we need, and when we are straightened, it is for our good. He knows whom to entrust with this world's goods, and from whom to withhold. Husband is a little better in some ways, and I believe he would get well again if he could get rid of the idea that he is lost. That absorbs his whole mind, and leaves no room for any thing else. He was sighing, and saying, O my Lord! my Lord! my Lord! one day. I asked him what he wanted more than any thing? Said he, 'I would like to have "good salvation" better than any thing else, but I can't have that.'

Their residence is at Clements Port, N. S. Will not their friends correspond with them, and remember their necessities by sending relief.

QUERIST.

Troubled Waters.—Bro. Grant:—I wish to ask you if you think the fourth verse of the fifth chapter of St. John was rightly translated, and if so, does it harmonize with Christ's teaching? Only one out of the great multitude could be healed. It looks to me as though there would be strife there, and the one that got in first was the best fellow. Ought not this fourth verse to have been left out? Please answer in the Crisis.

The third, fourth, and fifth verses read as follows: "In these lay a great multitude of important folk, of blind, halt, withered, [waiting for the moving of the water. For an angel went down at certain seasons into the pool, and troubled the water; whosoever then first after the troubling of the water stepped in, was made whole of whatsoever disease he had.] And a certain man was there, which had an infirmity thirty and eight years."

Five of the most ancient manuscripts reject the whole or a part of what is included in brackets. It is omitted by Mill and Tischendorf, and pronounced spurious by Griesbach.

German Tracts.—Those who wish German tracts on the great truths we love so well, can send to Bro. Louis Reimer, 1006 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa. In about two weeks, Bro. Reimer will have out a new German tract, of about eight pages, called "The Soul."

STRANGE THEORIES.

In these last days men are about as busy inventing new theological systems as are mechanics in getting up new machines. The people desire novelties. Their love for truth seems to be dying out, and the love for fables taking its place. This is the result of a departure from the Holy Scriptures. When men reject the Bible, their learning and talent are no security against wild, fanciful, false theories; but rather a help to them to invent some new system unknown before. One thing is certain, what Paul said should come in the last days is now transpiring before our eyes. He informs us that in the last days, there will be a class of "teachers," who, to please the "itching ears" of the people, "shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables." At that time, he says: "Watch thou in all things."

We have been led to speak thus because of what we have just read of the strange psychological theories advanced by G. M. Figuier, a French scientific writer of considerable notoriety. He has issued a work of some three or four hundred pages, called "The To-morrow of Death." That our readers may understand us better, we will make some extracts from a summary statement of the substance of the book, as published in the Springfield Daily Republican, Nov. 15th, by a Boston correspondent. He says:—

"M. Figuier says he was led to earnest investigation of the future life by the loss of a beloved son one day. First, he asked of the exact sciences what positive evidences they could render on this point, and then he questioned ignorant and simple men, peasants and the unlettered crowds of cities, in order to reach the true principles of nature. His search was thorough and exhaustive, and at length he found everything through the study of nature. In demonstrating his theory, he starts with the declaration that there are three elements in man: first, the body, a material substance; second, life, the vital force; and third, soul, the inner sense. Life and the soul are essentially distinct. The life is perishable, while the soul is immortal. Man can be defined, he says, as a defective soul resident in a living body. Death is the separation of the soul and the body. This triple alliance of the body, the soul and the life is seen in animals as well as in man, but the souls of animals are different from the souls of men, in that they are inferior in the number and compass of their faculties. . . .

We believe that after death the human soul passes into a new body, to be incarnated in another organism and constitute a being greatly superior to man in moral power, and ranking next above the human species in the hierarchy of nature. This being above man, in the scale of the living who people the universe, has no name in any language. Only the angel, that the Christian religion honors and worships, can convey to us an idea of this being. . . . Let us, however, waive this word and give the name of 'superhuman beings in nature. . . . After the dissolution of the body, after life is extinct, the soul, then, freed from the material bonds which attached it to the earth, goes to feel, to love, to conceive, to enjoy freedom in a new body, endowed with faculties more powerful than those which belong to humanity. It goes to constitute what we call the superhuman being. . . .

Says M. Figuiere:—'To convey an idea of the enormous number of living creatures that the seas alone hide, and that they have hidden in former ages, let us cite here a fact well known to geologists—that all our building stone, all the limestone that forms mountains and chalk banks are wholly composed of the gathered fragments of the shells of mollusks, visible or microscopic, which filled the basin of the seas in the remotest time since the creation of the world. All soils are formed by the accumulation of shells. If life were distributed in the seas with such prodigality in the geological periods it must be distributed to-day in nearly the same manner; for the actual conditions of nature have not changed since the primitive days of our globe.'

This fact, that life overflows on this earth, in the water and the air, leads the investigator to the conclusion that the ethereal fluid which succeeds our atmosphere and fills space, is also inhabited by living beings. And the creatures that live in the planetary ether are, in his belief, the superhuman beings, now brought into a new life, and furnished with all kinds of moral improvements. . . .

The planetary man, according to his belief, corresponds to the terrestrial man. In the planets the process of creation of organized life must be the same as in the earth; the successive order of appearance of living creatures is the same as on the globe. And, like the planetary man dies, is transformed after death into a superhuman and passes into ether.

FORM AND LIFE OF THE SUPERHUMAN.

This world, then, is one of a number of worlds, all peopled with human beings who die, leave their bodies to enrich the soil, and whose souls rise to space above, known as ether, and are transformed into new bodies called superhuman beings. To a description of these M Figuier devotes very many pages. His final conclusions are, they have bodies as here below, but bodies possessing qualities infinitely superior to those which belong to the human tenement. In order to float in ether they must be composed of substances wonderfully subtile, —or thin material tissues, and transparent and vapory cloaks of living matter. They are sustained by the simple respiration of the fluid in which they are immersed—ether. The respiration of the ethereal medium suffices to nourish the material body, and therefore they are spared the necessity of eating and drinking to live. They know nothing of fatigue or the pains of sickness. They yield themselves wholly to quiet and gentle sentiments, and to no impressions but those of bliss an unalloyed serenity. They enjoy the same senses that are ours—sight, hearing, feeling, smell and taste—but to an infinitely more exquisite degree, and, moreover, special senses unknown to us. There is no sex; all have the same organic life. They need not, in order to love each other, belong to opposite sexes, to two groups of different organizations. In this new existence love is an ennobling sentiment, ideal and exquisitely pure. Their peculiar organization gives them the power of transporting themselves very rapidly from place to place and of compassing great distances with extraordinary speed, with a celerity we can only measure by electricity. In the domain of ether time counts for nothing. The superhuman, then, is a mortal like the terrestrial or the planetary man. In time his body dies and the soul again escapes, "as a sweet perfume escapes from a broken vase." Improved by the new faculties it has received, and the new senses with which it has been endowed, it enters a new body equipped with still more numerous and more exquisite senses, and armed with still more powerful faculties, and thus begins another new life further on in ether,—the life of arch-angel or arch-human.

THE SUN THE FINAL WORLD.

M Figuier, through a long course of reasoning, then endeavors to demonstrate that there are several other promotions, how many he does not state, in the hierarchy of beings who dwell in the planetary ether, succeeding human individuals, at each of which improvements increase, the senses are multiplied, and the intellectual power greatly extended, until at last the state of pure spirit and the final glory of the final heaven is reached:—

'Reaching the sun he (the superior being, the pure soul,) is divested of all material substance, all carnal alloy. It is a flame; a breath. It is all intelligence, sentiment, thought. No impurity mingles with its perfect essence. It is an absolute soul, a soul without a body. The gaseous blazing mass that constitutes the sun is therefore set apart for these quintessential beings. A throne of fire must be the throne of souls. . . . . They are pure spirits living in the midst of a blazing atmosphere and the burning masses that compose the sun. That star whose volume far surpasses the united size of all the stars that make up our world is vast enough to give them an asylum. From this throne of fire these souls look down upon the marvelous procession of all the planetary globes that belong to the solar world. In the center of the world, comprehending the secrets of nature and the mysteries of the universe, they enjoy perfect happiness, absolute wisdom, and knowledge that has no bounds.

THE SUN'S RAYS PURIFIED SOULS.

M. Figuier hazards the further opinion that the sun is not only the home and receptacle of souls who have completed the cycle of their wanderings in the world, but is also nothing else than the assemblage of those souls come from different planets after passing through the intermediate states that he has described,—that the sun must be an aggregation of souls. And then M. Figuier advances the following very beautiful and poetical, if not practical, theory: Since the sun is the first cause of life, since it is (as he attempts to show in another portion of his book), the origin of life, of feeling, and of thought, since it is the determining cause of all organized life on the earth, why may we not declare that the rays transmitted by the sun to the earth and the other planets are nothing more or less than the emanations of these souls? That these are the emissions of pure spirits living in a radiant star that come to us and to dwellers in the other planets, under the visible form of rays? If this hypothesis be accepted, what magnificent, what sublime relations may we not catch a glimpse of between the sun and the globes that roll around him! Between the sun and the planets there would be a continual exchange and never broken circle and unending 'come and go' of beaming emissions which would engender and nourish in the solar world motion and activity, thought and feeling, and burning everywhere the torch of life! See the emanation of souls that dwell in the sun, descending upon the earth in the shape of solar rays. Light gives life to plants, and produces vegetable life to which sensibility belongs. Plants, having received from the sun the germ of sensibility, transmit it to animals, always with the help of the sun's heat. See the soul-germs infolded in animals develop, improve little by little, from one animal to another, and at last becomes incarnated in a human body. See, a little later the superhuman succeed the man, launch himself into the vast plains of ether and begin the long series of transmigration that will gradually lead him to the highest round of the ladder of spiritual growth, where all material substance has been eliminated, and when the time has come for the soul thus exalted, and with essence purified to the utmost, to enter the supreme home of bliss and intellectual and moral power—that is, the sun. Such would be the endless circle, the unbroken chain that would bind together all the beings of nature, and extend from the visible to the invisible world.'

THE FUTURE OF WICKED SOULS.

The good soul and the bad are not alike to undergo the change of life to superhuman beings. According to M. Figuier's theory the human soul, in order to rise into the realm of ether, must have attained an extreme degree of perfection, must have freed itself from all that weighed it down, must be subtile, light, purified. The soul of a bad, a wicked, a vile, or a cowardly man, coarse and low, which has not been improved, purified, and spiritualized, is unable to rise to the heavenly altitude, and is forced to remain on our sad and miserable globe. It lingers here to begin a second life:—

'After the death of this man it (his soul), will take up its residence in a new human body, losing the memory of its former existence. In this second incarnation the unimproved and coarse soul, lacking all noble power, and shorn of memory, will have to begin anew its moral education. The man who is born again a child recommences life with the uncultured and mean soul that was his at the moment of his death. These reincarnations in a human body can be very numerous. They must be repeated until the faculties of the soul are sufficiently developed, or its instincts sufficiently improved, so that the man can raise himself above the common level of our species. Then, only, this soul, fittingly purified, freed from its imperfections, can quit the earth, and after the death of the body, soar into space, and enter that new organism which succeeds that of man in the hierarchy of nature.' . . .

'The return to the second earthly life is a punishment less cruel, more reasonable and just, than condemnation to eternal torment. Here the punishment is proportioned to the sin. It is not an eternal penalty endured for a temporary fault; it is pitiful justice, which lays beside the punishment the means of avoiding it in the future. It does not forbid any return to good by an irrevocable doom for all eternity; it gives man a chance to tread again the path of happiness from which his passions have misled him, and to regain by his virtues the good things that he has lost.'

M. Figuier adds that infants dying at tender age, sucklings, or only a few months after birth, when their souls are yet undeveloped, have a similar fate as imperfect man. Their souls pass into the bodies of other children, and begin a new life. In this summary I have not endeavored to perfectly or systematically trace the development of M. Figuier's theory, or his arguments or scientific statements, but to give the substance merely of this new belief. He desires to impress it upon mankind at once, for he fears the teachings of materialsm, which he regards as the evil of European society, the plague of our day."

It is very evident that M. Feguire is a Spiritualist, or has received his wild theories from the teaching of the demons.

JOB'S DISEMBODIED STATE.

In advocating doctrines that are void of proof, it is sometimes thought best to manufacture proof. This is true of the doctrine of man's disembodied existence. An effort is being made to convert Job's testimony into evidence of a disembodied state, by setting up the claim that Job, when correctly translated, did not say, "Yet in my flesh shall I see God," but said, "Without my flesh shall I see God." The fallacy of this claim is apparent at a glance, for in the context Job tells us when he expected to see God: "For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth; and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh [or, without my flesh] shall I see God." Job 19: 25, 26. When did he expect to see God? Not during the interval between death and the resurrection, but "at the latter day," at which time the resurrection is due, for Jesus affirmed, "I will raise him up at the last day" (John 6: 40); so if Job was not to see his Redeemer till the latter day, it is a shocking blunder to say that he will then see him without his flesh, for if a disembodied state were to precede that epoch, it would then terminate; besides it is not reasonable to suppose that Job would overleap thousands of years of glory in the presence of God, and not speak of seeing God till the arrival of the latter day, if such glory were to exist in the intermediate state. The margin reads—"After I shall awake, though this body be destroyed, out of my flesh shall I see God." When? "After I shall awake"—not during the sleep of death. How? "Out of my flesh"; that is, out of my fleshly eyes. This reading being misapprehended, doubtless led to the erroneous rendering—"Without my flesh." W. S.

"GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM."

Sometimes immaterialists blunder into the use of the phrase, "The gospel of the kingdom," but apply it to a kingdom beyond the starry sky. But this application is certainly wrong, for Matthew (4: 17, 23) thus refers to the matter—"From that time Jesus began to preach, and to say, Repent; for the kingdom of heaven is at hand. . . . . And Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom." Here the proclamation of Christ—("The kingdom of heaven is at hand") is pronounced "the gospel of the kingdom"; hence "the gospel of the kingdom" had no reference to a kingdom then in existence, but to one still future, and "at hand." Certainly heaven was not "at hand" in any sense—not at hand in the sense of coming into existence, as it already existed; nor was it at hand in the sense of being imported, for it is never to be thus consolidated with our globe, for when the New Jerusalem descends, it will come "down from God out of heaven"—leaving heaven still in its former locality.

The kingdom which Jesus preached about, while proclaiming "the gospel of the kingdom," was the same kingdom he taught us to pray for—"Thy kingdom come; thy will be done on earth"; which will come "when the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all his holy angels with him; then shall he sit on the throne of his glory"; and it was "at hand" in the same sense in which Peter affirmed, "The end of all things is at hand"—the remaining time was comparatively short. W. S.

POLITICS.

"What harm is there in helping elect good men to fill the offices of our country? Where is the crime?" We have never looked upon the simple act of voting as being criminal; yet there are several reasons why we are just as well off without voting, aside from the consideration that there is a connecting link between the ballot-box and the sword.

1. If we could place all the members of our church on the same side, with an independent ticket, containing only the names of saints for officers, it would not be possible for us to carry the day.

2. If we should vote for one of the office-seeking candidates put up by corrupt politicians, we should be divided in our judgment as to which candidate was preferable, and some would vote for one, and some for the other; and thus the result would be about the same as though we had not voted.

3. When we meddle with political matters, we are apt to drink too deeply into the political spirit, and thus crowd out the spirit of devotion from our hearts, and produce alienation among some of our own members, who look at matters through different political glasses; and thus without making one hair white or black in political matters, we often chill the religious element in our own hearts, and in the church. W. S.

"I MYSELF."

The thought that when I get into the paradise of God, I shall be myself, and not an invisible shadow, is both consoling and scriptural. This thought, though not new to me, was forcibly renewed in my mind by the remark of an unconverted man who had lost his only child, and was reprimanded by a bigot for employing me to preach the funeral sermon, because I did not believe that the child had gone to heaven at its death. The reply was, "I had rather believe that my child is dead, and will remain dead till the resurrection, than to believe that it has turned into a ghost."

What consolation can there be in reflecting upon our departed friends as ghosts? What comfort can there be to contemplate greeting them as misty shadows, seeing we have never looked upon them in that form? When Jesus appeared to his friends, after being raised, he cheered their hearts with the announcement, "It is I myself; handle me and see." To contemplate meeting our friends themselves affords comfort. Job expected to see his Redeemer at the latter day, and thus exults in the thought: "Whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold." If saved at all, it will be "I myself"; and I shall see God "for myself." If I ever enter the kingdom of God, I shall be there myself, and my friends will know that it is "I myself." W. S.

Secret Translation.—A brother inquires whether "the translation of the saints will not be a secret event, of which the world will be ignorant till they find the saints all missing?"

We think not, from the fact the living saints are not to be translated till the dead saints are resurrected; and they are not to be resurrected till the sounding of the trump of God, which will be as audible as the voice of God on Mt. Sinai—"whose voice then shook the earth; but now he hath promised, saying, Yet once more I will shake not the earth only, but also heaven" (Heb. 12: 26); and this voice is called "the sound of a trumpet." ver. 19. So the same trumpet that once shook the earth literally, will "once more" literally shake the earth at the coming of the Lord. "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air." 1 Thess. 4: 16.

Thus it is evident (1) that the living saints are not to be caught up before the resurrected saints, but "together with them"; and (2) the resurrection will not occur till the trump shall sound; and (3) when the trump shall sound, it will shake earth and heaven, and this shaking will be as literal as that on Sinai. So both the resurrection and translation of the saints will be events known to the whole world, and then "the tribes of the earth shall mourn." Not till then will be "send his angels" to gather his elect. W. S.

Acknowledgment.—Bro. Grant.—I wish to acknowledge, through the Crisis, the kindness of those who have responded to your notice in last week's paper. From Sr. C. B. T., Levant, Me., $2; "A brother" in Jamaica, 25 cts.; "Essex St., Lynn, Mass.," $1.50; East Somerville (or Charlestown) 50 cts.; West Troy (I think) $1; "The Lord's money" (could not make out postmark) $1. All these came accompanied by no name; the three others which have come, with the name signed, I have acknowledged by letter. May the Lord bless the brothers and sisters who have remembered me in my need, to whom I return many grateful thanks. Having been an invalid for many years, confined to my bed for six years and a half, and now sorely bereaved, the kind words accompanying the good gifts of the dear brothers and sisters are very refreshing, and have done much to cheer many lonely and painful hours.

May God bless you all, and keep us faithful to the end, when we shall enter a happy home, where "God shall wipe away all tears, . . . and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying; neither shall there be any more pain." May we all meet in that blessed place. Mary E. I. Herron.

The Berean's Casket, by I. C. Wellcome.—Those who examine this book, say they find it the most full and valuable work to trace out the Scriptures on given points of special importance they have ever seen. One man says if he could have had it when young, it would have saved him more than a year's time in finding the Scriptures he has sought out by hard study. One minister who uses this book says: "If every minister in the United States who wishes to preach the word, knew of this book, and its value in tracing out the Bible subjects, and also the historical matter in it, which shows the fulfillment of the prophecies, they would all buy the book if it cost ten dollars." All Bible students can get more value than that out of it, if they use it. Price, postpaid, $2. For sale at this office.

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield Camp-ground, August 22d, 1871, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

PROPOSITION.

As we are living so very near the end of this world, when our work as a christian church must be done, when Jesus Christ will come to judge both the quick and the dead; and, believing very much good can be done in the spread of gospel truth, in campmeetings; therefore,

Resolved, That this conference choose a campmeeting committee of five, to make all needful arrangements for a campmeeting, to be held at such time and place, within this conference district, as they may deem best. Accepted, and adopted. This committee, as chosen, were—Brn. Flagg, Knapp, Harrison, Phelps, and Woodard.

Pursuant to order of business, reports were received, both written and verbal. Tidings of interest came up from the different churches represented of the blessings of God and the outpouring of his Spirit, manifest in the conversion of sinners and the strengthening of the weak in faith; also stirring Macedonian cries from places yet unreached, and which can only be provided for by Him who knows how to accomplish great results with feeble means.

Places reported where the gospel plow has been used with hopeful results, also neglected places and unanswered calls, were—Pumkin-Hook, North Greenwich, Schuylerville, Lansingburg, Troy, Caldwell, and Massena, N. Y.; Jamaica, Rawsonville, Brandon, Bennington, Rupert, Castleton, Rutland, Pownal Centre, and Woodford, Vt.; also several places in Mass. Adjourned until 9 o'clock to-morrow A. M.

Fifth session. Nine o'clock Saturday A. M. President in the chair. Prayer by Bro. Flagg. Minutes read and approved. On motion, a committee was chosen to solicit funds and procure a tent to be owned by this conference, and to be put into the field as early in the spring of 1872 as may be thought advisable. Brn. Flagg, Knapp and Lincoln were chosen to constitute such committee. Adjourned to call of chair.

Sixth session. Saturday, Oct. 21st, 3.30 P. M. Calls to order. Bro. Sibley in the chair. Prayer by Bro. Pike. The following resolutions were accepted and adopted.

1st. Resolved, That all monies received by members of this conference for the tent shall be accurately reported, together with the names of contributors, at the next quarterly meeting.

2nd. That all monies paid out by the treasurer of this Hoosack Valley Conference shall be paid as voted by the conference, or Board of Managers.

3d. That the minutes of this meeting shall be reported in the World's Crisis.

4th. That we, the members of this conference, do heartily tender our sincere thanks to our brethren and friends, for their kind hospitalities to us during this meeting.

5th. It was unanimously voted that this conference, in its call, organization, and all its deliberations, has been in harmony, and we believe by the direction of God.

A. P. Bump, Secretary.

Correspondence.

From Bro. H. P. Wright.

Bro. Grant:—Having passed through an ordeal by fire since I wrote you a few months since, and lost all our earthly goods we possessed, which was quite trying to the flesh, yet joyous while our lives were spared to make this acknowledgment of the Lord's wisdom and mercy to us,—we are led to exclaim with Job (5: 17, 18, if we mistake not, as our Bible was lost with all else consuming-ble), "Happy is the man whom God correcteth; therefore despise not thou the chastening of the Almighty; for he maketh sore, and bindeth up; he woundeth, and his hands make whole." It was the Lord's that was taken from us. We were but stewards in possession of the same. We have that glorious hope, which, if faithful to the end, will stand the fires of the last days; and that is encouragement enough for the weary pilgrim on his probationary journey. We can truly say, the brethren who have suffered by the late calamity are very submissive, and looking eagerly and zealously for the coming of the blessed One to reign, when all things that now are shall be destroyed, and mother earth be purified for the saints to inherit. These emphatical truths, with others so plainly laid before us, are encouragement enough for all. And verily we believe he whose right it is to come will come, and that quickly.

Our society here is in quite a prosperous condition; yet some of our members are missing on account of being necessitated by circumstances to leave the city with their families; yet in a short time we may expect them with us again. We have much to be thankful for, and especially in having one so watchful over the flock as our beloved Bro. Frank Burr. The Lord is with him, and, amidst the responsibilities of his position, it is plainly seen the grace of God is richly shed abroad in his heart, and enables him to stand in the front ranks as teacher of Bible truths. We want more of such men in these perilous times, where there is so much distrust and want of the kind of knowledge to teach and convince men that the time is near at hand when all should be watchful and have on the whole armor of godliness, for the coming of the just and lovely One.

Chicago, Nov. 20th, 1871.

From Bro. J. A. Cleaveland.

Bro. Grant:—I am glad to know that the Lord is still pouring out his Spirit in some localities. Last Sabbath, I went to Calais, Vt., to assist in the ordaining of Bro. E. N. Morse. Bro. Leonard Wheeler of Marshfield, Bro. Davis, pastor of the church at that place, with others, were present to take part in the services. Bro. Wheeler gave a very excellent discourse on the occasion, after which our dear brother was set apart for the work of the ministry by the laying on of hands and prayer. The meetings were attended with the blessed Spirit of God. I learn from Bro. Morse and others, that there is a very extensive reformation going on in a new section of country in the towns of Wolcott, Elmore, and Worcester. It extends some fifteen miles. It leaves none out in the cold. The gray-haired fathers and mothers, those in middle life, and younger ones, down to ten years old, are being brought in. It is said to be the greatest work ever known in this country.

It is going like fire in dry brush. Meetings are held every night, and the interest is extending towards the capital of the State. More than a hundred have been converted. On our way home, we stopped at two places in the vicinity of the meetings, and it seemed as though the entire valley was lit up with the glory of God. It was hallelujah and glory to God from every house. All whom we met wanted to hear about Christ's coming.

One man told me if he could believe that the earth was to be renewed, and be the abode of God's people, he should be the happiest man on earth. It did not take long to show the testimony to him, and he went on his way rejoicing. He is fifty-four years old. Glory to God, it did us good to be there. I never saw a people so anxious to hear Bible truth before. It all started from a Sabbath school. They have not had much preaching. Bro. Morse has been with them four or five times. Some others have preached some to them. We want more help in Vt. We are expecting Jesus soon to come. Glory to God. I wish some good man, a true servant of God, would come up here and labor. We need those who will preach the whole gospel, and stand up for Jesus and his truth.

No. Hydepark, Vt., Sept. 26th, 1871.

From Bro. H. B. Sevey.

Bro. Grant:—Having a few leisure moments, I pen a few lines for the Crisis, to answer the inquiries of Brn. and Srs. Since my last letter for the Crisis, which was in March, I have been doing duty the best I could. I held quite a number of protracted and conference meetings. In nearly all we had good interest. The cause of truth in this part of Maine never was in better condition than at the present. Some are asleep, while others are being decided to be wholly consecrated to the Lord and his service. I have long felt that we, as a people, were living very far beneath our privilege. I am satisfied the difficulty is, many who profess to be looking for the coming of Christ, only have it in theory. The evidence is, they do not purify themselves: John says—"Every man that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself, even as he is pure." We see by this if we have this faith, or hope, of being made like him, we shall purify ourselves. Will a man do this without the hope? Says the apostle, We stand by faith. If so, we show our faith by our works. We see this in Noah, who prepared the ark for a place of safety; also Lot in leaving Sodom. But suppose they only talked, and did as others did; would not they have shared the same fate? I do feel that there is danger of being overcharged with the cares of this world, and so that day come upon me unawares. I want the prayers of my dear brethren and sisters, that I may be kept from loving the world. My fear is that my mind may be devoted too much to the things of this life.

Our meetings this fall have been of deep interest. In nearly all of them some new interest has been awakened; wanderers have been reclaimed, and sinners converted. All praise to our blessed Jesus. Several have been restored to health by faith in God's promises. It has given a new impulse to the church to see what the Lord has done in this respect. O Lord, increase our faith. It is our privilege to have victory in Jesus' name; full salvation; saved now by faith in Jesus. Let us not rest satisfied without this faith.

From Bro. B. P. Stevens.

Bro. Grant:—Please say through the Crisis that I have reached home by the mercies of our heavenly Father. I am still gaining slowly, but not able to do anything as yet, for the want of strength; i. e., to work or hold meetings. I do not know as I shall be able this winter, as I seem to lose strength as the cold weather comes on. I want all to pray that I may do and suffer the will of my heavenly Father. I would say to those dear friends who have written to me, that I mean to write to them as fast and as far as I am able. In the mean time, we pray God to bless you all. Yours in affliction.

So. Butler, N. Y., Nov. 18th, 1871.

Bro. B. P. Manning writes from Rochester, N. H.:—"I am trying to do my duty and live for God. I have almost lost the use of my hands, so that I cannot do any more labor, unless the Lord gives me strength in my hands. God only knows what I shall do, for I am in debt for my board, which is a number of dollars, and must go to the county house again, unless the brethren send me aid to help me at this time. I have done the best that I can for the year past, but I cannot do any more labor. Dear brethren, what shall I do?"

Europe on a War Footing.—The reorganization of the Russian army, which at present excites absorbing attention at the European capitals, consists in the substitution for the conscription by allotment of a system which in effect places in the service every man capable of bearing arms, out of the entire population of seventy-eight millions. Prior to this movement, the Russian forces according to the official reports, consisted of 872,467 men in European Russia; 163,759 in the Caucasus; 55,436 in the Siberias, Turkestan and Orenburg; and 82,217 on the staff of the various military establishments—in all 1,173,879 men. The regular standing army was estimated at about 600,000 men, the remainder of the force being organized as a contingent reserve. The reorganization embraces the standing army, which will be put on a war footing, according to the standard developed by the French German campaign, and disciplined according to improved tactics. It will be commanded by fifty-one thousand commissioned officers. Of the standing force only sixty-six regiments, the Cossacks, will be maintained on their present footing without change.

The reserve force, or as designated by the imperial decree in which nominally it is established for defense against invasion, the "local forces" comprise every man between the ages required for the service, and no exemption is granted except upon petition and proofs presented to special courts, constituted to hear such cases. This enormous force is at once to go into training, and is being rapidly supplied with arms and equipments. Out of it a permanent reserve of 750,000 is to be organized, which will be commanded by 35,000 commissioned officers. The orders issued for the organization and drill of the residue of the local forces are such as will enable the whole number soon to be put upon an actual war basis, ready for the field on short call. In order to hasten this, the empire has been divided into military districts, to which the commissioned officers have been assigned according to the several quotas. The general orders issued at St. Petersburg on the 28th ult., fix the regular standing army at 600,000 men, and the standing reserve at 750,000, making a total of 1,350,000; and ready to be called into requisition to support this will be the "local forces," comprising the whole able-bodied male population. To the artillery one thousand guns are to be added, and active measures, in progress for several years, are being pushed for the enlargement of the naval squadron.

The precise significance of this vast armament is as yet, matter of conjecture; but it is a menace to all Europe, which indicates the probabilities that the Continent is soon to be the theatre of war on a larger scale than has been witnessed in modern times, and recalls the predictions of the great Napoleon, as to the Cossack overrunning Europe. The forces of the other powers liable to be involved, in case of hostilities, are reported as follows, on estimates published by the Austrian War Office:—Germany, 824,990 men, 2,022 pieces of artillery; Austria, 733,926 men, 1,600 guns, 190 metrailleuses; Turkey, 253,289 men, 732 cannon; Italy, 415,200 men, 720 pieces artillery; the British forces are not given in the estimate, and the available force of Great Britain in case of an European contest is a matter of dispute even in England. The condition of France is such that no reliable data can be given; she is now in a state of comparative exhaustion in a military sense, and her resources are subject to terrible strains to meet the Germany indemnity claims. Taking all Europe, not less than between three millions and a half and four millions of men are maintained in the military establishments, and withdrawn from the productive industrial pursuits. When the condition of the masses is considered, and the enormous dimensions of the national debts, the question which suggests itself is, how long before some of these nations must break down under the weight of such enormous military establishments?—San Francisco Daily Bulletin.

Obituaries.

Andrews. Died in East Bridgeport, Nov. 16th, 1871, Sr. Ruth Ann Andrews, wife of Bro. Ali Andrews, aged fifty-five years.

Sr. Andrews suffered much from a cancer, which resulted in her death. Being clothed in the "armor of God," she met her last enemy with a calmness peculiar to the christian, and now quietly sleeps in Jesus, waiting for his coming to raise her to immortality. The funeral was attended by the writer. Miles Grant.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

Paris, Nov. 24. A large number of sympathizers with ex-Emperor Napoleon to-day made a demonstration in his honor. They traversed the Faubourg St. Germain with shouts of "Vive Napoleon." There was no attempt by the police to interfere with the demonstration.

Alexandria, Egypt, Nov. 24. A steamer (name not given), crowded with Pilgrims, from Algiers en route to Mecca, via the Suez Canal, was run into yesterday and sunk. Seventy-five passengers were drowned. No European travelers were lost as far as ascertained.

DOMESTIC.

Salt Lake City, Nov. 21. The corner-stone of the first Methodist Church in Salt Lake City was laid yesterday. There are now here regular church organizations of the Methodists, Episcopalians, Presbyterians and Roman Catholics.

Trains from the East are still forty-eight hours behind time, owing to the snow storm. The weather here is very cold. Reports from Cottonwood and neighboring mining camps say that the snow on a level is from three to four feet deep. There is every indication of a hard winter.

City of Mexico, Nov. 11, via Havana, Nov. 10.—There is a formidable revolution throughout the country, and a change in the existing government is expected before the new year. The country was never in such an unsettled condition. The state of Oaxica has pronounced for the revolutionists and General Porfiero Diaz is at the head of a formidable army. Aguiscalientes confesses that a revolution is inevitable.

Helena, Montana, Nov. 25. A Fort Shaw dispatch says that two companies of the Seventh Infantry, Major Freeman commanding, while returning from Fort Browning, were caught in yesterday's fearful storm, and are now camped twelve miles from here. A number were badly frozen. Ten of the frozen men have been brought into the hospital. The worst cases are still out, but are being brought in as fast as possible. The men are frozen principally about the feet, and will lose toes and some even their feet. The thermometer this morning was thirty degrees below zero, and to-night it is fifteen degrees below. There have been no stages from any direction within thirty-six hours.

Salt Lake, Nov. 25. It is reported that the loss of life by the late snow slides in the canons is far more serious than stated yesterday. A number of persons are missing and are supposed to be lost. It is storming again to-day in the mining districts of Wasatch, and a hard winter seems inevitable.

Lawrence, Kansas, Nov. 26. The recent storm was unprecedented in severity on the plains. In Western Kansas large numbers of Texas cattle, and several herdsmen were frozen to death. Five bodies, supposed to be those of buffalo hunters, were brought into Hayes City last night, frozen stiff. Great anxiety is felt for other parties hunting buffaloes. They have not been heard from since the storm.

Meteors.—A table has been published showing the heights of thirteen shooting stars observed in England during the meteoric shower of August, 1870. The average height of sixteen meteors, recorded in the report, was seventy-two miles at first appearance and forty-eight miles at disappearance; of the thirteen in the present list, seventy-two miles at first appearance and fifty-four miles at disappearance; of twenty meteors observed in August, 1863, eighty-two miles at first appearance and fifty-eight at disappearance. The average velocity of the Perseids, relative to the earth, observed in the year 1863, was thirty-four miles per second; that of the three Perseids, in the present list was thirty-seven miles per second, while the velocity obtained from the cosmical theory was thirty-eight miles per second.

In Brief.

—— Montaigne, the celebrated French essayist, whose clear style, as well as vigor of thought, have been the praise of good critics the world over, made his boast that he never used a word that could not be readily understood by anybody in the Paris markets. A fact full of instruction for all who desire success in addressing the people. Plain words are ever the best.——Slavery in Siam is to be abolished in January, 1872.——Eighty-nine newspapers, dailies, weeklies and monthlies, were destroyed by the Chicago fire.——Russia is immensely busy in accumulating warlike material.——The cholera cases are increasing in Constantinople.——A distinguished Cardinal, it is said, has made the statement that the Pope will not leave Rome unless compelled so to do by physical force or personal violence.——It seems now quite certain that one or two French frigates are cruising off the French ports nearest England, watching lest the fallen Emperor undertake to capture France.——The body of a woman buried in Lockport, N. Y., forty years ago, was recently exhumed, and found solidly petrified. It weighed six hundred pounds.——There is considerable religious interest at the Sailors' Hospital in Chelsea. At nearly every prayer-meeting several rise for prayers, and a number of conversions.——Russia, it is stated, is the only power of Western Europe in which the International Society cannot find a favorable field for its operations. The reason given is that there is always a demand for labor in that country, and the the workingmen, as a general rule, are well paid.

Notices.

☞ Notice.

At a meeting of the Advent Christian Publication Society, held Aug. 23d, 1871, the following Preamble and Resolutions were adopted:—

Whereas, The churches have been misled, divided, and the cause of Christ injured, by the labors of unworthy men, who have been advertised as approved of the body by the publication of their appointments in the Crisis, therefore,

Resolved, That the Editorial officers be requested to withhold the publication of all appointments for persons to them unknown, and also those whose labors tend to divide the church, and those who preach doctrines calculated to drown men in perdition.

Resolved, That when local and personal difficulties in any place cause brethren to establish an opposition meeting, that no appointments for that meeting be published until a proper investigation of the difficulties shall be made; and when sufficient time has passed for such an investigation, and no effort has been made by the original meeting for it, then the appointments for that meeting shall be withheld also.

Resolved, That the question of publishing appointments, and notices of meetings, be left to the Editor, Editorial Committee, and Business Agent.

A. W. Sibley, Secretary Adv. Chris. Publication Society.

Vermont Conference.

The Second Quarterly Conference of the Advent Christian Church, for the State of Vermont, will be held at East Roxbury, Vt., commencing Wednesday evening, Dec. 6th, 1871, and continuing till Dec. 9th. Come, brethren in the ministry, young and old, from throughout the State, and let us prepare for a united effort in the Redeemer's cause. We hope also to have every church represented by a delegate. The Lord is in this place graciously winning souls to Christ. Come prepared to work with God. H. F. C.

New York A. C. Conference.

The second quarterly session of the New York Advent Christian Conference, for the current year (D. V.), will be held with the church in the city of Rochester, commencing Thursday evening, Dec. 7th, and holding over the following Sunday. Immediate attention is asked to the appointment of delegates, and to the taking of the quarterly collections by the various churches. Our extended mission work with the tents this season has left a debt of over one hundred and fifty dollars upon us, that should be lifted at once, lest the mission preachers suffer this winter for lack of summer wages.

Dear brethren, come up again to the feast. Bring in your tithes and offerings. And while you open your treasures to the work, open your hearts to the Lord for the prosperity of Zion, and for the coming of Israel's King. The opening discourse will be given by Bro. Milton R. Miles.

D. Cogswell, President.
Wm. E. Brown, Secretary.

Protracted Meeting.

Providence permitting, a protracted meeting will commence in the Advent Chapel at Bonny Eagle, Me., Tuesday evening, Dec. 5th, and continue over the following Sunday. Elders Jesse Gay and A. Bellows are engaged, and Bro. A. A. Robinson is expected to be present and preach the word. We cordially invite the lovers of the "blessed hope" in this vicinity to come in and assist us in our efforts to prepare men for the soon coming judgment. C. H. Sweet, Pastor.

Notice.

At our last quarterly meeting, there being no request for the next meeting, it was left to me to ascertain the desired place. As it is our annual meeting, and officers are to be appointed for the ensuing year, it should be held in some central place, easy of access to all interested. Any church desiring the next quarterly meeting will please correspond with me at South Killingly, Ct.

E. Bellows.

Protracted Meeting.

The Lord willing, there will be a meeting in Suncook, N. H., commencing Wednesday, Dec. 6th, and continue afternoons and evenings through the week, and over Sunday, Dec. 10th. Not having heard from some of our principal churches in New Hampshire, in response to my request, I wish to say that the sole object of getting the information embraced in the notice is, to furnish the W. Springfield Camp-ground.

To those who have buildings on the Springfield Camp-ground:—I find the houses nearly all open, as usual; and I have found a man who will move into Sr. Holden's house. They have no children, but will need something done to make it comfortable for winter, and I have let him move in to-day. The buildings are all shut up, and a man on the ground to keep them shut; and I just ask the owners of buildings to send me in what they think it is worth to them to know there is a man on the ground to take care of their buildings. This I have done on my own responsibility, as the committee have no funds in the treasury. The only way is to call for contributions. Act as you think best. Direct to Hiram Munger, Chicopee Falls, Mass.

Notice.

The Advent Christian Church hold meetings every Lord's day in Temperance Hall, No. 6 Bleury St., Montreal, P. Q., at half-past ten A. M., and half-past six P. M.

R., the former about seven, and the latter about six miles from the place of meeting. By notifying Bro. F. House, Delton, Sauk Co., teams will meet friends at either point. Let there be a general rally of ministers and members to this meeting. Let all the churches in the district send delegates. Bro. Knapp, Jones, and Ainsworth, will be a committee for preaching.

Geo. Thomson.

Notice.

The Lord willing, there will be a protracted prayer-meeting in a few weeks, at Hallowell, Me. Particulars hereafter. W. Cousens.

Maine Mission Agency.

At our last annual State Conference, I was appointed to travel, and solicit and collect subscriptions and donations for the "Maine Mission and Tract Fund." I can devote but a part of the time to that work, as I go preaching through the State. I therefore appoint Eld. J. A. Libby to act in my stead, in the northern and western part of the State. He will call on you for aid in this mission work. Come, brethren, sisters, children and friends, you can all become members of this Mission Society, and give to help spread the truth.

I. C. Wellcome.

Notice.

Myself and wife are making arrangemets to travel, and preach the word of life more extensively the coming winter than usual. The preliminaries of the great day of the Lord are so manifest at the present time, we are more than anxious to do all that we can for the salvation of a perishing world; and would say to brethren and friends in Michigan, Northern Ohio, and Indiana, that if any desire series of meetings in their localities, please inform us by letter at Reading, Mich.

A. N. & M. A. Seymour.

It is going like fire in dry brush. Meetings are held every night, and the interest is extending towards the capital of the State. More than a hundred have been converted. On our way home, we stopped at two places in the vicinity of the meetings, and it seemed as though the entire valley was lit up with the glory of God. It was hallelujah and glory to God from every house. All whom we met wanted to hear about Christ's coming.

One man told me if he could believe that the earth was to be renewed, and be the abode of God's people, he should be the happiest man on earth. It did not take long to show the testimony to him, and he went on his way rejoicing. He is fifty-four years old. Glory to God, it did us good to be there. I never saw a people so anxious to hear Bible truth before. It all started from a Sabbath school. They have not had much preaching. Bro. Morse has been with them four or five times. Some others have preached some to them. We want more help in Vt. We are expecting Jesus soon to come. Glory to God. I wish some good man, a true servant of God, would come up here and labor. We need those who will preach the whole gospel, and stand up for Jesus and his truth.

No. Hydepark, Vt., Sept. 26th, 1871.

From Bro. H. B. Sevey.

Bro. Grant:—Having a few leisure moments, I pen a few lines for the Crisis, to answer the inquiries of Bro. and Srs. Since my last letter for the Crisis, which was in March, I have been doing duty the best I could. I held quite a number of protracted and conference meetings. In nearly all we had good interest. The cause of truth in this part of Maine never was in better condition than at the present. Some are asleep, while others are being decided to be wholly consecrated to the Lord and his service. I have long felt that we, as a people, were living very far beneath our privilege. I am satisfied the difficulty is, many who profess to be looking for the coming of Christ, only have it in theory. The evidence is, they do not purify themselves. John says—"Every man that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself, even as he is pure." We see by this if we have this faith, or hope, of being made like him, we shall purify ourselves. Will a man do this without the hope? Says the apostle, We stand by faith. If so, we show our faith by our works. We see this in Noah, who prepared the ark for a place of safety; also Lot in leaving Sodom. But suppose they only talked, and did as others did; would not they have shared the same fate? I do feel that there is danger of being overcharged with the cares of this world, and so that day come upon me unawares. I want the prayers of my dear brethren and sisters, that I may be kept from loving the world. My fear is that my mind may be devoted too much to the things of this life.

Our meetings this fall have been of deep interest. In nearly all of them some new interest has been awakened; wanderers have been reclaimed, and sinners converted. All praise to our blessed Jesus. Several have been restored to health by faith in God's promises. It has given a new impulse to the church to see what the Lord has done in this respect. O Lord, increase our faith. It is our privilege to have victory in Jesus' name; full salvation; saved now by faith in Jesus. Let us not rest satisfied without this faith.

From Bro. B. P. Stevens.

Bro. Grant:—Please say through the Crisis that I have reached home by the mercies of our heavenly Father. I am still gaining slowly, but not able to do anything as yet, for the want of strength; i. e., to work or hold meetings. I do not know as I shall be able this winter, as I seem to lose strength as the cold weather comes on. I want all to pray that I may do and suffer the will of my heavenly Father. I would say to those dear friends who have written to me, that I mean to write to them as fast and as far as I am able. In the mean time, we pray God to bless you all. Yours in affliction.

So. Butler, N. Y., Nov. 18th, 1871.

Bro. B. P. Manning writes from Rochester, N. H.:—"I am trying to do my duty and live for God. I have almost lost the use of my hands, so that I cannot do any more labor, unless the Lord gives me strength in my hands. God only knows what I shall do, for I am in debt for my board, which is a number of dollars, and must go to the county house again, unless the brethren send me aid to help me at this time. I have done the best that I can for the year past, but I cannot do any more labor. Dear brethren, what shall I do?"

Europe on a War Footing.—The reorganization of the Russian army, which at present excites absorbing attention at the European capitals, consists in the substitution for the conscription by allotment of a system which in effect places in the service every man capable of bearing arms, out of the entire population of seventy-eight millions. Prior to this movement, the Russian forces according to the official reports, consisted of 872,467 men in European Russia; 163,759 in the Caucasus; 51,436 in the Siberias, Turkestan and Ovanburg; and 82,217 on the staff of the various military establishments—in all 1,173,879 men. The regular standing army was estimated at about 600,000 men, the remainder of the force being organized as a contingent reserve. The reorganization embraces the standing army, which will be put on a war footing, according to the standard developed by the French German campaign, and disciplined according to improved tactics. It will be commanded by fifty-one thousand commissioned officers. Of the standing force only sixty-six regiments, the Cossacks, will be maintained on their present footing without change.

The reserve force, or as designated by the imperial decree in which nominally it is established for defense against invasion, the "local forces" comprise every man between the ages required for the service, and no exemption is granted except upon petition and proofs presented to special courts, constituted to hear such cases. This enormous force is at once to go into training, and is being rapidly supplied with arms and equipments. Out of it a permanent reserve of 750,000 is to be organized, which will be commanded by 35,000 commissioned officers. The orders issued for the organization and drill of the residue of the local forces are such as will enable the whole number soon to be put upon an actual war basis, ready for the field on short call. In order to hasten this, the empire has been divided into military districts, to which the commissioned officers have been assigned according to the several quotas. The general orders issued at St. Petersburg on the 28th ult., fix the regular standing army at 600,000 men, and the standing reserve at 750,000, making a total of 1,350,000; and ready to be called into requisition to support this will be the "local forces," comprising the whole able-bodied male population. To the artillery one thousand guns are to be added, and active measures, in progress for several years, are being pushed for the enlargement of the naval squadron.

The precise significance of this vast armament is as yet, matter of conjecture; but it is a menace to all Europe, which indicates the probabilities that the Continent is soon to be the theatre of war on a larger scale than has been witnessed in modern times, and recalls the predictions of the great Napoleon, as to the Cossack overrunning Europe. The forces of the other powers liable to be involved, in case of hostilities, are reported as follows, on estimates published by the Austrian War Office:—Germany, 824,990 men, 2,022 pieces of artillery; Austria, 733,926 men, 1,600 guns, 190 mitrailleuses; Turkey, 253,289 men, 732 cannon; Italy, 415,200 men, 720 pieces artillery; the British forces are not given in the estimate, and the available force of Great Britain in case of an European contest is a matter of dispute even in England. The condition of France is such that no reliable data can be given; she is now in a state of comparative exhaustion in a military sense, and her resources are subject to terrible strains to meet the Germany indemnity claims. Taking all Europe, not less than between three millions and a half and four millions of men are maintained in the military establishments, and withdrawn from the productive industrial pursuits. When the condition of the masses is considered, and the enormous dimensions of the national debts, the question which suggests itself is, how long before some of these nations must break down under the weight of such enormous military establishments?—San Francisco Daily Bulletin.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

Paris, Nov. 24. A large number of sympathizers with ex-Emperor Napoleon to-day made a demonstration in his honor. They traversed the Faubourg St. Germain with shouts of "Vive Napoleon." There was no attempt by the police to interfere with the demonstration.

Alexandria., Egypt, Nov. 24. A steamer (name not given), crowded with Pilgrims, from Algiers en route to Mecca, via the Suez Canal, was run into yesterday and sunk. Seventy-five passengers were drowned. No European travelers were lost as far as ascertained.

DOMESTIC.

Salt Lake City, Nov. 21. The corner-stone of the first Methodist Church in Salt Lake City was laid yesterday. There are now here regular church organizations of the Methodists, Episcopalians, Presbyterians and Roman Catholics.

Trains from the East are still forty-eight hours behind time, owing to the snow storm. The weather here is very cold. Reports from Cottonwood and neighboring mining camps say that the snow on a level is from three to four feet deep. There is every indication of a hard winter.

City of Mexico, Nov. 11, via Havana, Nov. 19.—There is a formidable revolution throughout the country, and a change in the existing government is expected before the new year. The country was never in such an unsettled condition. The state of Oaxica has pronounced for the revolutionists and General Porfiero Diaz is at the head of a formidable army. Aguiscalientes confesses that a revolution is inevitable.

Helena, Montana, Nov. 25. A Fort Shaw dispatch says that two companies of the Seventh Infantry, Major Freeman commanding, while returning from Fort Browning, were caught in yesterday's fearful storm, and are now camped twelve miles from here. A number were badly frozen. Ten of the frozen men have been brought into the hospital. The worst cases are still out, but are being brought in as fast as possible. The men are frozen principally about the feet, and will lose toes and some even their feet. The thermometer this morning was thirty degrees below zero, and to-night it is fifteen degrees below. There have been no stages from any direction within thirty-six hours.

Salt Lake, Nov. 25. It is reported that the loss of life by the late snow slides in the canons is far more serious than stated yesterday. A number of persons are missing and are supposed to be lost. It is storming again to-day in the mining districts of Wasatch, and a hard winter seems inevitable.

Lawrence, Kansas, Nov. 26. The recent storm was unprecedented in severity on the plains. In Western Kansas large numbers of Texas cattle and several herdsmen were frozen to death. Five bodies, supposed to be those of buffalo hunters, were brought into Hayes City last night, frozen stiff. Great anxiety is felt for other parties hunting buffaloes. They have not been heard from since the storm.

Meteors.—A table has been published showing the heights of thirteen shooting stars observed in England during the meteoric shower of August, 1870. The average height of sixteen meteors, recorded in the report, was seventy-two miles at first appearance and forty-eight miles at disappearance; of the thirteen in the present list, seventy-two miles at first appearance and fifty-four miles at disappearance; of twenty meteors observed in August, 1863, eighty-two miles at first appearance and fifty-eight at disappearance. The average velocity of the Perseids, relative to the earth, observed in the year 1863, was thirty-four miles per second; that of the three Perseids, in the present list was thirty-seven miles per second, while the velocity obtained from the cosmical theory was thirty-eight miles per second.

In Brief.

—— Montaigne, the celebrated French essayist, whose clear style, as well as vigor of thought, have been the praise of good critics the world over, made his boast that he never used a word that could not be readily understood by anybody in the Paris markets. A fact full of instruction for all who desire success in addressing the people. Plain words are ever the best.——Slavery in Siam is to be abolished in January, 1873.——Eighty-nine newspapers, dailies, weeklies and monthlies, were destroyed by the Chicago fire.——Russia is immensely busy in accumulating warlike material.——The cholera cases are increasing in Constantinople.——A distinguished Cardinal, it is said, has made the statement that the Pope will not leave Rome unless compelled so to do by physical force or personal violence.——It seems now quite certain that one or two French frigates are cruising off the French ports nearest England, watching lest the fallen Emperor undertake to capture France.——The body of a woman buried in Lockport, N. Y., forty years ago, was recently exhumed, and found solidly petrified. It weighed six hundred pounds.——There is considerable religious interest at the Sailors' Hospital in Chelsea. At nearly every prayer-meeting several rise for prayers, and a number of conversions.——Russia, it is stated, is the only power of Western Europe in which the International Society cannot find a favorable field for its operations. The reason given is that there is always a demand for labor in that country, and the the workingmen, as a general rule, are well paid.

☞ Notice.

At a meeting of the Advent Christian Publication Society, held Aug. 23d, 1871, the following Preamble and Resolutions were adopted:—

Whereas, The churches have been misled, divided, and the cause of Christ injured, by the labors of unworthy men, who have been advertised as approved of the body by the publication of their appointments in the Crisis, therefore,

Resolved, That the Editorial officers be requested to withhold the publication of all appointments for persons to them unknown, and also those whose labors tend to divide the church, and those who preach doctrines calculated to drown men in perdition.

Resolved, That when local and personal difficulties in any place cause brethren to establish an opposition meeting, that no appointments for that meeting be published until a proper investigation of the difficulties shall be made; and when sufficient time has passed for such an investigation, and no effort has been made by the original meeting for it, then the appointments for that meeting shall be withheld also.

Resolved, That the question of publishing appointments, and notices of meetings, be left to the Editor, Editorial Committee, and Business Agent.

A. W. Sibley, Secretary Adv. Chris.
Publication Society.

Quarterly Conference.

It is high time for a call for a session of the Mass. Advent Conference. If any church would like the meeting held in their place the first week in Jan., 1872, let us know it, and we will issue a call for the same. Let us hear soon.

L. Boutell, for the Committee.

Vermont Conference.

The Second Quarterly Conference of the Advent Christian Church, for the State of Vermont, will be held at East Roxbury, Vt., commencing Wednesday evening, Dec. 6th, 1871, and continuing till Dec. 9th. Come, brethren in the ministry, young and old, from throughout the State, and let us prepare for a united effort in the Redeemer's cause. We hope also to have every church represented by a delegate. The Lord is in this place graciously winning souls to Christ. Come prepared to work with God. H. F. C.

New York A. C. Conference.

The second quarterly session of the New York Advent Christian Conference, for the current year (D. V.), will be held with the church in the city of Rochester, commencing Thursday evening, Dec. 7th, and holding over the following Sunday. Immediate attention is asked to the appointment of delegates, and to the taking of the quarterly collections by the various churches. Our extended mission work with the tents this season has left a debt of over one hundred and fifty dollars upon us, that should be lifted at once, lest the mission preachers suffer this winter for lack of summer wages.

Dear brethren, come up again to the feast. Bring in your tithes and offerings. And while you open your treasures to the work, open your hearts to the Lord for the prosperity of Zion, and for the coming of Israel's King. The opening discourse will be given by Bro. Milton R. Miles.

D. Cogswell, President.
Wm. E. Brown, Secretary.

Protracted Meeting.

Providence permitting, a protracted meeting will commence in the Advent Chapel at Bonny Eagle, Me., Tuesday evening, Dec. 5th, and continue over the following Sunday. Elders Jesse Gay and A. Bellows are engaged, and Bro. A. A. Robinson is expected to be present and preach the word. We cordially invite the lovers of the "blessed hope" in this vicinity to come in and assist us in our efforts to prepare men for the soon coming judgment. C. H. Sweet, Pastor.

Notice.

At our last quarterly meeting, there being no request for the next meeting, it was left to me to ascertain the desired place. As it is our annual meeting, and officers are to be appointed for the ensuing year, it should be held in some central place, easy of access to all interested. Any church desiring the next quarterly meeting will please correspond with me at South Killingly, Ct.

E. Bellows.

Explanatory.

Not having heard from some of our principal churches in New Hampshire, in response to my request, I wish to say that the sole object of getting the information embraced in the notice is, to furnish the W. Springfield Camp-ground.

To those who have buildings on the Springfield Camp-ground:—I find the houses nearly all open, as usual; and I have found a man who will move into Sr. Holden's house. They have no children, but will need something done to make it comfortable for winter, and I have let him move in to-day. The buildings are all shut up, and a man on the ground to keep them shut; and I just ask the owners of buildings to send me in what they think it is worth to them to know there is a man on the ground to take care of their buildings. This I have done on my own responsibility, as the committee have no funds in the treasury. The only way is to call for contributions. Act as you think best. Direct to Hiram Munger, Chicopee Falls, Mass.

Notice.

The Advent Christian Church hold meetings every Lord's day in Temperance Hall, No. 6 Bleury St., Montreal, P. Q., at half-past ten a. m., and half-past six p. m.

Any coming by railway, can come by way of Madison to Baraboo, or to Kilbourn City on the Milwaukee and St. Paul R. R., the former about seven, and the latter about six miles from the place of meeting. By notifying Bro. F. House, Delton, Sauk Co., teams will meet friends at either point. Let there be a general rally of ministers and members to this meeting. Let all the churches in the district send delegates. Brn. Knapp, Jones, and Ainsworth, will be a committee for preaching.

Geo. Thomson.

Notice.

The Lord willing, there will be a protracted prayer-meeting in a few weeks, at Hallowell, Me. Particulars hereafter. W. Cousens.

Maine Mission Agency.

At our last annual State Conference, I was appointed to travel, and solicit and collect subscriptions and donations for the "Maine Mission and Tract Fund." I can devote but a part of the time to that work, as I go preaching through the State. I therefore appoint Eld. J. A. Libby to act in my stead, in the northern and western part of the State. He will call on you for aid in this mission work. Come, brethren, sisters, children and friends, you can all become members of this Mission Society, and give to help spread the truth.

I. C. Wellcome.

Notice.

Myself and wife are making arrangemets to travel, and preach the word of life more extensively the coming winter than usual. The preliminaries of the great day of the Lord are so manifest at the present time, we are more than anxious to do all that we can for the salvation of a perishing world; and would say to brethren and friends in Michigan, Northern Ohio, and Indiana, that if any desire series of meetings in their localities, please inform us by letter at Reading, Mich.

A. N. & M. A. Seymour.

P. S. After filling two contracts for series of meetings, we shall be at liberty to go into the regions beyond. A. N. & M. A. S.

BRING ME HOME.

I know not the way I am going,
But well do I know my guide;
With a childlike trust I give my hand
To the mighty Friend by my side.
The only thing that I say to him,
As he takes it, is—Hold it fast;
Suffer me not to lose my way,
But bring me home at last.

As when the tired traveler,
Alone in an unknown land,
Tells the guide his destined place of rest,
And leaves all else in his hand,—
'Tis Home, 'tis Home that we wish to reach,
He who guides us may choose the way;
Little we heed the path we take,
If nearer Home each day.

ODDS AND ENDS.

All literature, of modern times, is saturated with the lie and the hope of the devil—"Thou shalt not surely die." From the enchanting verse of the poet laureate of England down, down to the simpleton's lines who jingles rhymes for the left hand corner of the American country newspaper, it is one long procession of metaphors in behalf of the false theology of the day: "Our souls are immortal." The essay of the acute logician, whose treatise on the mental powers and capacities attracts and delights you for an hour of close attention, brings you up in a most provokingly non sequitur manner to an immortal soul conclusion! The secular outrages which follow the infernal doctrine of eternal misery, in the intellectual world, are even more heinous; but they are less frequent. For Universalism and Restorationism are the names for the real belief of nine-tenths of the laity in the Protestant churches of America to-day.

No wonder then that the truth is in such disrepute and contempt on the question referred to, when it is broached for the first time to an orthodox minister or layman, or to a mere "member of the congregation." You have almost committed the unpardonable sin when you mention, as possible of correctness, the sleep of the dead or the destruction of the wicked! When I was in the Eastern States, a few months ago, I was cordially invited to accept the hospitalities of a certain distant relative. I did stay at her house for a few days; but I think I so horrified my cousin, one Sunday afternoon, by "letting out" my views—on a favorable opportunity to speak—that she was glad when the audacious character took his departure. And yet she loves me very much. But, I mean, she became afraid of me! Now she is an intelligent Yankee woman, and gifted with much physical courage.

Dr. Packard once asked (now) Rev. Dr. Bancroft, of Brooklyn, N. Y., when this popular Brooklyn preacher was a student at Alexandria, "If there is no hell-fire, how are you going to convert the wicked?" Dr. Bancroft replied that in the first place, he did not consider that he was bound to answer that question. But he would say that if the manifestation of God's love would not convert souls, a declaration of eternal hell-fire wrath would prove unavailing.—(Dr. Bancroft is a minister in high standing in the Episcopal church; but neither before his ordination nor since has he assented to the eternal misery theory. I know not how much he says, if anything, one way or the other, on the subject, in the pulpit. Nothing, I suppose.) All high literature is choked with the great lie; and the illuminated minds of only a few of the great men in the sects give forth a shining announcement and argument for the truth on this subject, which they have discovered.

Now in conducting a warfare for the truth, it is well, perhaps, to consider these things; to bear constantly in mind the great advantage which the maintainers of error have on the Life and Death question. Inherited opinion; educated opinion; the opinion of poetry and of the most elegant prose of the age: all against the truth;—and also the comfort of gifted sinners who are often perfect in the conceit of inherent immortality.

Many conclude, I notice, that they must first get into the general good graces of Tom, Dick and Harry, and then possibly they may leak their views on the Life and Death question, with more prospect of success in advancing the truth. Let every man be persuaded in his own mind. Doubtless diversities of styles are required, in action and speech. But I have seen more accomplished by a bold, straight-forward declaration of faith, and a candid argument made upon it—from the start. Sometimes I think you cannot be so sly about the inoculation that you will not startle; and if there has been ground made for suspecting the missionary of studied deceit, the surprise is certain to be followed by a repelling altogether. In other words (my opinion only), I do not think much is ever accomplished by the "Artful Dodger" in missionary life. "As it is not pretended that certain beliefs named are essential to salvation, why press them?" says one. Often, though not in themselves essential to saving, they are essential to arousing, convincing, converting: essential in a preliminary way; and so, in point of result, equally as essential in such and such cases as is faith in Christ, direct and simple. I guess it is getting to be understood what I am coming at: a sneaking missionary work is no more charged with probabilities of fruitfulness, than is a bold, aggressive championship of the whole counsel. This is so, at least.

Baptists and Methodists have accused, and are now accusing, Second Advent folks with deceit, in slyly spreading the doctrines which now seem to come under the denominational name. It is not a true accusation; judging by the rule, and not by the exceptions. But, I see articles in the Crisis, and other Advent papers, lately, which directly or by intimation encourage or propose the kind of missionary duplicity on the Life and Death question which I deprecate. When Christ told his disciples to be wise as serpents, he did not instruct them to be snakes in their proclamations of faith.

"Doctrine will not save a man without righteous practice." Well, that is admitted. "Some men have their heads full of sound doctrine, and their hearts full of guile." Admitted, I say. But I would like to know where the practice that is of any value is to come from without good "doctrine"? And, really, when you are marking down "essentials" in faith, you are undertaking a great thing. Because, so much depends on circumstances and opportunities of illumination.

I have great confidence in the working power of a full counsel of truth in a man. And I remark that a man full of orthodox falsehoods is apt to have a stereotyped form of godly life. You must do so and so; or refrain from this really unessential act—the deeds being matters of pure voluntary choice, no moral principle involved—or you will be damned. There is no freedom in orthodox society. If they do not set you up a form of precise words for every prayer, they will be sure, at least, to set you up a narrow, high-boarded path for every day of life. Now, I say, there are no dangers of carelessness or levity in true religious freedom of daily life. The dangers really are with the bigoted formalist,—the greater proportion. There is moral freedom, as there is mental freedom. Choose ye!

Now the doctrines of orthodoxy so afflict the human reason, that, fully possessed of the creed, the mind is in a condition to accept this or that make-shift, or prescribed set of deeds, so as to be set from under a penalty that is inexplicable. So the gloom of orthodoxy. So its microscopic attention to petty details of life. No wonder people grow crazy in service under the eternal hell-fire creeds. There is all along in correspondence with it a stereotyped way for hourly service, that cramps, disheartens, renders desperate, drives into madness. And so there is always on earth a minute criticism of others, as well as an atomic introspection. Got something inside of me that is to live forever! Can't touch it! Can't see it! Neither in myself or in another! There: Heaven help me, I'm afraid I laughed too loud! That intangible something in me has been blackened by that shout of levity! And so much time is taken up in morbid self-scrutiny;—for this is not mocking an occasional, proper compunction, but setting forth a sample of every minute of every earthly day of remorse, under legitimate workings of the eternal misery theory. And that men, christian men and women of the prevailing Protestant sects, are not all crazed, is because they do not live up to the full, lively appreciation of their own creed. Facing that, the learned, unprejudiced, bold minister is compelled to say—"It blanches the human intellect!"

Here is the true doctrine, as I understand it, for a re-statement. On this little ball in the mighty universe God has created an order of beings, called Man. An Opportunity for Eternal Life is originally given. This opportunity lost, through disobedience of a plain command, there is a Second Opportunity vouchsafed, through the life, death and resurrection on earth of a divine Son of the Creator. Now will you have Eternal Life on this globe, when it is renewed, and when the Divine Son shall come again to this planet, to raise the dead, and set up his kingdom here? Or will you lose your conditional right to eternal life? Obey and live. Disobey and die. My son, give me thine heart. Use your best judgment from henceforth, soliciting the aid of the Spirit to inform that judgment in defining your service for the God of heaven.

Daily circumstances, over which we have no control—as the phrase is—will change, modify or dismiss this or that plan, break up this or that unessential habit, enlarge or contract (seemingly) power to work efficiently or with evident success. About this we shall be less and less concerned. To run the race, as free-will competitors, we need freedom; and in the whole truth we have it. In orthodoxy we have it not.

The eternal-hell-fire doctrine accelerates the speed of no christian.

I once conversed with a man who with his comrade had run a race for life from the Indians. They were given a stint for a life-race. One was not so strong as the other, and a less agile Indian was appointed as his pursuer. The chasing savages were each supplied with a burning brand, with which they might spur up the fleeing captives, or with which they were to beat out their brains if the boundaries appointed were not reached in so many hundred seconds; the signal of the safety or appointed death of the two white men to be given by the beating time-keeper of the savage clan. The least fleet of the two had a full view of his companion and pursuer throughout the successful race for life. Sometimes the flaming moxa would be close to the leading white man's back. But both escaped the ordeal. I asked the man who ran ahead if he felt the fire from his pursuer's brand. "O, no; I was running for life. I knew my life depended on my getting to the stake in a certain time, and if the prairie behind me had all been on fire, I could not have been in any more of a hurry."

The eternal hell-fire doctrine never converted a soul. Poor old Dr. Packard did honestly desire to know how a sinner could be converted without the fear of eternal torment in hell-fire set plainly before his eyes? No man is brought to the Father, as a repenting sinner and an acceptable child, by a lie. All lies come from the father of lies—the devil—who is the arch-traitor and enemy of God. Reason and reverence alike compel us to say, no one was ever converted, or moved to conversion, by the lying doctrine of orthodoxy, of which we are talking.

By falsehood, at the beginning, the devil deceived the woman. And by this same falsehood—it must be recorded—thousands upon hundreds of thousands have been kept from the truth and the acceptable service of God. All declarations have a positive character. Demonstrations of every character have some results. Every breath affects the atmospheric proportions of the heavens above us. And we are getting into the region of the most important of human utterances when we touch this doctrine. As it could not do good, it must do harm. And in proportion as it has been insisted upon it has done evil, and that continually. It is in the nature of a lie to vitiate, demoralize, corrupt, and destroy.

"How are you going to convert sinners, without the eternal misery dogma?" The rather: How many millions have gone down to the grave of shame, on account of this awful, God-dishonoring doctrine? How is any man, properly enlightened, going to do his duty by mixing without protest of any sort in the eternal-torment sects? Let every man be persuaded in his own mind; but as for me, except it be a plain matter of secular business, or that I may gather, as I think, force or ground for condemning the horrible, blasphemous creed, I will not go near their assemblies. It is a part of my freedom to keep away from them. The Father they hold up for adoration is not the Father of my Bible; he is a heathen Deity to me—patterned after the fiends that the ignorant idolaters of Asia worship. I know their faith is secretly better than their articles, oftentimes; and that there is a wide difference, separating them in sanctifying measure from the heathen; but they have imported the worst doctrine of the heathen, or, having inherited it, they retain it, with bitter and willful bigotry, from their fathers.

I argue from no harsh sentiments. I think there is freedom only in the full truth [illegible] and that the best way for the re-discovered truth on the question named to be brought forward, is in distinct, separate organizations and proclamations. C.

THANKSGIVING DAY.

MRS. CLARA BAKER.

This thirtieth of November, of all the other days,
Our rulers have appointed as a public day of praise;
To praise the God of heaven, and recognize his hand
In all the many blessings bestowed upon our land.

Then gather, all ye people, from every hill and dale,
From every lofty mansion, and cottage in the vale;
Let high and low assemble, and join all hearts as one,
In songs of glad Thanksgiving for all that God hath done.

So countless are his mercies, the number none can tell;
And if he sendeth scourges, he doeth all things well;
In willingly afflicting, his soul doth not delight,
He no good thing withholdeth from those who walk upright.

Then praise Him, all ye people, 'tis just and right ye should;
Adore the great Creator, the giver of all good;
Praise him for friends and kindred, who come from far away,
And for thy glad reunion, on this Thanksgiving day.

And ye, who have your thousands of worldly goods in store,
Take largely from your treasures, and share them with the poor;
Forgive the wayward brother, the wanderer recall,
And if ye wouldst be happy, make glad the hearts of all.

Call not your proud, rich neighbors, to feast around your board,
For they to you can fully a recompense afford;
But call the humble, needy, who never can repay,
And God will own and bless you on this Thanksgiving day.

When friends with friends shall gather around the festive board,
And longtime absent ones to homes again restored,
Let every heart be mindful, when all is glad and gay,
There's a future day appointed—the Great Thanksgiving Day.

CONSECRATION.

There are many good, honest souls in the church, who seem to want to do right, and lead christian lives, but some way they do not get along very well. There is some obstacle in their way that shuts out the Holy Ghost, and keeps them in bondage. Now it is evident there is some definite reason why this is so. The question naturally arises, where is the difficulty? I answer, it is invariably in the individual concerned. It is not because some of the church members do not do right. It is not because the preacher does not preach as he should. It is not because you are deprived of the means of grace. The difficulty is with you brother, with your sister.

The question now arises, what is the matter? What is the wrong in my heart? How can I find out what the difficulty is? First, I would ask, do you really want to know? Is there a settled determination in your heart to be right? Are you willing God should let the light shine in your heart, though it reveal to you the presence of some cherished sin, or presents to you some heavy cross? This being the case, enter your closet, and ask God to let you see your own heart, and there by the light of the Spirit examine your consecration, item by item. Do I improve my time as profitably as I ought? Do I manifest a Christ like and loving spirit towards all my associates? Do I guard my tongue as closely as I ought, speaking no idle words, but such as will honor God? Do I present my body a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God? Are my affections centered in Christ, or do they still entwine around some earthly idol? Do I love the good opinion of the world better than the approval of God? Am I willing that my name should be cast out as evil, for Christ's sake? Am I conformed to the world?

Oh, Jesus let me see my true state. Let me know wherein I withhold and I will lay all at thy feet. By thus closely and firmly holding your heart to the light, you will soon know where you stand. Nothing pleases Satan better than this indefinite state. It affords him so many opportunities to slip in unawares. It is evidently God's will that we should walk in the light, because God is light and in him there is no darkness at all. If we walk in him we are the "children of light." Our light must come from God, and he cannot shed it abroad in our hearts while we cherish sin there.

One who is fully consecrated, God makes efficient in the up-building of his cause. Oh, Holy Ghost! Refining fire! burn us out anew, let us be washed! purified! cleansed! set on fire! that the world may know that we are alive, and that we may be able to snatch precious souls as brands from the everlasting burnings.—Earnest Christian.

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The first quarterly conference of the Iowa Christian Conference met according to notice, at Parkersburg, Oct. 18th. Bro. Thomas was elected President, and J. J. Towsley Secretary pro tem. As there was no business of importance, the conference adjourned to the call of the President. Ministers present: C. C. Ramsey, Thomas A. H. Eggleston, N. F. Eggleston, and E. Marsh. The New Hartford church was well represented. There was preaching from the 16th over the Lord's day, by Bro. Ramsey, to good congregations, that listened with great attention and a deep interest. On the Lord's day, after the two o'clock services, we repaired to the mill-pond near by, and Eld. Ramsey immersed one obedient soul into Christ. There was a goodly number present, and it was a solemn time, long to be remembered by the community, as it was the first ordinance of the kind ever administered in the place by one of like precious faith. In the evening, there were twenty-five or thirty who partook of the emblems of our Lord's broken body and spilt blood. Then we took the parting hand, but we look forward to the day when our dear Savior will come.

J. J. Towsley, Clerk pro tem.

Put away Lying.—Every christian should be truthful. Many professors are not; some jest with lies, and lie in jest; this is wicked. Some lie in business for the sake of gain,—this is sinful. The Bible says, "put away lying, and put it so far away that it may never be found again. Speak every man truth with his neighbor." When you speak of an enemy, or one against whom you are prejudiced, be doubly careful. Speak only the truth, and speak the truth always. When God speaks of the seven things that are abominable to him, he places lying second. Oh, that we may all be so taught of God, and so resemble the God of truth, as to say with David, "I hate and abhor lying."—Montreal Witness.

Anthem of Praise.—It is said, that, when the sun is going out of sight, the pious Swiss herdsman of the Alps takes his alpine horn, and shouts loudly through it, "Praise ye the Lord!" Then a brother herdsman on some distant slope takes up the echo, "Praise the Lord!" Soon another answers still higher up the mountains, till hill shouts to hill, and peak echoes to peak, the sublime anthem of praise to the Lord of all.

THE TRUE MOTIVE POWER.

"Success in soul-saving requires a warm heart; eminent success, a hot heart. Icebergs are not to be melted by moonbeams. Many other desirable qualifications may be dispensed with, but genuine, spontaneous abiding warmth of soul toward the Saviour and toward the sinner there must be, or a man cannot be a successful christian worker. Without this the most eminent endowments only make failure the more disgraceful.

"It seems almost impossible for some christians to get rid of the notion that spiritual results can be secured by methods merely material and intellectual. Given money and brains, and it is often assumed you have force enough to run a moral reform, a Sunday-school, or even a church. The rebuking voice of the Almighty sounds forth, 'Not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit,' and that spirit works on the ungodly mainly through the medium of the hearts which have already felt its transforming power. The most magnificent floating palace ever built is but a cumbrous hulk, utterly useless for the single purpose of its construction until its fires are kindled, and its heart throbs, and its timbers quiver from stem to stern with the pulses of a mighty life.

"There is no possible substitute for a heart aflame. Brilliancy may dazzle, but it takes heat to kindle. Chalmers preached for thirteen years before his conversion with a keenness of logic, a splendor of rhetoric, and a majesty of eloquence unsurpassed and rarely rivalled, but he afterward publicly confessed, that during all that time, his ministry not only failed to lead any one to a saving acquaintance with Jesus, but that, so far as he could learn, it had 'not the weight of a feather upon the moral habits' of his parishioners. John Wesley's early ministrations in England and America were of small account, but when, through the influence of the Moravians, his 'heart was strangely warmed,' God gave him a tongue of fire, and the scenes of the Pentecost were reenacted.

"An almost passionate devotion to the work of saving men seems to be the indispensable condition of abundant harvesting. John Knox was won't to cry, 'Give me Scotland or I die!' Whitefield would often pray, 'O Lord, give me souls or take my soul!' Emmons had unutterable groanings over sinners. Concerning one such season he writes: 'The agonies of that hour can never be told; I verily thought I should have died.' When the burning soul of Paul had been pursuing its orbit among the nations for thirty years, driven by some unseen power, and leaving a trail of glory everywhere, he gave the rationale of his sublime career in six words: 'The love of Christ constraineth me.' The world knows what became of these furnace-heats in great souls. The conquests of the church have been won and the history of the nations moulded by them. They avouch the truth so well uttered by Lyman Beecher; 'The power of the heart set on fire by love, is the greatest created power in the universe.'

"But we need not limit either the instruction or the encouragement of this theme, by applying them solely to stars of the first magnitude. The tiniest taper that glimmers in a hovel, is subject to the same conditions of shining as the sun itself. Grace is like nature in the universal sweep of its laws. A heart on fire with love to Jesus and love to men, is just as sure to win some trophies for the Master through the pathetic pleadings of an illiterate Carvosso, as by the inimitable eloquence of a Summerfield. Many a minister, a prayer-leader, Sunday-school teacher, or private christian of no more than ordinary capacity, might enter a career of extraordinary usefulness by securing the baptism of the Holy Ghost. He would find it to be 'power from on high.' Many a professed disciple has never had his Pentecost, and that often makes the diametrical difference between a skulking, cursing denial, and a lion-hearted apostleship, as it did with Peter.—Christian at Work.

Mike and the Priest.—Never was a better answer made than a poor Irishman made to a Romish priest while defending himself for reading the Bible.

"But," said the priest, "the Bible is for priests, and not for the likes o' you."

"Ah! but, sir," he answered, "I was reading in my Bible, 'You shall read it to your children,' an' sure the priests have got no children."

"But, Michael," says the priest, "you cannot understand the Bible. It is not o' you to understand it, my man."

"Ah, very well, yer riverence, if I cannot understand it, it will do me no harm, and what I can understand does me a heap o' good."

"Very well, Mike," said the priest; "you must go to the Church, and the Church will teach you; the Church will give you the milk of the word."

"And where does the Church get it from but out of the Bible? Ah! your riverence, I would rather keep the cow myself."—Herald and Presbyter.

Thoughts known to God.—The thoughts of a man's heart,—what millions are there of them in a day! The twinkling of the eye is not so sudden a thing as the thinking of a thought; yet those thousands and thousands of thoughts which pass from thee, that thou canst not reckon, they are all known to God.

Gambling for Good Purposes.—One of our exchanges gives the following extract from an Eastern paper, illustrating the plea for lotteries in behalf of good objects:

"Our christian people, and especially our christian ladies, say, 'Our object is to do no harm in a lottery for a benevolent purpose.' This reminds us of a little story. A doctor was called to see a patient whose native drink was whiskey. Water was prescribed as the only cure. Pat said it was out of the question; he never could drink it. Then milk was proposed, and Pat agreed to get well on milk. The doctor was soon summoned again. Near the bed on which the sick man lay was a table, and on the table a bowl, and in the bowl was milk, but strongly flavored with whiskey.

'What have you here?' said the doctor.

'Milk, doctor; just what you ordered.'

'But there's whiskey in it; I smell it.'

'Well, doctor,' sighed the patient, 'there may be whiskey in it, but milk's my object.'

There may be sin in gambling, but the object is good! Miserable morality is that.

The Carpenter's Dream.—A poor man was a carpenter; and he often said to himself and to others: "If I was only rich, I would show people how to give." In his dream, he saw a pyramid of silver dollars—all new, bright and beautiful. Just then a voice reached him, saying: "Now is your time! You are rich at last; let us see your generosity!" So he rose from his seat and went to the pile to take some money for charitable purposes. But the pyramid was so perfect that he could not bear to break it. He walked all around it, but found no place where he could take a dollar without spoiling the heap. So he decided that the pyramid should not be broken! . . . . He awoke to know himself, and to see that he would be generous only while comparatively poor.

A BEAUTIFUL CITY.

Batavia, the capital city of the island of Java—according to a description given, is a brilliant specimen of Oriental splendor. "The houses, which are white as snow, are placed one hundred feet back from the street, the intervening space being filled with trees, literally alive with birds, and every variety of plants and flowers. Every house has a piazza in front, and is decorated with beautiful pictures, elegant lamps, cages, etc., while rocking-chairs, lounges, and ottomans, of elegant description, furnish luxurious accommodations for the family, who sit here mornings and evenings. At night the city is one blaze of light from the lamps. The hotels have grounds of eight or ten acres in extent around them, covered with fine shade trees, fountains, flower gardens, etc. No business is done in the streets, in the middle of the day, on account of the heat. The nights and mornings are cool and delightful; birds singing all night. The thermometer stands at about eighty-two degrees throughout the year. The island of Java contains a population of 10,000,000 souls. It abounds with tigers, leopards, anocondas, and poisonous insects of all kinds. The finest fruits in the world are produced in great abundance."

This must, indeed, be a beautiful city, but there is one soon to come, which is far more beautiful. No eye hath seen, nor ear heard, neither heart conceived of the splendor and glory of that city. Its walls are jasper, its gates pearl, and its streets pure, glassy gold. Brighter and sweeter flowers than earth ever saw, will bloom in unfading beauty, and glad birds sing unceasingly.

There the inhabitants will have no need to rest "on account of the heat," for "the sun shall not light on them." No ravenous beasts or "poisonous insects" will be there, for "nothing that will hurt or destroy shall enter into my holy mountain," saith the Lord. All manner of fruits shall gratify the taste, and beautiful sights gladden the eye. But oh, better than all else, Jesus will be there! bright and glorious, seated upon his high and dazzling throne, while around him sweet songs of praise burst from a million tongues, who own him as "King of kings, and Lord of lords."

There, shall come no sorrow, or suffering any more, no tears, and no pain, nor any sin; but we shall be like Jesus, pure, holy, and happy forever.

Dear children, shall we all meet each other there? Aunt Mary.

A LITTLE SERMON.

At a railroad station, not long ago, one of the beautiful lessons which all should learn was taught in such a natural, simple way, that none could forget it. It was a bleak, snowy day; the train was late, the ladies' room dark and smoky, and the dozen women, old and young, who sat waiting impatiently, all looked cross, low-spirited, or stupid.

Just then a forlorn old woman, shaking with the palsy, came in with a basket of little wares for sale, and went about mutely offering them to the sitters. Nobody bought anything, and the poor old soul stood blinking at the door a minute, as if reluctant to go out into the bitter storm again. She turned presently, and poked about the room as if trying to find something, and then a pale lady in black, who lay as if asleep on a sofa, opened her eyes, saw the old woman, and instantly asked in a kind tone, "Have you lost anything, ma'am?"

"No, dear. I'm looking for the heatin' place, to have a warm 'fore I go out ag'in. My eyes are poor and I don't seem to find the furnace nowhere."

"Here it is;" and the lady led her to the steam radiator, placed a chair, and showed her how to warm her feet.

"Well, now, ain't that nice?" said the old woman, spreading her ragged mittens to dry. "Thankee, dear; this is proper comfortable, ain't it? I'm most froze to-day, bein lame and aching; and not selling much made me sort of down-hearted."

The lady smiled, went to the counter, bought a cup of tea and some sort of food, carried it herself to the old woman, and said, as respectfully and kindly as if the poor soul had been dressed in silk and fur, "Won't you have a cup of hot tea? It's very comforting such a day as this."

"Sakes alive! Do they give tea at this depot?" cried the old lady in a tone of innocent surprise, that made a smile go round the room, touching the glummest face like a streak of sunshine. "Well, now, this is just lovely," added the old lady, sipping away with a relish. "That does warm my heart."

While she refreshed herself, telling her story meanwhile, the lady looked over the poor little wares in the basket, bought soap, pins, and shoe-strings, and cheered the old soul by paying well for them.

As I watched her doing this I thought what a sweet face she had, though I'd considered her rather plain before. I felt dreadfully ashamed of myself that I had grimly shaken my head when the basket was offered to me; and, as I saw a look of interest, sympathy and kindness come into the faces around me, I did wish that I had been the magician to call it out. It was only a kind word and a friendly act; but somehow it brightened that dingy room wonderfully. It changed the faces of a dozen women; and I think it touched a dozen hearts, for I saw many eyes follow the plain pale lady with sudden respect; and when the old woman, with many thanks, got up to go, several persons beckoned to her and bought something, as if they wanted to repair their negligence.

There were no gentlemen present to be impressed by the lady's kind act; so it was not done for effect, and no possible reward could be received for it, except the thanks of a poor old woman. But that simple little charity was as good as a sermon, and I think each traveler went on her way better for that half-hour in the dreary room.—S. S. Workman.

Hygiene.

"This is for your Health."

CARING FOR THE SICK.

In caring for the sick, it is of the utmost importance that the surroundings be made as pleasant as possible. The room should be cheerful. Air, light, and sunshine, should be freely admitted; for if these are excluded, the impure air may give rise to a more violent form of disease, or convalescence may be very much retarded.

Those who attend the sick should never allow themselves to look gloomy, for by so doing the patient may sink from discouragement, as he always watches with intense interest the countenances of those who attend him; and, although no words may be spoken, his eye catches the first apprehension of an unfavorable turn in his disease; whereas, if the attendant looks hopeful, cheerful, and happy, the patient will partake of the same spirit, and confidingly trust to his judgment. For this reason none should be admitted to the sick room but those to whom the patient naturally inclines.

Nurses should always be frank with the sick. True, they need not tell them of their danger at all times, but they should not hesitate to give a prompt answer, and in a manner that will inspire confidence that their wants will all be attended to. If the sick are deceived at any time by the attendants, their influence over the patient will be in a measure lost, and can be of but little use afterward; and if there is a disposition to deceive, the patient will remember it.

The habit of crowding into the sick room just to see and be seen is a pernicious one. Many valuable lives are lost by this useless custom. Let one or two, as needed, remain to care for the sick, but send the rest on errands about the house, as in this case no offense will be taken. No matter whether anything is wanted outside or not, the thought of doing something for the sick, no matter how trivial, will be a source of satisfaction to those who do it; and the sick will be much better off for being freed from their exciting sympathies.

It is a common practice with many, to visit the sick only upon Sunday, as upon that day there is nothing to do. So they will spend their time looking in upon the sick, and my experience has been to find patients much worse on Mondays. These usually have much to say; such as, "How bad they look!" "Do you think they will live?" These words sound like the death knell to the sick, and really frighten many into the grave. Let all who care for the sick see that these Sunday visitors are kept out of the sick room, by having plenty of other work for them, which they will cheerfully do with the idea of aiding the sick. Life is too dear to be sacrificed to idle curiosity.

The light should never be allowed to burn in the sick room.

A great mistake is made in feeding the sick often. Nature, for a wise purpose, takes away the appetite, and will in due time restore it. Some need this rest from eating, as over-eating may be the sole cause of the sickness; and such need not be alarmed if several days should elapse without a call for food. The intelligent nurse should always watch the workings of nature and keep down all undue interference.

If, however, the stomach is left too long without food, in some cases the tongue will begin to coat up, and a reflex fever will set in as intense as at first. As a rule, from four to eight days will be as long as ordinary cases should go without food.

If possible, the sick should never be placed in a room where the walls are papered with paper of variegated figures, as each figure will be scanned, measured, and counted over, daily, until it becomes a great annoyance, and the patient will ever after look upon that room with dread; these figures seeming like so many living tormentors.

It is useless holding arguments with the sick, as imaginary evils to them become real; but by gentleness, kindness, and patience, assure them that their sources of trials will be looked after, and all danger will be averted.

I attended a man in typhoid fever in 1854, in Ohio, who declared he bought a yoke of oxen of a neighbor for $100. This delusion became so fixed in his mind that, conversing with him ten years after, he informed me that it seemed then as real to him as did any actual transaction of his life. This case shows how intensely the sick may feel over these seeming realities when reason is dethroned, and it is better to have no contention with them in acute diseases. But if the disease is chronic, the case is far different. Patients of this class have had sufficient time to reason upon these things, and these absurdities should be routed at once from the mind, otherwise a spirit of sentimentalism may set in, and the patients may imagine they are too good for this earth, and murmur at their trials from those who care for them; become exacting, and a tax upon all who come near them, by the recital of their imaginary griefs.

This sentimentalism is ruining thousands and unfitting them for business, and bearing life's burdens as they should.

There are invalids from imaginary ills which come on from castle-building and the want of exercise. Unless such can be brought to see their condition, and made to bear life's burden's, they will become useless members of society; and of such there are already too many to tax the time and patience of those who ought to be in better employment.—J. H. Ginley in Health Reformer.

Oatmeal.—When the writer was in Edinburgh, the celebrated Dr. Guthrie called his attention to the size of Scotch people, and to the fact that the average size of their heads was greater than that of any other nation in the world, not excepting even the English; and when asked how he accounted for this, he replied that he thought it was owing largely to their universal devotion to oatmeal.

Indeed, the writer observed that the national dish was found upon the table at almost every meal, in the houses of the rich as well as the poor. In the morning came the mush, and in the evening the traditional cake, about the size of the crown of a hat, and a little harder than a sun-dried brick.

For further confirmation on this important question, let the writer add that he has found a great advantage to follow the daily use of (thousand) brown bread and oatmeal in his family. A child whose first teeth came through in a starved condition, so that they began to decay at once and cause much suffering, is now blessed with as fine a set of second cutters as any one could ask, while the general health of all has improved. In fact, we all vote that we must daily have our brown bread and its twin-sister dish of oatmeal.—Ed.

The "Crisis" is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth: especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

COME TO JESUS.

E. M. FREEMAN.

Now with love and pity blended,
Jesus bids the sinner come
Ere probation shall be ended,
And the work of grace be done.

Come to him and live forever;
Come and join the happy throng
Who have in his sight found favor,
Come and learn the heavenly song.

Come, and when his indignation
On a guilty world is poured;
In a full and free salvation
You'll rejoice and praise the Lord.

Long his Spirit has been striving,
Long his mercy been refused;
While he crowns thy life with blessing,
His long suffering is abused.

His long suffering is salvation
To every sinner that will come;
To every kindred, tribe and nation,
He is saying, still there's room.

Still there's room, and from life's fountain
Healing waters freely flow;
Come and drink, and in God's kingdom
Eternal joys thou soon shalt know.

THE PENALTY OF GOD'S LAW.

No. 2.

D. H. HALL.

What is it? The Bible alone can answer the question. To the Scriptures, then, we turn with confidence, believing they speak in no equivocal language—that they have a clear, loud, harmonious ring, so he that runs may read and understand, if he will take off his heathen, papal, or "orthodox,' spectacles, and with a clear and honest eye look the truth square in the face.

In announcing the penalty of his law, God has employed the following plain and most emphatic language in the Bible in regard to the final punishment and end of the wicked: they shall "die"; they shall suffer "death," the "second death"; they "shall perish,"—"shall utterly perish in their own corruption"; they "shall be destroyed," "destroyed together," "destroyed forever"; "whose end is destruction"; "they shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away"; they "shall be consumed"; they "shall be devoured as stubble fully dry"; they shall be "burned"—"burned up"—as chaff, as tares, as dry branches; "shall burn them up, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch"; "they shall not see life"; they shall be "blotted out"; they "shall be cut off"; they shall be "ground to powder"; they "shall be as nothing, and as a thing of nought"; "they shall be as though they had not been"; "they shall not be."

We ask any candid person, if God had intended to teach the utter extinction, or annihilation of the conscious being of the wicked, could stronger words be used, or more emphatic terms be found in the English language for that purpose, than are quoted above from our English Bible? The great wonder is, that Protestants, with the Bible in their hands, should ever have adopted the papal dogma, the immortality of the soul—the poisonous root of endless torment; the foundation stone of Roman Catholicism; the prolific source of its immense revenues, extorted by threats of purgatorial fires, from its deluded victims; the true source of "intercession of saints"; the father of modern Spiritualism, with all of its naked, atheistical deformity, and demoniacal, soul-destroying power; the legitimate child of "the father of lies."

The great mistake of Protestants has been in taking for granted, in the absence of any scriptural proof whatever, this greatest and most pernicious of all errors of Christendom. And the blind and dogmatic zeal with which so many still attempt to sustain it, against the most explicit declarations of Jehovah to the contrary, and the many unanswered arguments that have been presented by many able men, is an indication, I am sorry to say, that such will not receive these glorious truths, however strong the proofs and arguments in their favor, until they are willing to lay aside the prejudices of education—which we are aware are strong, having felt their power—and honestly seek for truth as for hidden treasures. For the benefit of the honest-minded, then, we proceed.

God declares (Ezek. 18: 4, 20), "the soul that sinneth, it shall die." Therefore the soul is not immortal. Man assumes that "the soul is immortal, therefore it cannot die." Which shall we believe, God's declaration, or man's assumption? Can any intelligent christian hesitate to say, "Let God be true, and every man a liar"? We see from the above, that if christians would give up this heathen error, there would be no reason, as now, for believing in the soul-revolting, soul-destroying, and God-dishonoring doctrine of endless torment. They would see that God could burn up the wicked root and branch; that then he would be "able to destroy both soul and body in hell." But now, they do not believe the soul can die, or be destroyed; for they know if the soul is immortal, even God cannot destroy it, and that it cannot die. This is why they do not believe God when he says, "the wicked will he destroy"; "the soul that sinneth, it shall die." And for the same reason they do believe the old serpent, instead of God, when he said, "Ye shall not surely die." One would suppose that christians would be more careful how they dogmatically assert the immortality of the soul, and thus expressly contradict Jehovah, who by Paul says (1 Tim. 15, 16), "Which in his times he [Christ] shall show, who is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords; who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto; whom no man hath seen, nor can see, to whom be honor and power everlasting."

It may not be improper to now consider how theologians attempt to explain away the force of the two hundred passages that may be fairly quoted in proof of the destruction of the wicked, and thus try to sustain the popular theory. We assert, without hesitation—because we shall prove it—that it is by ignoring, or utterly discarding the plain, primary meaning of all the words by which the penalty of the law is announced, and substituting, without any color of authority, definitions exactly the opposite of those laid down by all lexicographers. It is surpassing strange that christians should ever dare take such unwarrantable liberties with the word of God. But so it is; and this looseness of interpretation, this practise of spiritualizing all passages that militate against cherished opinions, has resulted in great damage to the church of God, by dividing it into a thousand sects, thereby neutralizing in a great degree their labors and influence, and thus bringing great reproach upon the cause of Christ. To show, then, how the true and plain teachings of the Bible have been perverted, and this false yet popular theory sustained, it will be necessary to refer to a few prominent words and their definitions, and also to the definitions that have been manufactured and substituted, as being deemed necessary to uphold it.

Die. Webster says—"To cease to live; to expire; to perish." Now apply these definitions to the passage, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die," and we learn that the soul [nephesh] of the finally impenitent man shall cease to live, shall expire, perish; i. e., come to nothing. Then it cannot be immortal; it cannot live in torment. How absurd, then, the popular sayings—"'Tis not all of death to die"; "undying souls shall forever die"; "the death that never dies"; thus giving this word a forced, figurative construction, so as to make it mean, to live in endless misery; exactly the opposite of its primary sense. Paul says (Rom. 8: 13), "For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die; but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live." The apostle here means what Christ says (John 6: 40, 51), "This is the bread which cometh down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof and not die [the second death]. I am the living bread which came down from heaven; if any man eat of this bread, he shall live forever." If there is any meaning in these precious words of Christ, it is this: If any man eat of this bread, he shall live forever; but if any man eat not of this bread, he shall not live forever. No, sir, not even in misery. No immortality then out of Christ.

Death. Webster says—"That state of being in which there is a total and permanent cessation of all the vital functions, when the organs have not only ceased to act, but have lost the susceptibility of renewed action." The primary sense then is extinction of life. The Greek word for death is thanatos, and means, says Greenfield, in his Greek Lexicox, "Death, i. e., extinction of life." To die, then, is to "cease to live"; and death is "extinction of life." Then "man dieth and wasteth away; yea, man giveth up the ghost [Hebrew, expireth], and where is he? As the waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up; so man lieth down, and riseth not; till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake nor be raised out of their sleep." Job 14: 10–12. "For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them: as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath [ruah—spirit]; so that a man hath no preeminence above a beast; for all is vanity. All go unto one place; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again." Eccl. 3: 19, 20.

If the orthodox doctrine, as taught by divines, is true—that men do not die like the beasts, but live when they are dead, and instead of going to the same place, go to heaven or hell, thus being rewarded or punished before they are judged—how egregiously mistaken was the divinely-inspired wise man in announcing such a "materialistic" doctrine as the above! and how far from the truth are all the inspired penmen, who corroborate his declaration; as we could show if it were not foreign to our present object. If Solomon penned the truth, and man dies "like the beasts that perish"; and "there is no knowledge, nor wisdom, nor device in sheol," where all the dead (man and beast) go; then he is not immortal, and is not dead and alive at the same time. But all this contradicts orthodoxy, and that must be sustained at all hazards. How is it attempted? By discarding the only true meaning of the word death, and making it mean separation—the separation of the soul from the body, called temporal death; and the separation of the soul from God, called spiritual death. As it is not our purpose in these articles, as already intimated, to enter into an examination of the doctrine of the separate existence of the soul—the penalty of the law being the subject—we will only briefly refer to the nature of temporal death, as brought to view in the case of our first parents, in the second and third of Genesis.

Gen. 2: 17—"But of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it; for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." There are conflicting views in regard to the nature of the death here announced, but the more common belief is, while temporal death (separation of soul and body, as they believe) is included, that spiritual death is also meant, for the alleged reason that Adam did not die for several hundred years after he ate of the tree, and that the language, "in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die," required that the sentence of death should be executed on the very day (of twenty-four hours) he sinned. Inasmuch as Adam did not die on the day he sinned, it seems to us, rather than be to the trouble of hunting up some other kind of death, than the real death announced, it would be much better to give a little latitude to the phrase "in the day," and not assume that it must mean the very day; for this expression is frequently used by historians and others as referring to indefinite time; as for instance, "in the day of Martin Luther"; "in the day of the Reformation," etc. But it is not necessary to explain it in this way; for the marginal reading, which is doubtless the correct one, relieves the subject of all doubt. "In the day thou eatest thereof, dying thou shalt die." As if he had said, On the day you thus sin, you will become a mortal being—subject to death—and shall surely die. But as if to settle the point beyond all doubt or cavil as to the nature of this death, God expressly states, in Gen. 3: 19, what it is. "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." It is surpassing strange if, as we are told, man possesses an immortal principle within, which divines say is the real man, that loves or hates, that sins and is punished, that God did not give some intimation, at least, of the fact in the account given of his creation, and in announcing and explaining the penalty of the law given to Adam. It is also very strange, if death merely consists in separating the soul from the body, that there is no intimation of such fact in all the holy Scriptures. And it is very remarkable also, if it was the immortal soul of Adam that sinned, that instead of his soul, God should have punished Adam's poor body, which, according to the theology of the day, had not sinned, and could not sin, and even could not die, having no life in itself, the soul being the life thereof, and only being separated from it.

But let us further see if the "body only" of Adam is meant, as we are told, in God's explanation of the penalty. Now notice that God is speaking to Adam—not to his body, to the exclusion of any part that it takes to constitute him a thinking, responsible being. "And unto Adam he said . . . Because thou hast ... eaten of the tree ... thou shalt ... return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; . . . and unto dust shalt thou return." It is certain that no part of Adam is here excepted, for that which it takes to constitute Adam returns to the ground. Then Solomon was not mistaken after all when, in referring to the death of man and beast, he said: "As the one dieth, so dieth the other; . . . all go unto one place; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again." Some may think that Solomon was a materialistic old fogy; but he had read God's explanation of the penalty of the law to some purpose; for it seems he did not understand it as our great divines do.

But God further says (Gen. 3: 22), "And now, lest he [the man] put forth his hand and take also of the tree of life, and eat, and live forever, . . . the Lord God sent him forth from the garden of Eden. . . . So he drove out the man; and he placed at the east of the garden of Eden cherubims, and a flaming sword which turned every way, to keep the way of the tree of life." Notwithstanding the plain statement that in order to live forever he (Adam) must have access to the tree of life, the masses of christians believe that he will live forever, without partaking of it. Then what means the fact that the tree of life is still to exist in the paradise of God, and bear its twelve manner of fruits, and yield her fruit every month, the leaves of which are for the healing of the nations, if it is not necessary to have access to it in order to live forever? How, then, can the wicked live forever when they reject Christ, and will therefore not be permitted to enter paradise and eat of the tree of life? We are now prepared to answer the question, Is SPIRITUAL DEATH the penalty of God's law? Where is the proof? We demand scriptural proof; mere assertion will not answer. Is there even a plausible pretext for this most remarkable assumption? It is true that Paul speaks of man being "dead in trespasses and sins" and "dead unto sin, but alive unto God," but such use of the word dead gives no warrant to pervert the simple meaning of the word death wherever it occurs in the Bible, and especially when it is used in the penalty of God's law. It is very singular that learned men cannot exercise a little common sense, not to say honesty, in the use they make of words in their interpretation of the Scriptures; for they seem to think if a word is once used figuratively therein, that this gives them license to play as many tunes upon it, whenever and wherever it may occur in the Bible, as their preconceived and cherished opinions may require to sustain them; and restoring the primary sense only when they wish to prove a point.

We will now endeavor to show that spiritual or moral death, so called, is not in any sense whatever the penalty of the law. (1) Because it is the voluntary state of the sinner in this life—"dead in trespasses and sins"—and God commands him to forsake this sinful state; but how can he, if it is a penalty inflicted for sin? Would God tantalize the poor sinner by commanding him to leave a state to which he had been judicially condemned, and from which he could not escape, if this were true? The sinner is obnoxious to the penalty, because he is dead in sins, and remains in this state. Spiritual death, therefore, is the transgression of the law, and not its penalty; it is the state of sin, and not of punishment. Hence Paul in his letter to the Ephesians says: "You hath he quickened who were dead [punished?] in trespasses and sins." Again, 2: 45—"But God, . . . even when we were dead [punished?] in sins, hath quickened us [made us alive] together with Christ." We called for proof that spiritual death is the penalty of the law; and if it can be found in the Bible, it is in the above quoted passages which are relied on for that purpose; but the apostle does not even intimate that being "dead in trespasses and sins" is a state of punishment, as it must be if spiritual death is a penalty.

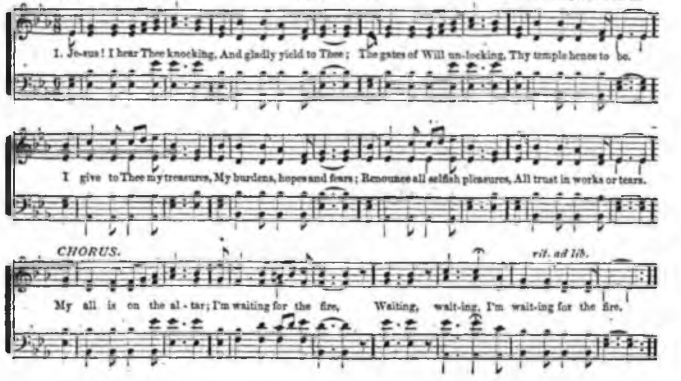
(2) If spiritual death is the penalty of the law, it is the first death; then temporal death would be the second death, and eternal death (called by the Revelator "the second death," and claimed to be spiritual death, or "the death that never dies"), would be the third death, which is one more "death" than the Bible teaches that any man shall die. But if, in answer to this argument, we are told that "the second death" is only the same spiritual death continued eternally; then we reply that it is only a continuance of the first death, and cannot possibly be "the second death." But to show still further the absolute absurdity of making spiritual death the penalty of the law, we will put it in a nut shell, as follows: It makes God say to Adam, "But of the tree . . . thou shalt not eat of it; for on the very day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt spiritually die"; i. e., he should be "dead in trespasses and sins." Or again, If you transgress my law, and thus become a sinner, the penalty, or punishment is, that you shall be a sinner! One thought more under this head. Where is the least color of evidence that two deaths—some say three, spiritual, temporal, and eternal—are announced in the Adamic penalty? It is an unwarrantable assumption, and common sense teaches us that if temporal death—returning to "dust" as explained by Jehovah—is the penalty, as all are obliged to admit, then pray tell us how can it possibly be spiritual death? Paul says (Rom. 5: 12), "By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death [what kind of death?] passed upon all men, for that all have sinned."

But let us make a similar application to the penalty of the moral law: "The soul that sinneth, it shall die" spiritually; i. e., the sinning soul shall be a sinful soul. Or again, the immortal soul that sinneth, it shall "forever die"; i. e., shall forever sin! We often hear of the doctrine, "once in grace always in grace"; but if the orthodox view of spiritual death be true, we have the doctrine, once in sin always in sin!

(3) Spiritual death cannot be the penalty of the law, because Christ suffered the penalty in the sinner's stead, as the orthodox all believe, to atone for the sins of the world. But who believes that Christ died a spiritual death, i. e., was "dead in trespasses and sins," or became a sinner, as he must if such a death is the penalty of the law? But Christ did suffer death, and that death-penalty must be of like character with that which the wicked are to suffer as a penalty for sin. And this fact also settles forever the question that endless torment cannot be the penalty of the law; for if torment is the penalty, Christ must needs suffer that; but as he did not, but did suffer death—did "pour out his soul unto death," as saith the prophet; as he himself said, "My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death," so that he died soul and body, it is absolutely certain that death, literal death, is the penalty of God's law.

THE WHOLE BURNT OFFERING.

Words by J. C. MORGAN, M. D. (By Permission.) Music by PROF. A. H.



1. Je-sus! I hear Thee knocking, And gladly yield to Thee; The gates of Will un-locking, Thy temple hence to be.
I give to Thee my treasures, My burdens, hopes and fears; Renounce all selfish pleasures, All trust in works or tears.
CHORUS.
rit. ad lib.
My all is on the al-tar; I'm waiting for the fire, Waiting, wait-ing, I'm wait-ing for the fire.

2. To thee, my loving Savior,
I bring my worthless load;
Thy blood shall make it precious,
An offering to God.
I know thou dost accept me,
The promise thou dost give;
Thy word—"I will receive thee";
And I thy word believe.

CHO.—"My all is on the altar,"
I'm waiting for the fire,
Waiting, waiting,
I'm waiting for the fire.

3. Lord, send the blest anointing,
The Holy Ghost impart;
Baptismal fire outpouring,
To melt and mould my heart.
Oh, let the flame from heaven
Sweep through my longing soul,
My dross and sin consuming,
And purify the whole.

CHO.—"My all is on the altar," etc.

4. Then, Jesus, keep this temple,
Purged by the fire and blood,
Forever pure and holy—
Fit dwelling-place of God.
Blest Jesus! thou art holy—
Yes, holiness thou art!
Enter in all thy fullness,
Thyself to me impart.

CHO.—"My all is on the altar," etc.

PART II. THE BAPTISM OF FIRE.

1. I do receive the blessing,
Made whole by cleansing blood;
The living Christ indwelling,
My faith takes hold on God.
On Jesus' breast reposing,
I am so weak and small,
I'm glad to know I'm nothing,
But Christ is all in all.

CHO.—My all is on the altar,
Descends the sacred fire—
Flaming, flaming—
The sanctifying fire.

2. By faith I've vital union
With thee, my living Head;
The life of God inflowing,
In thee, to sin I'm dead.
I see—I feel—I know it—
Thy will and mine are one;
'Tis witnessed by thy Spirit,
Who brings me near thy throne.

CHO.—My all is on the altar,
It burns with sacred fire—
Flaming, flaming—
In sanctifying fire.

3. Attend, oh heavy laden!
On him, on him recline;
To him, oh, hear him call you—
Accept this rest divine.
No need you have, or craving,
But Jesus can supply;
Oh, listen, and accept him,
Nor turn away and die.

CHO.—My all is on the altar,
He fills my soul's desire—
Resting, resting,
'Mid love's consuming fire.

"THE RIGHTEOUSNESS OF GOD."

J. B. COOK.

How attained? Answer—"By faith." It is attained by believing the love of God, the work of Jesus, and so receiving "the word and spirit of life—which is able to save [give life to] the soul." The Jews did not attain it "because they sought it not through faith, but, as it were by the works of the law." They took their ritual—their temple service—and rested in it, as if it were the substance, rather than "the shadow [and assurance] of good things to come." They rested in their ritual, rather than in the truth it embodied and expressed. They claimed divine favor as a reward of their ritualism, rather than by trusting in God, and then rendering him the obedience of faith and love. Thus "being ignorant of God's righteousness [by faith], and going about to establish their own righteousness [by ritualism], have not submitted themselves to the righteousness of God. For Christ is the end [or object] of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth" unto righteousness. Rom. 10.

God in his great love has found a ransom. Jesus has given himself for us, the just for the unjust. The Spirit of truth convicts of sin and of righteousness. But we "all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God." Hence we are shut up to faith in "the righteousness of God, which is . . . unto all and upon all them that believe." Rom. 3: 20–25.

As the Jews could not attain to righteousness by the only divine ritual ever given to men, how can any one class of the Christian church hope to attain it by a ritual of human devising that God has never sanctioned? As Abraham believed the promise of God, and it was counted to him for righteousness; so we are authorized to believe in the love of God, in the Messiah's whole work, and in the Holy Ghost; by which faith alone we attain to righteousness. But this faith assures a loving obedience, that which a child-like spirit prompts.

What an infinite difference between the human and the divine plan for making a sinful mortal righteous before God.

CHRONOLOGY.

A. SIMPSON.

I see in the Crisis of Nov. 22nd, that able writers end the seventy weeks in A. D. 70. If that be true, they commenced B. C. 421. Will able writers tell us what took place in the year 421 before the Christian era, to warrant their commencement there? For there must be some prominent event in the history of the world at their beginning. For Daniel saw the Persian ram pushing westward, and northward, and southward, so that no living (Robert Young's translation) might stand before him. Why do they end the one week in A. D. 70, two years short of what Gabriel says? The rebellion broke out in A. D. 65, in the twelfth year of Nero, the year that Cestius Gallus surrounded Jerusalem at the head of the Roman army; and closed in the fourth year of Vespasian, in A. D. 72. So says Josephus. Dion Cassius says Nero began to reign Oct. 14th, A. D. 53. Add 12 to 53, and you have A. D. 65, just where the seventy weeks ended and the one week began.

Why had not Gabriel said seventy-one "weeks are determined upon thy people," if he had meant so? It would have been just as easy to have said so. We had better believe what he did say. The seventy weeks have nothing to do with the one week. The seventy weeks were cut off of the 2300 days upon Daniel's people, the Jews. The one week is a separate prophecy, the duration of the war on Jerusalem, and began where the seventy weeks ended. Now run back from A. D. 65, where the seventy weeks ended, and 490 years will reach the twelfth year of Artaxerxes, the Persian king; the very year he signed the decree to slay Daniel's people, the Jews; and we prove by the prophets Daniel and Nehemiah, and Esther, that his twelfth year was in the year before the Christian era 426. History gives just the same number of years. Daniel was personally in Babylon when he had the vision of the eighth chapter; but was in Shushan only in vision. He had the vision in the third year of Belshazzar. Dan. 8: 1. The same year he interpreted the handwriting, and Belshazzar was slain. Daniel 5th chap. Artaxerxes had removed the seat of empire from Babylon to Shushan, where he signed the decree in the twelfth year of his reign (Esther 3: 7), just where Daniel saw the ram pushing in Shushan (Dan. 8: 1–4; not in the beginning of Persia, but in the sixty-fifth year from where the joint reign of Cyrus began. Daniel had showed the rise of Persia, in the second and seventh chapters; but the ram pushed where the 2300 days began, and not where the Persian empire commenced.

"REPENT AND BE CONVERTED."

F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

"Draw nigh to God, and he will draw nigh to you."—JAMES 4: 8.

This promise is addressed to those who are not now nigh to God. To the envious, the "double minded," the "sinners," the "adulteresses;" to those who have been seeking the "friendship of the world, and to all who are far off, comes the command, "draw nigh to God." If you ask, how shall we do this? the directions are given in the same connection. Submit yourselves to God. Resist the devil. Cleanse your hands, and purify your hearts. Be afflicted, and mourn, and weep; let your laughter be turned to mourning, and your joy to heaviness. Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord, and he shall lift you up. Speak not evil one of another. All this is found in the same chapter with the text. In the first chapter of Isaiah similar directions are found. "Wash you, make you clean; put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes. Cease to do evil; learn to do well; seek judgment, relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for widow. Come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord; though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool."

This may reach the eye or the ear of one who is far from God, and who longs to be saved or delivered from the wrath to come. Do you say "there is no hope?" True, there is no hope for you if you go on in sin. But there is a way of escape for you, a "door of hope," into which you may enter and be forgiven, cleansed, and saved. Do you still ask how you can find this way of escape? "Cease to do evil." If you know "the plague of your own heart," if you see the evil of your own ways, and the habits that are contrary to holiness, can you not cease from these? This is not a vain thing for you; it is for your life. If you do not fear the wrath to come, nor the iron rod that shall break in pieces every foe; if you do not fear the "glittering sword," which is ready to make short work with all who persist in rebellion; yet let "the goodness of God" lead thee to repentance. Behold him as the merciful One, ready to forgive. He is kind to the unthankful and the evil. His tender mercies are over all the works of his hands. You are invited, urged and entreated to come and confess and forsake your sins; and pardon, peace, and eternal life all are promised, if you will but come to Jesus. "Draw nigh to God, and he will draw nigh to you." The deeper and more overwhelming your sense of guilt, by so much the more you should hasten to confess all to the One who has power to forgive and wash away your sins. "They that are whole, have no need of a physician." The more desperate and dangerous your disease, with so much the more haste should you apply to the physician. Remember that it as said of him, and said truly, that he healed all that came to him. And he said "him that cometh to me, I will in no wise cast out."

Saul of Tarsus found mercy, though he declared himself to be the chief of sinners. Manasseh, the wicked king, after leading a most infamous life, and leading a whole nation down into the depths of wickedness, even such a one found pardon, and why may not you? There can be but one reason. It must be because you do not ask. You do not draw nigh to God. For if you did he would certainly draw nigh to you, according to his word. There is mercy for you to-day. To-morrow may be too late. Let no one hide from the sword of the Spirit behind a false refuge. Cast away all false professions, all hypocrisies, and acknowledge your transgressions and forsake your sins. Let those who stand fair and high in their own eyes beware, lest "publicans and harlots go into the kingdom of God before you."

COMPLETE IN JESUS.

F. W. THOMAS.

"And ye are complete in him."—COL. 2: 10.

In Jesus? yes, and if you are in him, you are complete. How positive and decided the apostles were when they spoke of the complete work of Christ. They did not hesitate to acknowledge what they had once been, how they had walked "in divers lusts, hateful, and hating one another;" but when they believed in Jesus, and accepted him as their Savior, they were washed, sanctified, from all sin, and saved from condemnation. It is evident that very many professed christians do not fully understand the way of salvation. They believe in Christ, and do many good things; yet they are not out in the liberty, where they can rejoice in the conscious evidence of completeness in him. Christ is a perfect Savior; his work is a perfect work; and when he forgives sin, the heart and conscience of the one forgiven are pure and stainless as the whitest snow.

The great difficulty is we look too much at ourselves, and too little at Jesus. We try to find comfort by looking into our own hearts, and thinking of our own goodness, instead of looking into the great loving heart of Jesus, and trusting entirely in him. The way of perfect peace and abiding joy is so simple, that it is often overlooked. Many ministers do not understand it, and hence those to whom they preach are bewildered and kept in darkness. Many try to do something which God has already done for them; but they cannot comprehend it. God's way of peace is to stop working for the blessing, but first receive it freely, and then work because you have received it. Accept the blessing, and then show your gratitude by obedience.

"Oh," says one, "I wish I knew what to believe and how to believe." Well, let me tell you. A young minister, after having completed his course at the theological seminary, still felt the need, both for the repose of his own heart and for the work to which he was called, of something more than all he had found in a course of systematic study. His heart was not at rest. He wanted something beyond what he had yet experienced. Among other methods of satisfying himself, he was in the habit of conversing with experienced christians as to the ground and nature of their faith. Meeting with an aged woman, in an humble station, but of a gracious spirit, he asked her, "What is the gospel you believe, and how do you believe it?" She replied, "God is satisfied with his Son; that is the gospel I believe; and I am satisfied with him too, that is how I believe it." Was not this simple answer worth more to an anxious inquirer than many volumes on justification by faith? This is rest—to be satisfied with that which satisfies God. If God is satisfied with the work Jesus has done, cannot we be satisfied with it? If he says we are complete in Christ, are we not satisfied to have it so? If the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth from all sin, are we not satisfied to believe and rest right on the promise? Jesus says, "This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom God hath sent." Says Paul, "But of him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption." Is not this enough? Can we not rest there? Christ is all. Ye are complete in him. He that believeth shall be saved. "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature; old things are passed away; behold all things are become new." We walk by faith, and not by sight.

SELF-INDULGENCE.—The prevailing sin of the day is self-indulgence. It is eating like a canker into the life of many of our churches. It leaves Christ's ministers to address empty pews on unpleasant Sabbaths. If it hangs a bough of profession over on the church-side of the dividing wall, yet its roots are deep down in the soil of the world. It is often ready to deny Christ, but seldom ready to deny self.

FREQUENT and fierce is the devil in his attacks, on all sides besieging our salvation. We must, therefore, watch and be sober, and everywhere fortify ourselves against his assaults; for if he but gain some slight vantage ground, he goes on to make for himself a broad passage, and by degrees introduces all his forces.

SCIENCE AND THEOLOGY.

H. W. Beecher preached a sermon in his church, Sabbath, Nov. 26th, on "Science and Theology," from 2 Tim. 3: 13-17, as follows:

"But evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived. But continue thou in the things which thou hast learned and hast been assured of knowing of whom thou has learned them; and that from a child thou hast known the holy Scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus. All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works."

Mr. Beecher is reported as follows, by special despatch to the Boston Daily Advertiser, published Nov, 27th:—

"The adoration of the church and of the Bible are both idolatrous; but if I am obliged to choose between a book, a record and a living church made up of living men interpreting God's providence, I should say, Give me the church by all means. In the past the Bible has not been free from controversy and assault, but the actual experience of the hearts of men have overthrown sceptics in our day. The assaults are stronger, better aimed, more vital and more in alliance with scientific inquiry, armed with an acuteness never brought to bear before, but the preponderance of evidence still remains with the Bible. Nevertheless the campaign is going to another Waterloo. The ground to some seems falling away from the word of God. The undermining of science seems to them likely to destroy its foundation. But the all-important instrument for this destruction is lacking. Within the sphere of science comes the origin of man, the facts of mental and of moral philosophy, the mysteries of moral and spiritual intuition, but it does not hold within its arms the one great element of moral conscientiousness. The atmosphere of doubt acts in many ways, but that it is acting powerfully and precipitously few can doubt. Be as little conversant with the terms, the world or humanity, who does not know that over religion there hangs to-day an amount of doubt and uneasiness which may not be computed? While the question, Is there a God?—the question which has been the great controversy of ages—is thundering around about us, they that believe in it instead of fortifying themselves against a common enemy are virtually knocking down their own bulwarks by disputes about the meanest elements of theological geometry. A state of doubt is as fatal in its practical consequence as a state of unbelief. Both paralyze. If you attempt by the Bible to establish a perfect scheme of moral philosophy out of intellectual reason, you will fail. It is not sufficient for that. The word of God draws the line between duty on the one side and wrong on the other, between lust and virtue, ambition and right. A man might as well go to Webster's Dictionary to find out how Mozart's Requiem sounds as to endeavor to find advice as to the petty governments of a church in the elucidation of abounding mystery in the Bible.

Although my whole life has been spent in the study of the Scriptures, I am not competent to investigate them; but I am able to know what is best for the true manhood, to know that love everywhere is better than hatred, and so are you. The Bible fashions character. The devotees who, seeing the mischief of doubt, refuse to doubt anything, and, not content with denying themselves, though they deny to everybody else, they say: 'You have got to take the Bible literally; you must read it just as it is.' What nonsense! Such a proceeding may be safe to men who were not in danger any way, but for those who don't want to be led by the nose, it is dangerous. You make sceptics of such men, set their pride against belief. The Bible is full of facts and they must give way. It is said, "In six days God created the earth." The rocks told a different story. They say it took thousands of years. Theologians grew wrathy and gave the lie to nature. But to-day the rocks have proved their story and we know that a day is a season. We take these days for gigantic periods and geology and theology agree. The rocks have not changed, but the interpretation of Genesis has. I don't say to young men, 'Leave science alone;' but I say, 'Don't hurry.' I say, 'Don't read, but study.' The spiritual force of the Bible gains in every generation. So I say to scientists, 'Study up the knowledge of man, his adaptability to social life. Join hands with the philosopher, the mesmerist, the spiritualist, and license demonstration herself to every nation.' No one knows anything about the Bible until it is to him the same as is a medicine book in actual sickness. The medicating power of the Bible is therefore its life."

We like Mr. Beecher's advice to young men, when he says, "don't hurry" in your conclusions concerning science and the Bible. We do not believe there is any clash between true science and the sacred Scriptures; but we do believe there is a direct clash between Mr. Beecher's position and the Bible. We do not wonder that he is compelled to say, "Although my whole life has been spent in the study of the Scriptures, I am not competent to investigate them"; especially when he called it "nonsense" "to take the Bible literally," when it says, "In six days God created the earth." Right here we would take occasion to say that we believe whoever takes the position that the doctrine, and practical duties taught in the Bible, are not expressed in literal language, will make nonsense of the book.

We do not believe that the rocks, when left to tell their true story, "say it took thousands of years" to create the earth with its vegetables, animals, and man; but that the entire work was accomplished in six literal days of twenty-four hours each. We say, we do not believe there is a single fact in geology to prove that the plain account of creation, recorded in Genesis, is not strictly and literally true.

We give below a few geological FACTS. Dr. Robert Patterson, of Chicago, author of "Fables of Infidelity," has gathered many important geological facts in relation to the asserted high antiquity of the human race and the earth. He says:

"It is quite remarkable that our very surface geology should furnish us with numerous recent illustrations of the enormous blunders into which geologists stumble, the moment they leave the realms of fancy and attach themselves to calculable facts. They seem to be like men who dream; or as if their imaginations have become so accustomed to ages and millenniums that they are incapable of sober calculations of years and days. When they venture on such calculations for the future, they are almost invariably disappointed. For instance, when in 1820 the Russian philosopher, Dr. Hamel, and his party were swept along the Grand Plateau of Mont Blanc by an avalanch of snow, carrying three of his guides into a crevasse, where they perished, he alluded to the possibility of the reappearance of their remains by the slow action of the glacier after an interval of some thousands of years. In August, 1861, they were discovered and recognized upon the surface of the glacier. From the correctness of this calculation of a future date, we may infer the accuracy of geological chronology of the unknown past."

"The supposed necessity that vegetable should precede animal life, which gave us such wonderful millions of ages of still life on our globe while the lichen was forming a soil on the granite, etc., is dismissed by Humboldt as a pure fiction."

"Peat bogs in which human remains have been found at the depth of twelve feet, whence an immense antiquity was inferred, have been found to grow a foot in five years. In thirty-six hours a green tree is converted into a fossil in California, and into lignite in a week; while before your eyes you behold the hardest porphyry converted into potter's clay, and the hardest granite so softened by the acidulated atmosphere, that you can crush it with your hand, or cut it with a knife as easily as unbaked bread. I have seen this metamorphic action affecting all the strata of the Napa Valley. Vegetation runs riot amid this excess of carbonic acid. This discovery at once accelerates the formation of the carboniferous plants many milleniums; besides showing the folly of Lyell's calculations of the slow erosion of lavas by streams in Auvergne.

"On the coast of England flints have been found, the stony covering of which has so completely the aspect of ancient rock as to warrant the conclusion that they were the growth of countless ages; but on removing the flinty matrix, you find a coin bearing the head of an Edward, a James, or even a George; or a bolt or an anchor bearing the mark of some existing firm. We have had men counting the successive thin layers of delta and sedimentary deposits as indications of so many floods; but we know now that these give no such traces, as a mass of fine clay deposited in quiet water, will stratify in a few hours, into dozens of layers."

"The most enormous blunders have been made by geologists in calculations of the time requisite for the excavation of river channels by the existing streams, and wonderful computations of the antiquity of human remains found in their banks have been based on these calculations.. But the best modern geologists now prove that these river beds were not excavated by the existing rivers, and some of them not by rivers at all, but that they are earthquake chasms."

"Lyell, and a score of other savans, gravely cite the researches of Herner, who bored down 70 feet into the soil of Egypt for bits of brick and pottery, and calculated that the Nile had been depositing that seventy feet of mud over them during the last 30,000 years. The matter was solemnly reported to the British Association and not one of these learned men had common sense enough to put the question in its proper form, viz: How long will a brickbat require to sink seventy feet into a mud bank? The whole valley of the Nile is only a vast mud bank every year during the inundation; and the brickbats probably reached their bed in one season. At any rate, bricks of the reign of Mohammed Ali, have been found deeper than Herner's."

EXPERIENCE.—Our readers will find an interesting article headed, "My Experience." Let all remember that God is no respecter of persons. If one may enjoy "perfect love," all may. Such a position is truly a desirable one to those who occupy it; it is certainly pleasing to the Lord to have us come where he can fill us with his Spirit, thus producing "perfect love" and peace. No one can be thus filled till he gives up all to Christ. Half-hearted service cannot receive the full approbation of Jesus; but without his full approval we cannot have perfect love. So long as we indulge in sin knowingly, we shall not be free from condemnation. The apostle says: "There is, therefore, now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." Rom. 8: 1. All those who expect to be ready to meet Jesus at his coming should not rest till they give all to Christ, and enter the blessed state where there is "no condemnation."

O what a fullness there is in Jesus. What satisfaction, peace, comfort, rest, joy, love; yes, every thing that is valuable. Truly, he is our "ALL IN ALL." To find him thus, two things are necessary: complete SUBMISSION, and unwavering TRUST. It seems strange that any one should be unwilling, or fear to do this. Every body needs an almighty friend and lover. We have him in Jesus. Why not commit all into his hands for safe keeping? Why allow our great enemy to have partial control over us, when we can be wholly given up to Christ? We know Satan is our enemy, and that Jesus is our dearest friend. Satan would destroy, and the Lord would save. It is for us to choose which we will serve. "His servants ye are . . . whom ye obey."

We see no room to doubt that Jesus is soon coming. Let us give him full possession of our hearts, and the entire control of our whole being, now and forever.

A STRANGE REPORT.—We seldom take any notice of false reports. If we took occasion to correct them all, we should have quite an addition to our business. We have just received a kind note of inquiry, relative to a new reported saying, which, if true, would be very much out of the way. The inquirer says,

"I should never give second thought" to it, "did I not know many honest ones are being deceived. . . . I will give it to you, word for word as I received it in a letter from a good and honest sister. She says, 'I heard that Bro. Grant said he was as sinless as Jesus himself. He said it was as impossible for him to sin as it was for Christ.'"

We take the occasion to say once for all that we never said or thought any such thing; neither do we believe it would be proper for any man living to make such a statement.

CORRECTION.—The first note in the air of the piece of music, published Nov. 22nd, should be on A. instead of G.

BRO. AND SR. FASSETT.—Bro. and Sr. Fassett's labors are appreciated in California. They are making a good impression. They are holding meetings in Vallejo and San Francisco, twenty-five miles apart. The following are from the Vallejo daily papers. Says the Recorder, Nov. 17th:—

"Persons who miss hearing Elder Fassett on the prophecies miss a great deal. He simplifies his subject by the aid of charts. His discourses are able and instructive, and Bible scholars ought to hear his reasoning."

From the Democrat, Nov. 18th:—

"The Elder has a pleasant address, and displays an intimate knowledge of the prophecies, and of sacred and profane history. His lectures are deeply interesting. Mrs. Fassett is also a good preacher. She is wonderfully familiar with the Scriptures, and presents her subject in an earnest and persuasive manner. The attendance at their meetings has been good, all things considered, though we are sure it would be larger if the public were familiar with the merits of the prophetic discourses of Elder Fassett. There is a very deep interest attaching to the mysteries of the prophecies, and all intelligent expositions of them must be received with attention, however much of difference of opinion may exist in regard to them."

BRO. P. B. MANNING writes that he had been to see a few of the brethren, who gave him over eight dollars, and when he got into the cars at Lawrence, to go to Manchester, a crowd gathered round him and took his pocket book, with all the money he had in the world, so that he had not a cent left. He is not able to work. Give him a lift. His address is Goffstown, N. H.

WESLEY'S PLAIN ACCOUNT OF CHRISTIAN PERFECTION is excellent for those who desire to consecrate all to Jesus. We purpose giving extracts from it, for the benefit of those who are anxious to enjoy "perfect love," and be all ready for translation at the coming of Christ. Brn. and Srs., we believe it is high time that we were awake on the subject of preparation, with lamps trimmed and burning.

OUR BOUND TRACTS.—We are out of the five tracts bound together, but can furnish the four tracts, "What is Man"? "The Soul," "The Spirit," and the "Rich Man and Lazarus," bound in one volume, price 20 cts.; and "Spiritualism Unveiled," separate, 15 cents. Postage on the whole, four cents. In a few weeks we hope to be able to furnish the five in one volume.

MUSIC.—Our readers will find a choice piece of music, and two most excellent hymns in this paper. Be sure and sing them.

GOOD HEALTH and the HERALD OF HEALTH for December are received, containing, as usual, valuable reading matter.

"THE DOCTRINE of IMMORTALITY."

BY J. H. WHITMORE.

We have a supply of this valuable work of 300 pages, issued at a very low price, for general distribution,—of which we will send by mail, post paid, four copies for $1.00; or by express, five copies for $1.00. Single copy, 35 cents. AG'T.

IS IT SO?—At the sixth Annual convention of Spiritualists in Ct., held at Willimantic, Aug. 26th, 1871, the following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That we rejoice in the continued advance of the philosophy of Spiritualism in this country and in Europe.

Resolved, That mediumship is the only way given under heaven whereby we can gain a knowledge of the future life. Therefore mediums ought to be encouraged by all, and the gift cultivated by all who possess it.

Resolved, That Spiritualism will emancipate the people from all political parties as it does from sectarian creeds, so that Spiritualists will vote against the nominee of any party who is in favor of amending the constitution of our country so as to recognize any portion of a theological creed in that instrument.

Resolved, That the acknowledged fact of spirit intercourse from the spheres above to the inhabitants of earth by the clergy during the past year in their ministration is a token of encouragement to our cause, which must soon be espoused by all who believe man has an immortal soul.

It will be seen that the foregoing resolutions set aside the Bible, and claim that "mediumship" is the only means by which "we can obtain a knowledge of the future life." Rather poor authority, we think, if we are to depend on the lying demons for evidence.

"THE PLAN OF REDEMPTION."—Third Edition.—We are happy to announce that this valuable work has reached its third edition, though by an error the imprint reads second. We find it highly commended as giving valuable instruction on the Scriptures, especially on difficult points. Its possessors have reason to thank the Lord that it was written and published. Now is the best time to buy, as you have more time for reading. This edition is bound in much better style than the former. It will be an excellent "gift book" for those who wish to give a valuable present to a friend, a minister, or any other, on the coming holydays. Price, postpaid, $1.25. For sale at this office.

THE POPE'S CURSES.

The following will give the reader the true spirit of the Papacy. It is said to be a literal translation of the "major excommunication," which Pius Ninth pronounced against Victor Emanuel, after his triumphant entry into Rome:—

"By the authority of the omnipotent God, Son and Holy Spirit; and of the sacred canons, and of the Immaculate Virgin Mary, Mother and nurse of our Savior; and of the celestial virtues, angels, archangels, thrones, dominations, powers, cherubims and seraphims; and of the holy patriarchs and prophets; and of all the apostles and evangelists; and of all the holy innocents, who in the presence of the Holy Lamb, are worthy of singing new hymns; and of the holy martyrs, holy confessors, holy virgins, and of all the saints, together with all the blest and elect of the Lord—we excommunicate and anathematize and separate him from the Holy Church of Omnipotent God; that he may be tormented by an eternal martyrdom together with Dathan and Abiram and all those who say to the Lord God, 'Depart from us—we do not wish to walk in thy ways.' And as fire is quenched by water, so let his light henceforth be extinguished.

May the Father who created man, curse him. May the Son who suffered for us, curse him. May the Holy Ghost who visited us in baptism, curse him. May the Holy Cross on which Christ (for our salvation and triumph over his enemies) ascended, curse him. May the Holy Virgin Mary, Mother of God, curse him. May St. Michael, defender of holy souls, curse him. May the angels and archangels, principalities and powers and all the celestial cohorts curse him! May St. John the Precursor, St. John the Baptist, St. Paul, St. Peter, St. Andrew, and all the other apostles of Christ together curse him. May the rest of his disciples and the poor evangelist's (that with their word converted the whole world,) and may the holy and wonderful army of martyrs and confessors (they by the sacrifice defended the All-powerful God) curse him.

May the choirs of holy virgins (who for the love of Christ despised the things of the world) condemn him.

May he be condemned in the house and in the field, in the open streets and in the by-ways, in the wood, in the water, and in the church.

May he be cursed in his birth and in his death; in his food and in his drink; in his fasting and in his intemperance; in his quiet moments and in his sleep; in his waking and in his passage on foot or seated in his repose or in his labor; in the excrements in the circulation of his blood. Be he cursed in all the facilities of his body. Be he cursed in the covering of his head. Be he cursed internally and externally. May he be cursed in his hairs. May he be cursed in his forehead and in his temples. In his eye-brows and in his eyes, in his cheeks and in his nostrils, in his anterior and posterior teeth; be he cursed in his lips and in his throat; be he cursed in his shoulders and in his pulses; in his arms, hands, and fingers. May he be condemned in his mouth. In the breast, heart, and the bowels of his body let him be condemned. In his veins, in his arteries, in his thighs, genitals, ankles, knees, legs, feet, and in his nails. May he be cursed in all the ligatures and joints of his members, from the head to the feet. May he have no health. May the Son of the living God in all the glory of his Majesty curse him, and may heaven, with all its powers, unite and rise against him to curse and condemn him! So be it."—Correspondence of the New York Daily Standard.

RECEIVED INTO "EVERLASTING HABITATIONS."

Said Jesus, "I say unto you, Make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness; that when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitations." Luke 16: 9. Many, who look at this passage through theological spectacles, understand the expression, "when ye fail," to signify when ye die, and thus attempt to prove an entrance into "everlasting habitations" at death. But the connection shows that no allusion is made to death by the expression, "when ye fail." Jesus had just been referring to a steward who had been reprimanded for unfaithfulness, and notified that he must "give an account" (v. 2); and commended his wisdom in preparing for future support when his present support should fail, or he should "fail" of support from the source he had been receiving it; and this he did by befriending others, while means were at his disposal, that they might show him kindness when he should "fail" of support through the ordinary channel.

We, too, are notified that we must "give an account," not at death, but at the judgment day; and then we shall "fail" of earthly support, and will need to be befriended; and if we have been wise enough to make to ourselves friends, who can do us service at the judgment, by the proper use of the mammon of unrighteousness during this life, by feeding the poor, and supporting the gospel with it, then those immortal friends, Christ and the holy angels, will receive us "into everlasting habitations," into the mansions of the New Jerusalem. And this time of receiving the saints agrees with Christ's promise—"I will come again, and receive you unto myself." Christ will then befriend those who have incurred the wrath of God, if in this life they seek his friendship; and at the judgment the angels will be sent to gather them. W. S.

"THE HOPE OF ISRAEL."

Paul, while imprisoned, once affirmed—"For the hope of Israel I am bound with this chain." Acts 28: 20. Again, when under trial before king Agrippa, he said: "And now I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers; unto which promise our twelve tribes, instantly serving God day and night, hope to come." Acts 26: 6, 7. Though Paul entertained "the hope of Israel," or "the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers"—the hope of a coming kingdom under the supervision of the promised Messiah; and though the twelve tribes, still serving God in their formal manner, in their apostate state, were hoping for the same thing, yet they persecuted Paul, simply because he recognized Jesus as the promised Messiah, and consequently as the prospective King of the predicted kingdom. while the Jews rejected Jesus as an impostor. The point of difference between Paul and the Jews, was not as to whether a future kingdom was to come, but was with reference to who was heir of that kingdom. Paul was accused of preaching "another King, one Jesus," not as a supplanter of the Ruler of heaven, but of Cæsar; and certainly in order to preach Christ as a King in such a manner as to interfere with the rule of Cæsar, he must have preached him as a future ruler in heaven.

The belief in Jesus as the Messiah involves the belief of his future reign upon David's throne, for he is pronounced "Messiah the PRINCE (Dan. 9: 25), which signifies an heir to the throne; and the particular throne referred to by Gabriel in this affirmation cannot be mistaken, for in a subsequent discourse the same angel thus speaks concerning the same Messiah: "The Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David." Luke 1: 32. The true Messiah must reign upon that throne; and at the overthrow of that throne in the past, Jehovah affirmed, "It shall be no more until he come whose right it is; and I will give it him." Ezek. 21: 27. A seat on the throne of heaven can never fulfill this promise, and Jesus has never yet occupied any other throne; hence, if he is the true Messiah, he must hereafter take possession of David's throne, and reign on earth. To insist that Jesus is the promised Messiah is an admission that he is heir to David's throne; and David's throne, which was long ago "overturned," and has been "no more," is not identical with the throne of God. But the theology of the day repudiates the promised throne, and substitutes another, instead of seeing that Christ is to remain upon the throne of God simply "till his foes be made his footstool," then to "sit on the throne of his glory"—the glorious throne of David—to which he is heir.

The hope of Israel, as held by Paul, recognized the fact that the Messiah should "judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom" (2 Tim. 4: 1), thus connecting the judgment and the resurrection with the introduction of his kingdom, which fact had been overlooked by the apostate Jews of his day. Paul took the ground that Christ had been raised from the dead to die no more, and that at his return from heaven he would "change" our bodies, and "fashion them like unto his glorious body," thus fitting us to enjoy the kingdom without a liability of encountering death, or feeling pain. So this kingdom will be the deathless home of saints once dead, and "changed" ones, but not the dwelling-place of unchanged mortals, for Paul affirms, "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption. Behold, I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed." 1 Cor. 15: 50-52.

Such was the hope of Paul, styled by him "the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers"—the hope of an inheritance under Messiah's reign, in the land promised to Abraham, who also looked for a city. Then all who are of faith will share with faithful Abraham. W. S.

ASHAMED OF THE GOSPEL.

If you have the gospel hope, never be ashamed of it, but frankly acknowledge your affinity to the truth, unto "every one that asketh you." Never conceal your faith when candidly interrogated concerning it, like a friend with whom I was recently conversing on the cars, who blundered into the use of the expression—"these last days." I at once inquired, "Are you a believer in that sentiment, sir, that we are in the last days?" "O, I don't know about that," said he; and then, taking a second thought, he rallied and inquired, "Do you believe it?" I replied with emphasis, "Of course I do, for the Bible teaches it." Then, with apparent shame, like Peter after he had denied his Lord, he confessed that such was his faith; and I then learned that he had been a believer for long years.

While it is not best to cast pearls before swine, it is always safe to own your faith when candidly interrogated concerning it, even if not able fully to defend it. Show your colors in the presence of foes even. Never be ashamed of God's truth before men. Never hide the truth of heaven for fear of frowns, but "be ready always to give an answer to every one that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear." Never put the light of truth under a bushel because of its unpopularity, but let it shine alike in the presence of friends and foes. W. S.

WILL THERE BE PROBATION FOR THE IMPENITENT DEAD AFTER THEIR RESURRECTION?—If so, it must be after a release from the second death; for when the great white throne appears with its divine Occupant, the dead small and great will stand before God to be "judged out of the things written in the books," and all whose names are not written in the book of life are then to be "cast into the lake of fire, which is the second death" (Rev. 20: 13-15), while "every one that shall be found written in the book" shall be "delivered," or awake to "everlasting life"; and such will need no probation; so as "every one registered in the book of life will be delivered at that time, and as "whosoever" is not there registered will be cast into the lake of fire, to experience the "second death," the only chance for probation for the resurrected wicked will be by releasing them from the "second death," and making the judgment of Heaven invalid.

Who can roll back the dark wave of the judgment of God that shall sweep over the resurrected wicked, engulfing them in the lake of fire, to give them a new probation? After the tares are burned in the "furnace of fire," who shall take them therefrom, and transform them into wheat? After God shall "burn up the chaff," who shall bring it into existence again, and change it into grain for the garner? After God shall "judge every man," and execute judgment against the sinner, who will unjudge them, and give them another chance? Not God, for he will not thus repudiate his own work. Not man, for he has not the power to thus confront Deity. "All the proud, and all that do wickedly" incur divine wrath, from which there is no escape. W. S.

BRO. JESSE PARTRIDGE, now lying very sick, requests the prayers of the brothers and sisters, that he may be raised up. He especially wishes that Brn. Hastings, Grant, Couch, and Boutell, might meet and offer the fervent, effectual prayer that avails with God.

CHRISTIAN SALUTATION TO ALL.

Dearly beloved Brn. and Sisters:—We who are waiting for the consummation of our hope. expecting it soon to be realized, let us be "steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord." 1 Cor. 15: 18. Let us, therefore, "take heed, ... lest there be in any of us an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God"; but let us take counsel from the precious word, and "exhort one another daily, while it is called to day, lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin; for we are made partakers of Christ, if we hold the beginning of our confidence steadfast unto the end." Heb. 3: 12-14. I am happy to say to you, there is no necessity of backsliding or getting cold in this glorious cause; for "if ye do these things ye shall never fall; for so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." 2 Pet. 1: 10-11.

While we know we are surrounded by the perils of the last days, let us take heed to ourselves, "lest at any time" our "hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon" us "unawares." Luke 21: 34. Let us, therefore, "watch and pray" always, and quit ourselves like men and women that wait for their Lord, by doing all things in our families, and neighborhood, and church of God, "decently and in order"; contending earnestly (not rashly) "for the faith once delivered to the saints," and as much as lies in us," to follow peace with all men. Amen. P. MY EXPERIENCE.

S. WOODRUFF.

I feel like writing a few lines by way of exhortation this morning, to those who are wandering about desiring to find the Savior. For many long years was I in that condition, ofttimes saying, O that I knew where I might find him. In my boyhood days, my mind was first impressed about seeking the Lord. I wandered from school one day to a distant pine grove, thinking there to pray, away from the hearing of any one. I thought certainly that there I should find him; but oh, when there it seemed as though some one was listening. I could not pray. I found him not. Thus I went for several years. Ofttimes the response of my heart was, O that I knew where I might find him. One day the thought arose in my mind, go and visit a friend you have in the west; there you will find your heart's desire. I went, and wandered over the western fields days, weeks, and months; but I found him not. I tried to flatter myself at one time I had found him, because others told me I had; but this kind gave me no peace at heart. I returned home again with the same dismal, gloomy feeling resting on my mind.

A few years more passed, which brought me to 1854, when my attention was awakened to know that he whom I wanted to find was coming to earth again. My heart melted. Its response was, I must find him, or I shall die. I hastened to hear the word of the Lord from the great and the small. I found way to the prayer-meetings far and near, and amidst it all, I came home saying, O that I knew where I might find him. But blessed be the name of the Lord, I found him not where the thief did, on the cross; nor the thousands who have found him at the campmeetings, where hundreds of prayers were daily going up to God in behalf of the perishing of earth; but I found him in the dark, silent watches of the night, while all was still and quiet, and my head was pillowed for the night, and my companion was wrapt in quiet repose by my side. The response of my heart was, I must find him who can set me free; and before the rays of the morning light my heart went up to God. I found him, who said, "Go in peace; sin no more." O how sweet the words—"Go in peace." Blessed position to occupy here in this life.

And now years have rolled away, but he is with me still; and although the sea-tide of opposition sometimes rolls high, he says to the waves, Be still, and they obey. I have had much to encounter within the last two years in the direction of weakness and infirmities of body. Through much weakness have I preached the word the past year, but he has been with me, who says, "According to thy days, so shall thy strength be."

Should these lines be read by those who have never found him, let me say, wander not over the wild regions of the west, nor to the California shores, but hear him: "Behold, I stand at the door and knock; if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and sup with him, and he with me." You will find him wherever you are, when you seek him with all your heart. Dear reader, find him to-day, and then in your wanderings over this wicked world, tell the story of his matchless love to dying men, that others may find him too. O this indwelling love that swells the heart and bids it rejoice to know these awful times are only sure omens of the coming of Him we love so well. Wandering over this drear earth, and saying, "O that I knew where I might find him," never will tell the story, but one earnest petition from the heart will open the way, and the blessing will surely come.

The day is about to dawn, and although too frail in body to be away from home, the good Lord remembers me, and through his children I receive many God-sent blessings to cheer me, while waiting the coming of the Just One. My faith was never stronger than now of God's care for his children. He remembers me daily. My peace of mind is more even than ever before; and why? Because I have believed God. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." Now "the just shall live by faith." O let none draw back just here, almost to the end of the race. A little while, and the rumbling of his chariot wheels will be an awful knell to an unprepared world. The reeling of nations will tell in tones unmistakable that they cannot abide the terrible shaking of that day. O reader, the grace of God only can keep thee. By grace are ye saved.. Find a refuge in Jesus. A dreadful storm is gathering, and soon will come the vindication of God's righteous judgments. Get ready, for it will surely come, it will not tarry long.

☞ Ruskin well says "it is no man's business whether he has genius or not; work he must, whatever he is, but quietly and steadily; and the natural and unforced results of such work will be always the thing God meant him to do, and will be his best. No agonies nor heart-rendings will enable him to do any better. If he is a great man, they will be great things; but always, if thus peacefully done, good and right; always, if restlessly and ambitiously done, false, hollow and despicable."

REPORT

The following delegates reported: Brn. White and Stancliff, of Pleasant Valley; Bro. H. P. Bradley, Bristol; Bro. Curtis, Morris; Bro. Marble, Yalesville. Many churches failed to send delegates this year, but it is hoped that they will not be thus negligent in the future.

Ministers present: Ordained, G. L. Teeple, B. Hitchcock, G. L. White, B. St. John, A. H. Steele, Dr. W. Treat, H. Rockwell, Wm. Ripley, S. C. Hancock, L. S. Luddington. Garret, of Collinsville, and Bro. C. Emmons, of Morris, also reported as delegates from their churches.

Allow me to say in brief, that the reports of delegates and preachers were not as encouraging as we could have wished, but were much better than at some former meetings. A general feeling was manifested that the Lord is soon to come, and much gladness for the evidences. Bro. Seth Woodruff reported by letter, being too feeble to attend in person. Let Bro. Seth be remembered in his affliction.

On motion, a committee was appointed to nominate officers of conference for the ensuing year: viz., Brn. Elliott, Steele, and Stark. Campmeeting committee reported through their chairman, Bro. O. D. Correspondence.

From Sr. L. W. Bragg.

Beloved Pilgrims in the Lord:—As I have read upon the subject of faith from different ones in the Crisis, my poor heart has been much comforted and cheered on the pilgrimage to Zion's eternal, unfading glories. Never did I see the great need to earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints, as of late. Feeling that within there is a great lack, yet at the same time there is an uneasiness and an unyielding struggling for a complete victory in Jesus' worthy name; and like Jacob of old can never give it up, until like prevailing Israel I obtain the promised blessing of the Lord, and the abiding witness of the Spirit that my ways are pleasing to the Lord at all times. Yet by the deeds of the law shall no man be justified; but being justified by faith, we have peace with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ, and rejoice with joy inexpressible and full of glory; glorying only in the cross of Christ, by which we are crucified to the world and the world to us; seeking for that honor that comes from God only.

Says Christ, "How can ye believe, which receive honor one of another, and seek not the honor that cometh from God only?" How very true that my faith, with others, has been waning for this very cause; yet for the time, perhaps, imperceptible. O for a humble, unwavering, and unshaken confidence in the exceeding great and precious promises, feeling that we have but one to please, honor, or fear; sanctified to God wholly, soul, body, and spirit, without the least reserve for self or self interest; a continual breathing by the Spirit of truth after God and godliness, in its fullest sense that is attainable in this mortal state; even the fullness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ; coming "behind in no gift, waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ," that we "may be blameless in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ." 1 Cor. 1: 7, 8. Then we can effectually meet the Jannes and Jambres of our day, or men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith, who are coming in with all power, and signs, and lying wonders. But their folly will truly be made manifest to all men, as theirs also was in the days of Moses, as brought to view in Ex. 7th and 8th chapters. But the important question comes forcibly to my heart, Where is the faith manifested among us that was once delivered to the saints? The Lord have mercy upon us, is my prayer, and give us anew the washing of regeneration, and the renewing of the Holy Ghost, and fit us in all things to do and suffer the Master's blessed will; stablished by grace and love divine in every good word and work.

Hermon, Me.

From Sr. E. M. Hart.

Dear Pilgrims of the cross of Christ:—For your consolation and comfort, and to strengthen your faith in Christ as the greatest physician for all who are afflicted, both in body and mind, I pen you a few lines, to let you know of the merciful dealings of God toward me. I have been sick for nearly two years, being confined to my bed most of the time, and for twenty long months was unable to sit up only from ten to thirty minutes each day. For two long years, my disease baffled the skill of all the earthly physicians I employed. There seemed to be no help for me. Many times my friends thought I was dying, but still I survived. Life began to be wearisome, and all the bright hopes of this life began to fade. The thought of dying, and bidding a long farewell to all I held dear on earth, I could not endure; yet I knew I must either have help soon, or such would be my fate. After looking in vain for help from any earthly source, I turned my eye toward the great Physician, as the only source of recovery. I remembered of reading the prayer of faith saved the sick. My faith was so strong in this, that at the time of the campmeeting at Plainville, I sent word to have some one who had faith enough in Christ to come and pray with me, but no one came. After the meeting was over, Bro. G. L. White and wife, from Bristol, came up and prayed for my recovery. I immediately began to recover. That day I walked a few steps, the next day I sat up an hour and a half, and walked into the other room, and in a few days I could sit up most of the time.

I am now much better. Jesus is giving me more strength every day, and I believe if I put my trust in him, he will make me entirely well again. O how much Jesus has done for me. Once more I can go out and view the handy works of God, and breathe the fresh air, and rejoice with my friends. Dear saints of God, have faith in him. Jesus still lives, and is just as ready to heal to-day as ever. I shall henceforth put my trust in him, and try to do his will in all things, and in the coming morning I hope to meet the ones who prayed for me, with all the rest of the dear children of God. I wish the prayers of all the brothers and sisters, that my health may still improve, and I will try and meet you where there will be no more sickness and no more death. I often thought while I lay in my sick room, what a happy place it would be.

Unionville, Conn.

From Bro. R. Annis.

BRO. GRANT:—I desire to place a few words in the columns of the Crisis, thinking that I might comfort some of the brethren and sisters who are its readers in Boston, New Hampshire, and Nova Scotia, with whom I became acquainted in my travels through these places. In November, 1870, I left Boston for Liverpool, Nova Scotia, which is my native place. I took a package of tracts with me. When I arrived, I went out among the people to scatter my tracts and talk to them from the word of God. Although much opposed by the professed churches, I was like David going out to meet Goliath. The Lord was my strength and shield. Some were awakened to an understanding of the plain truths of the Bible. I can rejoice that ever my eyes were opened to see clearly in the word which God has revealed by his Spirit. The blessed hope of the coming kingdom looks brighter every day. The harvest is ripening fast. Soon the reapers will come, the angels, whom Jesus will send to gather his children from the four winds of heaven.

What a sleepy time this seems to be in which we are living. How many are departing from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, becoming worldly-minded, overcharged with cares of this life; seeking for ease and pleasure; eating and drinking with the drunken; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof. It is only the love of God's truth that will keep us together, that we may love the appearing of Jesus. The promise is, "To those who look for him will he appear the second time without sin unto salvation." Pure religion takes us out of the world. Those who are popular and worldly-minded are departed from the faith. It takes strong faith in the word of God to be his children, and to love one another as Christ has loved us, and gave himself for us. Paul says, "All that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." Then if there is no persecution, there is no living godly in Christ Jesus. God's people shall be a tried people.

We are living in trying times. Let us make sure work for the kingdom. I can say with the apostle, "Nevertheless the foundation of God standeth sure." "The Lord knoweth them that are his." When I look back upon my past life, and see what the good Lord has brought me through, it causes my heart to abound with joy, and give all the glory to God for his wondrous love to me. We can not expect to be loved by the world, for the world will love its own. I would rather have the smiles of my heavenly Father, than to have all the world. Brethren in Christ, let me have your prayers, that I may be kept amid trials in which I am living. The precious promises which God has made in his word comfort my poor heart. I long for the coming of Jesus. I will try and be faithful, and preach the word in season and out of season; rebuke and exhort with long-suffering, that I may have a crown of life with the dear saints in the everlasting kingdom.

Liverpool, N. S.

From Bro. H. M. Jones.

BRO. GRANT:—There are a few of us in this place that are looking for the literal return of the Savior. The signs of the times, and the calamities that have within the last year fallen upon the world at large, and especially upon this western country, are speaking to us in thunder tones that the great day of the Lord is at hand, yea, very near. O for a full consecration to God, that we may live holy in these last days. Our names here have been cast out as evil, but thanks be to God that his grace is sufficient for them that put their trust in him.

Since our quarterly meeting, which was held here last Sept., by Brn. Thompson and Graves, Bro. Sheldon has been here, and the doctrine as taught by the prophets, Christ, and the apostles, was set forth so clearly, and in such a christian-like spirit, that prejudice is being removed; some are saying that we have been misrepresented and lied about; some are reading our papers, tracts, and books, comparing with the Bible, and are becoming very much interested. Next Sabbath the Methodist minister is to show from the twentieth chapter of Rev. that Christ will not come for the next one thousand years.

Merrimack, Wis.

From Bro. R. L. Harrison.

BRO. GRANT:—The light and truth are spreading, though men and devils may oppose. I have been holding some meetings in the town of White Creek, Washington Co., and the Lord has blessed greatly. I have seen many come out on the side of the truth, as we hold it. I was up there week before last, and we had a good time. One dear sister, who had been trying to believe in Spiritualism for some fourteen years, took a bold stand for the truth. Glory to God. The trustees, who favor Methodism, closed the school-house, yet the neighbors opened their houses, and bid us hold our meetings still, which we did to the glory of God, until on account of sickness they were obliged to bring me home. I received a letter from there last week stating that they were holding the meetings among themselves, and that the Lord is with them, and others are still coming out on the side of truth.

Extracts from Letters.

SR. L. M. STODDARD writes from Lockport, N. Y.:—"The Lord has greatly blest me and my labors since I came here. I met with Bro. Couch and wife at Rochester, and it did my poor heart good to hear his voice once more. What a field there is before us, and the laborers are so few. It seems so strange that our brethren and sisters will not open their pockets to give to the tract fund, when so many are starving and perishing for lack of knowledge. How can we be dilatory, when such great events are passing before our eyes, and the world rushing to destruction as in the days of Noah and Lot? I feel, at times, like bidding farewell to every care, and flying on the wings of the morning to sound the alarm to a guilty, doomed world.

I look upon the tracts as so many preachers, and some of them more potent and mighty than the oral preaching. May God stir us anew to buckle on once more the mighty armor of God, and go forth to do execution in the ranks of the enemy. 'On, right onward for the right,' is the language of my heart. My heart is too full for utterance, when I see what could be done, if we poor preachers had more tracts to scatter. I need hundreds now, but have not the means."

Will not our readers respond to the earnest call for tracts? Send us the means to scatter them far and wide. The harvest is at hand. let us sow with a liberal hand, that the harvest may be abundant.—ED.

BRO. JOSEPH HAMILTON writes from Hamburg, Iowa:—"Should any of our preaching brethren come near this place, they are invited to call and preach for us. They can inquire for myself, or Charles Carman, and they will find friends that will welcome them. We have never heard one of the Advent preachers, but have been taking the World's Crisis. We believe the doctrine advocated in its columns. We have sent for tracts, read them, and given to our neighbors, and are satisfied that much good seed has been sown. How anxious we are that God in his mercy will direct some one of his faithful laborers this way to gather in the sheaves, that we may rejoice together with those of like precious faith. Hamburg is situated in the south west corner of the State of Iowa, on the Council Bluff and St. Joseph R. R.; also on the Burlington and Missouri railroad, having direct communication with Chicago."

BRO. P. G. BOWMAN, Lydia, S. C., writes Nov. 22nd, 1871:—"I have just returned from White Plains, some forty miles distant. I had a large and serious congregation, with a good many moistened eyes, while I tried to preach on the resurrection, the destruction of all evil beings and principles, in the great fiery day, and the sublimation and eternal glory that shall follow. I distributed a number of tracts and pamphlets, with a request that they read them carefully and prayerfully, and then lend them to others, and, by special request, promised to visit them again the first Sabbath in January next. May the blessing of a holy God water the seed sown; and bless the people for both worlds. Amen."

THAT NEW BOOK.—"Good Tidings."—We have just read this new and valuable book, and wish to say, we think it worthy the title it bears—"Good Tidings." We would rejoice to know that every christian in the land had a copy. It cannot fail to benefit every thoughtful christian who reads it, and will awaken deep inquiry concerning the nature of man, of future punishment, and the closing up of this dispensation. The subject of the atonement is not so clearly and Scripturally stated as is desired, on page 190. The chapters on Dan. 7: and 11, Rev. 7 and 17, are clear, convincing, and of great value to all Bible students; showing that the Lord is coming soon to close up the gospel dispensation.
I. C. WELLCOME.

THE BIBLE.—Men strike their knife through this book, because they say that the light of nature is sufficient. Have the fire-worshippers of India, cutting themselves with lancets until the blood spurts at every pore, found the light of nature sufficient? Has the Bornesian cannibal, gnawing the roasted flesh from human bones, found the light of nature sufficient? Could the ancients see heaven from the heights of Ida or Olympus? No. I call upon the pagodas of superstition, the Brahminic tortures, the infanticide of the Ganges, the bloody wheels of the Juggernaut, to prove that the light of nature is not sufficient. A star is beautiful, but it pours no light into the midnight of a sinful soul. The flower is sweet, but it exudes no balm for the heart's wound. All the odors that ever floated from royal conservatory or princely hanging gardens give not so much sweetness as is found in one waft from this scripture mountain of myrrh and frankincense. All the waters that ever leaped in torrent, or foamed in cascade, or fell in summer shower, or hung in morning dew, gave no such coolness to the fevered soul as the smallest drop that ever flashed out from the showering fountains of this divine book. If you like the light of nature better than that of revelation, why do you not go and root in the ground like the Hottentot; or go ride with the Laplander behind a team of dogs; or go help the Mexican pick cochineal; or go help the Arabs lassoo the wild horse; or the Turk hunt for gall nuts and meerschaum? I bring China, and India, and Siberia, and Ethiopia, and Tartary and New Holland, and Persia, and Hindostan, to prove, before all the nations of the earth, that the light of nature is not sufficient.—T. Dewitt Talmage.

KINGSBERY. Died in Chelsea, Nov. 11th, after a lingering illness of about a year, Jasper B. Kingsbery, aged forty years.

Bro. Kingsbery wished, for the sake of his dear wife and children, to recover, but he entrusted them to the care of the widow's God and orphan's father, and quietly fell asleep, fully assured that his rest would be short, and his resurrection to eternal life sure. May they follow him as he followed Christ, and be re-united in the kingdom of God.
J. COUCH.

CLOUGH. Died in Concord, N. H., Nov. 20th, of brain disease, my only grand-daughter, Clara A., only child of Edwin D. and Eliza J. Clough, aged thirteen months and twenty days.

Rest, innocent babe, for Jesus loved thee, and when the tide of life gently brought thee to live mid the lilies of infant purity, no countenance expressed sweeter charms or purer love than thine. But the hill to womanhood was too steep for thee, and the road to maturity too rough for thy tender feet; and when the fevered brain and convulsed face told that the curse rested heavily upon thee, Jesus kindly hushed thy sorrows in the soft slumbers of rest, appointing an angel to watch thy cold pillow, until he shall call thee to enjoy the blessedness of eternal life.

TENNY. Died in Auburn, Me., Nov. 6th, 1871, Bro. Samuel Tenny, aged forty-two years.

Bro. Tenny was a devoted christian, and an ardent lover of the truths that distinguish us as a people. He sleeps in Jesus. We hope to meet him again in the resurrection of the just. The funeral services were conducted by Eld. Mathews, of Auburn.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

ROME, Nov. 27. For the first time since the occupation of Rome the Italian Parliament met in this city to-day. The opening speech was delivered in person by His Majesty King Victor Emanuel. In commencing he alluded to the events connected with the occupation of the city, and said Italy was restored to herself and had reconquered her place in the world. He was convinced that Rome would remain the seat of the Pontificate. The relations between Italy and all other nations, His Majesty said, are friendly, and he believed that peace would continue, but he warned Parliament that they would be held responsible to a strict account in future if they neglected to perfect a thorough reorganization of the military and naval forces of the kingdom.

BRUSSELS, Nov. 29—P. M. The agitation against the Ministry is unabated. Petitions to the King for the dismissal of Ministers are pouring in from all parts of the country. An immense mass of people are assembled in front of the Palais de la Nation. The appearance of the multitude is threatening, but a strong force of troops are on the ground, and although they do not attempt to disperse the crowd, they have so far succeeded in preventing violence to persons or destruction of property. Cries of "Resign," "Resign," are heard on every side of the Palace. The temper of the people is dangerous, and the situation critical. The impression is the Ministers will yield and tender their resignations.

BRUSSELS, Nov. 30—P. M. To-day being one of the fete days of the Communists, trouble was expected and extraordinary precaution taken by the authorities to prevent dangerous demonstrations in the excited condition of the city. The Burgomaster issued a proclamation in the morning enjoining all good citizens to remain within their dwellings, forbidding demonstrations and declaring that illegal assemblages would be dispersed. Nevertheless in the course of the day the disturbances were renewed. Monster crowds of men of opposite political parties collected in the streets, and there were frequent collisions between them. The police seemed unable or unwilling to disperse the rioters. In one instance a company of the civic guards, sixty strong, were ordered to charge upon the people, but they reversed their muskets and refused to obey. The disorder continues, mobs hold possession of the streets and the excitement is intense.

New York, Dec. 1. A Paris special says that the Government of France is very uneasy, and exercises the utmost vigilance. There is a great display of troops in Paris, and all points are guarded by patrols every night, while police are stationed at every corner.

The public mind is very unsettled, and the general impression is that the present state of affairs cannot last for any length of time.

A Rome special says Victor Emanuel was received with tremendous enthusiasm by the Italian Parliament. In his address he said the work to which he had devoted his life was completed. An intimation that there was a necessity of conciliating the Vatican was coldly received. At the conclusion of the ceremonies of the opening of Parliament he was called to the balcony twice by the populace. The city was grandly illuminated in the evening. The Pope was consoled by the Priests.

DOMESTIC.

CITY OF MEXICO, Nov. 19, via HAVANA, Nov. 29.—Anarchy prevails throughout the Republic. The journals are filled with pronunciamentos, and the troops are growing revolutionary.

General Porfirio Diaz has formally pronounced, and is backed by the Legislature of Oaxaco, which has decreed to return to its own sovereignty. The greater part of the army is distrusted.

The Siglo of the 18th says that Juarez was closeted with the American Minister on the night of the 17th, who advised the President to change his Cabinet. The report caused a great sensation. The people are expressing fears of American intervention. Positive assurances are given of Cabinet changes early in December.

It is rumored that Romero will soon go to Washington, but whether officially or not, it is unknown. It is again reported that Mexico will try to raise a loan in the United States.

The military situation remains unchanged, and both parties are preparing for an advance.

General Terran was arrested at Vera Cruz by order of Juarez, and escaped from Puebla and went to Oaxaca.

Palacio is spoken of as Provisional Governor of Nueva Leon, where the Juarezists are gaining strength.

Vidal Castaneda announced on the 15th in Congress that he was authorized to state by the Serdista party that they do not sympathize with either Diaz or the Government, but will remain neutral in the fight between the Government and the revolutionists.

General Negrete has abandoned Diaz and gone to Sierra De Zacapoaxtla.

The manifesto issued by Diaz meets with poor response. It is reported that the brothers Diaz disagree, Porfirio and his army favoring Benitez as Governor instead of Felix Diaz.

SALT LAKE CITY, Nov. 27. In the Court this morning the case of Brigham Young, for lewd and lascivious cohabitation, was called up, and upon a motion of the prosecuting attorney ordered for trial next Monday.

Mr. Hempsted for the defence protested against this order on the ground that it would be impossible to have his client here at such short notice. He asked for two weeks, which was refused.

SALT LAKE, Nov. 29. The mail carrier from Cottonwood, which arrived this afternoon reports six feet of snow on a level and snow drifts from twenty to one hundred feet in depth. The principal mining claims, however, manage to continue to work.

THE ITALIAN PARLIAMENT IN ROME.—The Edifice Crowned.—After centuries of patient waiting and humiliation and sorrow, the Italians have made Rome their capital, and the ancient City of the Seven Hills, of Romulus and the Cæsars, has become once more the central and governing city of a great, free and united people. The event which took place on Monday last, when the Italian Parliament met in Rome, and when the King of Italy delivered his speech from the throne, was not a surprise, because we have long been aware that such an event was approaching; but it is not the less on that account the grandest event in these modern times. Rome, in the hands of the Pope, was the stronghold and bulwark of tyranny. Rome to-day, in the hands of Victor Emanuel, is the symbol of liberty.

Once more, after well nigh two thousand years, an ancient privilege will be resumed, and the modern Roman will be able proudly to use the language of St. Paul, "Sum Civis Romanus." The spirit of Cavour must now be satisfied. The edifice of Italian unity is crowned. Amid the many causes of joy not the least important is that the Holy Father still finds it convenient to remain in the Holy City. With a sacred and secular court, Rome may become the Paris of the future. Victor Emmanuel is entitled to some praise for the words of kindness he spoke regarding the Vatican. The Italian people will mar the beauty of the edifice which they have so laboriously constructed if they make it a necessity for the Pope to leave Rome.—New York Herald.

THE POPE AND THE BIBLE.—The city of Rome is not large enough to contain an "Infallible" Pope and a freely circulated, open Bible at the same time. One or the other will be compelled to leave; and we are thankful that present appearances indicate it will be the Pope. Rumors now come to us that his Holiness Pius IX. is to take refuge in a small French city. Somewhere he must go, and that speedily. He will never be able to accustom his eyes to the flood of light which is now shining all around the Vatican. That big sign, "American Bible Society," erected in plain sight of his palace, is too dazzling a vision for a sight so long accustomed to dwell in darkness. In 1848, he extinguished the light which then began to shine by kindling a fire of his own, in which he burned up the few hundreds of Bibles which had found entrance into Rome during the temporary triumph of Garibaldi. But in 1870, the light of life again shined into the eternal city with such overpowering effulgence that "Infallibility" and the Œcumenical Council and all the cardinals could not quench its rays. This light is now intolerable to the poor Pope. Either the Bible or he must leave Rome. So, please hasten the preparation of some very dark spot, where he may hereafter be permitted to abide in peace, without being any more disturbed by the unwelcome intrusion of light from God's word.—Christian World.

A RECEIPT FOR BREAKING DOGS FROM CHASING SHEEP.—Tie the dog to a ram or a large sheep. The sheep being frightened and the strongest, will snake the dog around the lot, over ditches, or stones, till the dog repents heartily. After he is let loose, you never can get him near another sheep. I have given this receipt to a number, and it works complete. Try it, and you will spoil your dog's appetite for mutton.

"ABIDE WITH US."

Tarry with me, O my Savior!
For the day is passing by;
See! the shades of evening gather,
And the night is drawing nigh;
Tarry with me, tarry with me,
Pass me not unheeded by.

Many friends were gathered round me
In the bright days of the past;
But the grave has closed above them,
And I linger here the last;
I am lonely, tarry with me
Till the dreary night is past.

Dimmed for me is earthly beauty,
Yet the spirit's eye would fain
Rest upon thy lonely features;
Shall I seek, dear Lord, in vain?
Tarry with me, O my Savior,
Let me see thy smile again.

Dull my ear to earth-born music;
Speak thou, Lord, in words of cheer;
Feeble, tottering my footsteps,
Sinks my heart with sudden fear;
Cast thine arms, dear Lord around me,
Let me feel thy presence near.

Faithful memory plants before me
Every deed and thought of sin;
Open thou the blood-filled fountain,
Cleanse my guilty soul within;
Tarry, thou forgiving Savior,
Wash me wholly from my sin.

Deeper, deeper grow the shadows,
Paler now the glowing west;
Swift the night of death advances—
Shall it be the night of rest?
Tarry with me, O my Savior,
Lay my head upon thy breast.

Feeble, trembling, fainting, dying,
Lord, I cast myself on thee;
Tarry with me through the darkness,—
While I sleep, still watch by me
Till the morning, then awake me,
Dearest Lord, to dwell with thee.

LETTER FROM CALIFORNIA.

Sketch of a Discourse by Mrs. O. R. Fassett—Importunate call for Elder Grant—Comparative failure and decline of the Seventh Day Movement in San Francisco—Inducements for a Missionary Campaign at Sacramento—A word about Vallejo.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CRISIS:—Yesterday morning Mrs. O. R. Fassett preached at the Chapel, Mission Street, opposite the new Mint. There was a congregation of about one hundred and fifty persons. Eld. Howell conducted the introductory exercises. Mrs. Fassett took for her text, "Preach the word." 2 Tim. 4: 2. There were three grounds named for the injunction; two from the context, and one from other Scripture; considering first the preceding verse, "I charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom: Preach the word." A most solemn admonition and injunction. About to die, "ready to be offered up," the venerable Paul looked around him to see his successors. Upon whom should his mantle fall? The most competent in his eyes was the youthful Timothy; and leading Timothy, as it were, up to the great white throne, he placed the tremendous commandment upon him: "Preach the word." Looking down through the centuries to come, and realizing the day of "appearing" and the time of the setting up of the "kingdom," into which none but the Word-converted should be admitted, Paul cried unto Timothy: "Preach the word."

What was this word that must be preached? All doctrine is founded upon prophecy, and all correct practice upon doctrine. There is no new prophecy in the New Testament; only an exposition, an unfolding of the foretellings and moral ethics of the Old Testament. "Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of me." These words spoken by the Savior were uttered before there was a New Testament, of course; as were words of similar import and conclusion of the apostles? What is the word? In Paul's glorious description of the whole course of the christian, there is only one offensive weapon named; that which is held in the right hand—"the sword of the Spirit." And what is that? "The sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God." (Eph. 6: 17.) And this is a "two-edged sword." This was a Roman weapon; sharp on either side. But sharper than a two-edged sword is the sword of the Spirit; able to divide asunder the joints and the marrow. It is the Word of God that is able to convert, to heal and make whole. It will, when rightfully used, pierce the sinner's heart; it will cut off the offending members; it will wound grievously that it may heal, rebuild, re-create gloriously.

Mrs. Fassett gave an illustration: a man in Minnesota, who had been consulting the Spiritualists, attended the preaching of Elder Himes. The Elder described those who followed after muttering spirits; their folly, their doom. The smitten man whispered, "Sister Fassett has been telling Eld. Himes all about me; I wish I could have the privilege of telling my own faults." She had not told the Elder—that was a mistake. But the word had been sent by the Spirit to the man's conscience; and she declared to him that it was evidence that there was yet hope for his conversion; God was warning and soliciting yet in his great mercy.

"Preach the word," which is "sound doctrine." Those who say that it is not of any consequence what a man believes, so long as he is sincere, do greatly err. As there is but one Lord, one baptism, only one way whereby a man can be saved, so it is all important that the word be preached, that right practice may spring from sound doctrine.

Mrs. Fassett dealt upon Paul's picture of the "last days," and submitted that it was undeniable that we were living in the time he foretold—"perilous times," etc. She promised to preach on the true doctrine, and contrast some of the present day fables, next week. She and her husband had not left their little flocks in the east—some of them weeping on account of their departure—and come a distance of three thousand miles, to preach any thing to the people of San Francisco but THE WORD OF GOD. They came to preach a Savior who died for our sins; of a resurrection from the dead; of a coming kingdom of righteousness, with Christ at the head; of the near conclusion of this age of probation. Peradventure the great Bishop and Shepherd of souls would give them some fruit for their humble, but willing and earnest service.

I have given a desultory sketch—if it is even worthy that name—of a discourse that was edifying in the highest degree; sometimes thrillingly impressive. The logical arrangement of the sermon, the felicitous quotation of the "word" as the comments proceeded, the clear, distinct enunciation, the rarely used but always emphatic gestures, contributed to make a morning service that must long be remembered by every visitor. I cannot but believe that this able and eloquent woman will have great reason to rejoice in California over "much fruit" from her pious and gifted speech, and her ministering conversations.

And now, if our dear friend Grant would only decide to come out here this winter and take advantage of the legislative gathering at the Capitol, to proclaim the truth to representative men from all parts of the State, there would be a degree of finish to the missionary work in California that would ensure, I think, a great independent work in the faith for the time that is to come. As the Elder admits—when not under duress—that the expectations I raised and nurtured last fall for his coming were more than justified by results, why can't I be trusted again to the extent I show a desire to be believed?

The Seventh-day Adventists do not appear to be making any headway in this city, and the mistaken men who attempted to break into the fold, established here through Elder Grant's pioneering, will probably soon retire from the place in as good order, and with as much grace, as they can maintain under the circumstances. Pity that they could not be so enlightened that they could see that we have passed from under the law into the full rule of the gospel of Christ. They have done some harm in this city by giving a sharply sectarian appearance to "Adventism," as viewed by the world outside; but Eld. Grant could straighten out all the regretted misapprehensions by a few sermons, to such audiences as he alone could at once assemble in San Francisco. And then by the meetings and enunciations at Sacramento, it would be rendered impossible for any man or set of men hereafter, in any other portion of the State, to make the people believe that "Adventism" and Seventh-day-ism were inseparately connected.

Sacramento is a city about one hundred miles distant from San Francisco, north-east, by the nearest route. There are two railroad routes and a river route. It contains about forty thousand inhabitants, of the average intelligence and refinement of mid-western cities. There are one hundred and twenty members of the legislature, and, of course, an army of officials—one thousand strangers in all, constantly in attendance during the session, being the estimate. There are many commodious halls, which can be had for reasonable rent.

In the rapidly growing city of Vallejo, a good foundation for a church has been laid, to say the least. Eld. Fassett was there yesterday.

WHAT I DO NOT READ.

P. BURR.

Says one, "I read everything that comes along so that I may be posted up." Well, I do not. I choose my reading. I have no time to waste in reading wordy books or newspaper articles, that run all over creation, as it were, after an idea, and then when one is obtained it is simmered down and so completely liquidated in language as to be nearly devoid of all nutritive character. I cannot afford to read so much for so little real benefit. I choose for my reading those writings that I judge contain good wholesome thoughts, such as will nourish not only the mind, but the affections, in a healthy manner. As a saint of God, I can do no other way and be able to give a good account of my time. I find nothing in my spiritual nature that is congenial to a perusal of gaseous, windy writings of men, which, when sifted amount to but little substance.

Also, I do not read those books and writings which present on their surface evidence of their untruthfulness, and hence unprofitableness. And I propose to be my own judge in this respect.

It is thought by many that everything should be investigated, and that those who will not read everything that comes in their way have no right to oppose what they have not read. Now, when the surface of a stream is not clear, we may expect to find it muddy beneath. So with theories that are mixed and impure, and I do not propose to spend much time in diving into theological waters that are muddy on the surface. I mean to keep out of such waters. Men may call me narrow-minded, and a bigot, and all that, but opprobrium will be of no avail with me. I prefer to keep clean. It is enough for me to see the outside of foul waters, without wading through the middle of the mire. Being fortified with the truth as it is in Jesus' word, I fear not the opposition of any. Jesus says, "If ye continue in my word, . . . ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Do we need to know error also? Error is pernicious, and I do not wish to know any more of it than I do.

Men may call me illiberal, sectarian, and all that. So would the wolf call the shepherd who pens his flock in a fold, or the hawk the farmer who coops his chickens. I ever hold myself ready to talk in the spirit of Jesus on any theological question as long as the points are clear; but when foul water comes up and error appears on the surface, further time spent on the subject is but wasted. The work of cramming our intellects with every new idea that is presented, be it good or bad, is very destructive to a devotional spirit. Proper investigation is a search after truth, and one can never find it in the muddy waters of error. The waters of truth always run clear, and the church of God should seek for truth in the unfailing word. I, for one, am satisfied with the pure water of truth that quenches the thirst of the soul, and will drink no other.

MY EXPERIENCE.

S. L. HUBBARD.

Dear Brn. and Srs.:—As Bro. Grant has given an invitation for any to write of their experience in the deep things of God, and as I have had a deep experience lately, I have felt it duty for some time to write it as best I could, and send it to the Crisis. May the Lord direct me.

I have been trying to serve the Lord for about seven years; sometimes I have enjoyed my mind very well; then, again, I have not. Sometimes I have been on the mountain top, then again clear down in the valley. I had not the keeping power. I felt a longing for something which I had not got. Well, I struggled on. I had a fear of man. I was not satisfied. I felt that there was a higher life, and it seemed sometimes as though I had got it; but I could not keep it. I went to Springfield campmeeting last August. I felt as never before the importance of being wholly consecrated to God, of being holy. I went home, or to the place where I worked, but things went hard. It seemed as though the Lord had left me; but I determined I would trust in the Lord if he slew me. I had great peace at times, but I could not keep it. I saw that there was evil in my heart. My temper would rise at little things. It was hard work for me to govern my appetite. I made up my mind that I would deny myself; that I would govern myself. Peace came, but I lost it again. I had great trials. My faith was put to a severe test. Sometimes I could see no light. About this time I came across a work entitled "A plain account of Christian perfection," by John Wesley. I bought it at the campmeeting. I read it. It did me much good. It just hit my case; and the Lord has brought me out into the fullness of Christ. Bless his holy name. It is "perfect love," it is joy unspeakable and full of glory. It is a peace that "passeth all understanding." My whole desire is to glorify God and do good to my fellow men. My will is wholly swallowed up in Christ's will. Jesus seems near. I can realize what it is to abide in Christ. I am lost in Christ.

I was a christian before. I loved the people of God. I loved to meet with them. I loved to hear the gospel. Dear brethren, this is just what we want to be prepared to meet the Lord. O seek for it. Do not be satisfied until you get this fullness; then you can feel that all is well, whether you live or die. Oh, may you be saved, is my prayer.

THOUGHTS.

JULIA B. LLOYD.

How strange and wonderful are the sights and sounds of this life. How vast the knowledge to be gained. We may deeply study the works of God, and then know comparatively little. Life is not long enough to compass the wealth of joy and glory. Like a beautiful panorama the human tide passes before our eyes. Aged faces marked with wisdom, and young faces marked with hope. The aspirations of youth, how far they reach. If they fail, God's promises come to the rescue. Mortals supported by strength divine, how firm.

Friendship! what a word is that. As link after link in the golden chain is added, and friends are drawn more closely into our enlarged hearts, we can only pray that in eternity we may love them forever. We may all be strong and guileless and good. We may know the joy of making the wretched smile, and of winning the erring into right paths. O, enchanted world! Hear its joyous songs. See its smiles, which tell of peaceful hearts; its glad laughter, which drives care away. What of its clouds? They are lined with brightness, and break into dew drops. Its roses bloom, its fruits ripen and mellow, its waters are often sweet and clear. Though its fields cover our choicest ones in their grave robes, yet there the turf will soon rise, the earth will scatter, and garments of light will be given them. The dust on which we tread will no longer hide them from the glory above.

Renewed earth, would that we were under thy skies. Something whispers that there will be an expansion of all that here is good, and interesting, and beautiful. The joy will be unmixed. The glory will be substantial glory. What wondrous society will that be when all are righteous. How rich will be the seeking after knowledge and truth, for there will be no crushed aspirations, no blight, no weakness. The glad realization of having been found worthy of life, how sweet it will be through all eternity. As fair sunset skies give promise of a bright to-morrow, so the beauty and love and goodness here are most surely tokens of what shall be in the coming kingdom.

REPORT OF THE OHIO CONF.

The A. C. Conference for the State of Ohio held its annual session with the church at Nevada, commencing Oct. 27th, and continued over the Sabbath. The preaching brethren belonging to the conference were all present, and the different churches were represented by their delegates, with one exception. Bro. Jonas Wendall, of New York Conf., was present, and aided us in our deliberations, and also in preaching the word. The reports of churches and ministers speak well for the work that is being done. Two churches are without a pastor, yet they keep up the ordinances, and are as zealous as ever in the cause; but they are hungering after more food. Eld. J. M. Judson has been laboring in six different places, and with good results. His health is poor, but he expects to work till Jesus comes. Eld. E. McCulloch is pastor of the church at Nevada, but labored at two other points. Since the last conference, he has baptized fifteen in different places. He has given all to the service, and expects soon to reap the reward in the world to come.

Eld. Jonas Wendall has preached considerable in the State, and is doing all he can for the cause. Eld. D. C. Jefferson is preaching some in Norwalk and Fairfield, and wherever the way opens is ready to work in the Master's vineyard. Eld. G. W. Stetson being sick at this hour of the session, was unable to report his labors, which have not been few. The subjoined written report of the delegates from the Nevada church, expresses the condition of the whole conference generally, and I send it that the brethren and sisters abroad may receive it as a letter from us.

Report of the Advent Christian Church,

At the Annual Conference held in Nevada, Ohio, Oct. 27th and 28th, 1871.

MR. PRESIDENT:—Being chosen chairman of the delegation to represent the state and condition of the Advent Christian Church in Nevada, in this our annual conference, now in session, it places me in a state of great embarrassment. It is in such situations that I see my utter unworthiness and smallness in the sight of God. In this embarrassment, I ask the prayers of all christian people, and the church in particular, that God will assist me out of his abounding fullness to do my duty, in the fear of God, and to the entire satisfaction of those I am called to represent.

The church in Nevada has a standing membership of eighty-six, including nine additional members, added since our last conference; and not merely members because their names are enrolled upon the church book, but real, unpretentious, and unassuming workers, that the Lord has sent into his vineyard, to work to his glory and their salvation. It is composed of people that are not ashamed to be called the children of God, and shrink not from defending and spreading abroad the faith once delivered to the saints.

In matters of public worship, we have a good attendance, and order and decorum that is commendable. During the period of our pastor's absence we passed safely through a very severe trial—one of those trials that will try the sincerity of its members, and develope any hypocrisy that may exist. To accomplish this most desirable result, we not only maintained our church organization intact, but kept up, in addition to our regular Wednesday evening prayer-meeting, a prayer and conference meeting on Sunday evenings, with but one exception, which was caused by the hand of death entering the household of one of our number. In thus coming together, were renewed from time to time in our spiritual strength, our covenant with God, and spoke cheering words of comfort to each other. We are therefore ready at all times to give every man a reason for the hope that is in us. The Lord led us safely through, without the loss of one, to whom be thanks and everlasting praise.

Our Sabbath school is second to none in interest and attendance, considering the population of our town, and the prejudice existing against the faith we teach. Our average attendance for the six months, ending Sept. 30th, was seventy-six. Previous to the absence of our pastor, we had two large Bible classes, of adult persons, and eight minor classes; and I do not remember of a single instance, that there was not a good representation of each class. Our officers and teachers are men and women of good christian character and influence, and in every case selected from among the members of our own church. We feel that we are doing a good work, and the impressions that are inculcated in the minds of the young will be lasting, and be the means of eventually bringing a goodly number into the fold of Christ. The Lord is blessing us in our every effort to advance his cause.

Our worthy pastor, who has so diligently labored with and for us, deserves our highest commendation and praise for his interest in our eternal welfare, for his unceasing labor, and for the spirit of love he has shown us in our trials as a church and individuals. May the Lord reward him greater than we ever can.

As a church and individually, we return our heart-felt thanks to Bro. G. Stetson, who has been laboring with us for the past week, and we hope to express our appreciation of his valuable services in a more substantial manner. May the Lord keep, guide and direct him, that he may in years to come magnify our Savior Jesus Christ as he has in the past.

To our visiting churches, brethren and sisters, we extend the right hand of fellowship, and open our hearts and homes, and bid you a hearty welcome. To those in attendance, who have different theological views from us, we say that we entertain a warm feeling for all that love the Savior, and try to live in accordance with his divine will; and while we may differ in some minor points, yet in the main we agree that Jesus Christ was the Son of God, and that he came into the world and suffered and died the ignominious death of the cross, to save depraved and sinful humanity, and that his is the only name in heaven or among men by which we can be saved.

To those who by their works and actions do not love the Savior, we ever welcome you here. We pray that the Lord will open your hearts to his Spirit, and that it will do its office work of conviction, and convert you by the glory of his power, and that you may with us enter into his rest, and receive the crown of immortality and eternal life.

To all we say, let this our annual conference be characterized with unity of spirit and oneness of mind; not contending as the manner of some is, but above all, let us pray for more and more holiness of heart, and let our works and deliberations magnify Him who has called us, in our prayer. Amen.

This report, though hastily considered and written, is respectfully submitted.

A. J. FLAHARTY,

A. J. FLAHARTY, Chairman.

The following address of the President was delivered in the evening, which he was requested by the conference to prepare for publication:—

Address.

Dear Brn. and Srs. in Christ:—Through the merciful watch-care of our heavenly Father we have been brought safely over the billowy coast of time, to the close of our first conference year, and as it is expected that I shall address you at this time upon the wants and duties of this conference; also, upon the work it was designed to accomplish. This conference was organized for the purpose of spreading more effectually and widely the glorious truths of the Bible relative to the second coming of Jesus Christ to redeem his people from "under the curse of the law;" and restore earth to its primitive beauty and glory, and fit it up for the everlasting abode of the redeemed church of God. These, with other Bible truths, which pertain to this age and generation, is the great work which this conference was designed to accomplish. The importance of this work can only be understood and felt when we realize that our eternal well-being depends upon our having a knowledge of the approaching events coming upon the earth, which are intimately connected with the salvation and deliverance of God's people from the "bondage of corruption," into the glorious liberty of the children of God's ancient people to understand that they were living in close proximity to the time when God would send a flood of waters upon the earth, and their salvation and deliverance depended wholly upon their having a knowledge of the event, and thereby making the necessary preparation to meet it. It was necessary for Abraham and Lot to understand when God would visit the devoted city with fire from heaven, that they, his people might escape the terrible end which came upon those who knew not the time or manner of God's visitation. And we inquire, will God change his manner of dealing with his church and people? We answer nay, verily. God has always acted upon this principle, and to admit that there will be any change in this respect would bring a reproach upon the character of God. Hence if this principle be correct, we can see the importance of the work before us in warning a godless world of its certain doom. God has been speaking to us, not only in his word, but by signs and wonders in the earth, with unerring certainty that the end of all things is at hand, and the ushering in of the eternal day of glory, and the everlasting reign of the Prince of peace is about to be established; and the response of the church of God is, Oh, hasten thy coming; bring the long expected day of glory and deliverance, and dry the tears of weeping saints. Oh, Zion of the tribe of Judah, bring forth from thy bridal chamber thy royal robes, and bedeck thy weeping church with immortality. Oh, come and waken from their long slumbers thy church, who are sleeping in their dusty beds, and gather thy jewels in thy everlasting embrace. Call, thou mighty One, and thy church will answer thee.

Our work for the past year has not been in vain in the Lord. We have been reaching out into new fields, and the cry is, and has been, Come over and help us;" and although we have not been able to do all that we could desire, yet we feel that we have been blest in what we have done; and, as the fruit of our labors, some will be gathered as jewels in the day of our Master's return to earth. But we need to put forth an extra effort in publishing this last message and dispensational truth to the world. The importance of this message, which we feel commissioned of God to deliver to a godless world and a sleeping church, demands it. God demands that we work with our might while the day lasts. The future well-being of many, who have never heard the glorious proclamation of the soon coming glory, demands it and shall we withhold it from them? I think I can hear the answer saying, no, let us put forth our united efforts into the great work of sounding the alarm to those who are about to perish; and, if possible, win for our Master a glorious bride that shall be clad with white robes. Let us push out this last life-boat, and fear not to utter the thrilling cry, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him." The night is very dark, earth's final storm is at hand, and let us make one more effort to get nearer the throne. Our hope speaks, not only for ourselves, but for the unnumbered millions of God's sleeping saints, and gives the blessed and glorious assurance that they will soon break their slumbers, and with all of God's people live forever in the paradise of God. Let us open our eyes to comprehend the magnitude of our work, and the responsibility of the position we occupy. Let us be willing to make every sacrifice which the importance of the cause demands, even to the appropriating of our means to help push forward the rear car of salvation to a perishing world.

We need men of God to carry forward this glorious work. Shall we have them? My heart thrills while I anticipate your answer in the affirmative. May God give us grace and strength to carry it forward to victory and to eternal life. God's messengers must be supported, their families must of necessity have bread, and will you give it to them? Will you support them while they deliver the last warning note of mercy to a perishing race of men. The work is great, and must be done. It will admit of no delay. It is important, and shall we falter while the evening shades of earth's final gloom are fast gathering around us? Oh, let us gird ourselves anew for the final conflict. Let us combine our efforts and our means to carry forward this great and important work, and God will crown our labors with his blessing. Let us lose no time, but go to work like men of God, armed with the panoply of heaven; and we shall very soon hear the well done, and enter into the joy of our Lord, and be forever at rest. All of which, for the sake of the cause, is respectfully submitted.

E. MCCULLOCH, Pres. of Conf.

Nevada, Ohio, Oct. 28th.

The officers of last year were re-elected, and the conference adjourned to the call of the President. Sunday, 10 A. M., preaching by Eld. Jonas Wendall; subject, "time." At 2 P. M., Eld. E. McCulloch; subject, "preparation of heart necessary to meet the time of the end." In the evening, preaching by Eld. G. W. Stetson; subject, "atonement and redemption"; after which, over one hundred partook of the Lord's supper.

Gems.

— Few things are more necessary to success in life than judgment, firmness and courage. With them, a man can rarely fail; without them, he can rarely succeed.

— It is not so much what we have done in the days of our ignorance, as what we have done in the days of our light and knowledge, that should lay us in the dust before the Lord.

— The one or more "good traits" that may be found in the character of bad men, only serve, as far as their credit may go, to popularize and make respectable that which is wicked or ungodly in the same character.

If we would but check the speaker,
When he spoils a neighbor's fame,
If we would but help the erring,
Ere we utter words of blame;
If we would, how many might we Turn from paths of sin and shame!

— Swift used to say that the people of his generation had imbibed just enough religion to hate, but not nearly enough to love one another.

— True religion shows its influence in every part of our conduct; it is like the sap of a living tree, which penetrates the most distant boughs.

— There is an essential meanness in the wish to get the better of any one; the only competition worthy a wise man is with himself.

— They are rare Christians, indeed, who hold their goodness and grow in goodness where wickedness sits on the throne. To be wheat among tares, corn among chaff, pearls among cockles, and roses among thorns, is truly excellent.

— As all lights cannot make up the want of the light of the sun, so all temporal comforts cannot make up the want of one spiritual comfort.

— The nearer we live to Jesus, and the closer our walk is with him, the less inclination we have for pursuits and pleasures in which he is not the object.

— It is not until we have passed through the furnace that we are made to know how much dross was in our composition.

Toil on, and in thy toil rejoice;
For toil comes rest, for exile home;
Soon shalt thou hear the Bridegroom's voice,
The midnight peal, "Behold I come!"

— How easy it is to please and to be pleased, as well as edified, if one will take the fragrance of the rose instead of the thorns, and hold the knife by the handle and not by the edge.

— I desire to know the power of a little truth, rather, far rather, than increase the stock of truths.

— The happiness and unhappiness of a man's life depends upon the disposition with which he regards it.

PERFECT LOVE.

There are certain elements which belong to love in all the degrees in which it can exist. Paul mentions one of these essential elements when he says, Love worketh no ill to its neighbor. Here is the dividing line between love and hatred. Anything done or said to the injury of another does not spring from love. It may result from thoughtlessness, but it does not come from love. This is certain. Love is considerate.

If you see anything that you disapprove in one that you tenderly love, how careful you are of the manner in which you express your disapproval. You weigh your words. Tenderness and regret give the censure ten-fold force.

If you hear anything reported to the injury of another you love, you are very slow to credit this report. Love beareth all things. It puts a stop to all evil speaking. It taketh not up a report against its neighbor.

If we have Christian love in our hearts we shall be equally careful of our actions. It will make us thoroughly honest. We shall give to every one his due. If we owe a man money we shall pay as soon as possible. If service, we shall render it with fidelity. Love in rooting out selfishness shuts out all temptations to dishonesty. These are scriptural tests of love. Does the principle by which we are governed have these characteristics?

Novel readers will shed tears of compassion over the pathetic recital of the sufferings of some imaginary hero. This they call sympathy. Yet when they come in contact with real distress, they will not raise a hand for its relief. So, many who feel kindly under a moving sermon go away and think they are Christians, where, by their words and by their actions, they are working ill to their neighbors.

Let us see to it that our love towards each other abounds more and more.—Earnest Christian.

MERCY'S DOOR.

"Knock, and it shall be opened unto you."—MATT. 7: 7.

I stood one day at Mercy's door,
Burdened with sin,
And gently knocked, but no one said,
Come in, come in.

I then knocked loudly at the door,
Distressed with sin;
A voice with tender sweetness said,
Poor soul, come in.

I raised the latch, and trembling said,
I'm vile, O Lord!
Yet thou canst cleanse me if thou wilt
But speak the word.

He said, thy sins are all forgiven,
Thou'rt saved by grace;
I raised my thankful heart to him
In prayer and praise.

"THEY SAY——."

Well, what if they do? It may not be true. A great many false reports are circulated, and the reputation of a good man may be sadly sullied by a baseless rumor. Have you any reason to believe that what they say concerning your brother is true? If not, why should you permit your name to be included in the "they" who circulate a scandal?

They say——. Who says? Is any person responsible for the assertion? Such phrases are frequently used to conceal the point of an enemy's poniard, who thus meanly strikes one whom he dare not openly assail. Are you helping the cowardly attack? If "they" mean no body, then regard the humor as nothing.

They say——. Why do they say so? Is any good purpose secured by the circulation of the report? Will it benefit the individual to have it known? or will any interest of society be promoted by whispering it about? If not, you had better employ time and speech to some more worthy purpose.

They say——. To whom do they say it? to those who have no business with the affair? to those who cannot help it or mend it, or prevent any unpleasant results? That certainly shows a tattling, scandal-loving spirit that ought to be rebuked.

They say——. Well, do they say it to him? or are they very careful to whisper it in places where he cannot hear, and to persons who are known not to be his friends? Would they dare to say it to him, as well as about him? No one has a right to say that concerning another which he is not ready to speak in his own ear.

If it should be true, don't bruit it abroad to his injury. It will not benefit you, nor him, nor society, to publish his faults. You are as liable to be slandered or err as your brother, and as ye would that he should defend, or excuse, or forgive you, do ye even so to him.—Watchman and Reflector.

A LOVING REBUKE.—John Howe once observed two men in a violent passion. Their mutual cursings shocked his religious sensibilities. He looked at them, raised his hat, and said in a solemn voice: "I pray God to bless you both!" This prayer so impressed the quarrelsome men that they ceased their strife, and thanked Mr. Howe for his supplication.

CAUGHT.

A FABLE FOR THE LITTLE ONES.

Two little fishes were swimming one day
In a cool, pleasant river, a few miles away;
Said Scaly to Finny, "Oh, there's a nice fly!
I wish I could catch him; I'll just go and try."

"Stop! stop!" replied Finny, "there's danger, I fear,
"I see a long line, and a man watching there;
Don't venture, dear Scaly; be guided by me,
Or else you'll be caught as sure as can be."

But Scaly was heedless; the fly looked so nice,
That soon he forgot Finny's kindly advice;
He snatched at the fly, when, as quickly as thought,
Came a jerk! and, oh, dear! little Scaly was caught!

Now wasn't he foolish? And yet, how I wish
Little children were never like that little fish;
But when sin entices, how often we see
That they yield to temptation as quickly as he!

But they who thus foolishly choose what is wrong,
Are sure to repent of their choice before long;
For like little Scaly they find, though too late,
That a sharp hook is hid in the nice looking bait.

OUR FATHER.

During a cold day last winter, a good woman searching out the children of want, tried to open a door in the third story of a wretched house, when she heard a voice say, "Pull the string up high!" She looked up and saw a string, which, on being pulled, lifted a latch; and she opened the door upon two, little, half-naked children, all alone. Very cold and pitiful they looked.

"Do you take care of yourselves, little ones?" asked the good woman.

"God takes care of us," said the oldest.

"And you are not very cold? No fire on a day like this?"

"Oh! when we are very cold, we creep under the quilt, and I put my arms round Tommy, and Tommy puts his round me, we say, 'Now I lay me;' then we get warm," said the little girl.

"And what have you to eat, pray?"

"When granny comes home she fetches us something. Granny says God has got enough. Granny calls us God's sparrows; and we say 'Our father' and 'daily bread' every day. God is our father."

Tears came in the good woman's eyes. She had a mistrusting spirit herself; but these two little "sparrows," perched in that cold upper chamber, taught her a lesson of faith and trust she will never forget.—Christian Press.

HONOR AND GENEROSITY.

A man was once carrying along a basket of peaches, covered with cloth, and slung over his shoulder, making a pretty heavy load. By some means the cover became loosened, and quite a number of the tempting-looking peaches rolled down upon the sidewalk, and the man went on without perceiving it.

A poorly-dressed boy, about ten years old, who was walking a little distance behind, observed them, and immediately picked them up. But he did not put them in his pocket and run away, as too many boys would have done.

"Here! here!" he shouted to the man, who stopped, and the honest little fellow restored him his property.

The man rewarded him with one of the finest peaches, and went on his way. But this is not all. Just then the lad met two of his companions, and immediately divided his peach with them.

Was not that a noble hearted little fellow? Who could but love him, ragged and dirty as he was? The part of the peach he had for his portion was sweetened by kindness, by honesty and generosity, and the fruit was more luscious than the most costly could have been, if obtained dishonestly.

"TAKE THE TEMPERANCE PLEDGE," said a reformed drunkard. "I began to drink when I was six years old, by eating the sugar out of the tumbler after my father had taken his drams." Said another, "I was carried home drunk from Milk street, at nine years of age, on one Fourth of July." Both of these were Boston boys, who had excellent opportunities of becoming good men; but strong drink blasted their hopes. Another said to me, "Nearly all drunkards learned to drink when they were boys."

Think of this, children, and sign the temperance pledge at once. Ask the superintendent of your Sabbath school to introduce the pledge, that the scholars may sign it. Many Sabbath schools are doing this; and all the schools in the land ought to do it.—The Nation.

BOYS, rely upon yourselves. Don't lean upon your fathers, or your uncles, or your friends. If you have marked out an honorable path in life, take up your staff and go ahead and not wait for anybody to give you a push. Don't wait for help. The best and richest men in this country never had rich fathers to help them. They have gained their positions by self-reliance, perseverance, and high-toned noble lives.—Churchman.

Hygiene.

"This is for your Health."

DRESS AND HEALTH.—The tight waists, the low necks to dresses, and the high-heeled shoes, are most flagrant abuses, and ought not to be longer tolerated. We shall not quarrel with the little jaunty hats of the ladies, for of all parts of the body the head needs the least clothing.

But to pass to the other extremity, we have to say that the detestable high heels to boots and shoes, running as they do almost to a point, are spoiling the gait and ruining the ankle joints of children and misses. We are careful to order our shoemakers to remove such heels from shoes before permitting them to be brought into our dwelling. Heels of moderate height and good breadth are of great service in elevating the feet, so as to avoid direct contact with moist earth, and they also give support and add firmness to the step. Why should fashion push good devices to absurd extremes? We must aid in dethroning the tyrant when her decrees lead to the physical or moral injury of the race.

The present fashion of leaving the neck and the upper part of the chest bare is fraught with evil consequences. It would be less objectionable in countries uniformly warm; but that our daughters, here in the frigid and changeable climate, should constantly expose to the chilling winds a vital part of the body, is one of the evils of fashion which should be discountenanced by every mother, and father, and brother.—Journal of Chemistry.

ARTIFICIAL LIGHT.—Much injury is done to the eye by the improper use of lamp or gas light. Many persons suppose that a bright light, in reading, is injurious to the eye, and therefore attempt to read with a low, unsteady light. This is wrong. Let the light be bright and steady—the brighter the better, but let it be so placed that it may not shine directly into the face, but over the shoulder. No harm is done in illuminating the book well—the error is in allowing the light to fall directly in the face. Gas light is better than lamp light, if it is steady and brilliant. The student's lamp is the best kerosene lamp for reading purposes. Remember to sit with your back to the light; then let it burn brightly and illuminate your back well.

HYGIENE IN DIPHTHERIA.—Secure cleanliness. To diminish the media of infection, the body and bed-clothing should be changed daily. The sick room should be bare of unnecessary furniture, and especially of drapery, and, if possible, have an open fire-place, and a fire burning on the hearth or in the grate, if the weather is too cool to have the doors and windows thrown constantly open. There is not the least danger of "catching cold" in bed, if the patient is well clothed. Segregation of the sick is absolutely indispensable, and the bed should be so situated that the fresh air from out of doors may blow over it and thoroughly dilute the foul air of the room.—Dr. Reeves.

ANIMAL FOOD.—Many of the ancients never ate animal food. Plutarch, a learned Grecian, abstained from it altogether. He lived to be nearly eighty years old, and was a hard worker. He is said to have written three hundred philosophical works. One hundred and twenty-five of them are extant. This celebrated man once wrote: "You ask me for what reason Pythagoras abstained from eating the flesh of brutes; for my part, I am astonished to think what appetite first induced man to taste of a dead carcass; or what motive could suggest the notion of nourishing himself with the flesh of dead animals." People could live much cheaper if they were to adopt Plutarch's views.

PLEASANT DREAMS.—Let parents make every possible effort to have their children go to sleep in a pleasant humor. Never scold or give lectures, or in any way wound a child's feelings as it goes to bed. Let all banish business and every worldly care at bed-time, and let sleep come to a mind at peace with God and all the world.

The "Crisis" is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

THE PLAIN OF BETHLEHEM.

Listen! across the starlit plain,
Where the flocks sleeping lie,
Comes floating, soft and sweet, a strain
Of heavenly melody.

Listen! with wonder and with fear
The startled shepherds gaze,
And, lo! bright angels hovering near,
Their song of gladness raise.

Listen! "All glory be to God,
His mission we fulfill;
Peace in the earth be spread abroad—
Peace, and to men good-will."

Listen! how sweet the accents are!
How lingeringly they cease!
To God be thanks that they declare
Christ comes, the Prince of peace.

THE PENALTY OF GOD'S LAW.
No. 3.

H. H. HALL.

Having shown the true nature of the death penalty, we will quote a few passages under this head, to show that the whole tenor, and therefore the true teaching of the Bible is life and death, and not happiness and misery. Deut. 30 : 15, 19,—"See, I have set before thee this day life and good, death and evil. I call heaven and earth to record this day against you, that I have set before you life and death, blessing and cursing; therefore choose life, that thou and thy seed may live." Ezek. 18 : 20, 21, 23, 26, 27, 31, 32,—"The soul [nephesh, the soul word, and though the person is meant, yet not to the exclusion of the soul] that sinneth it shall die. . . . But if the wicked will turn from all his sins that he hath committed, and keep all my statutes, and do that which is lawful and right, he shall surely live, he shall not die" [the second death.] "Have I any pleasure at all that the wicked should die? saith the Lord God; and not that he should return from his ways and live? . . . When a righteous man turneth away from his righteousness, and committeth iniquity, and dieth [a temporal or natural death] in them; for his iniquity that he hath done shall he die [the second death.] Again, when the wicked man turneth away from his wickedness, . . . and doeth that which is lawful and right, he shall save his soul alive" [save his immortal soul alive?] "Cast away from you all your transgressions, . . . and make you a new heart and a new spirit; for why will ye DIE, O house of Israel? For I have no pleasure in the death [misery?] of him that dieth, saith the Lord God; wherefore turn yourselves, and live ye." But Christ said to this same wicked nation, "Ye will not come to me that ye may have life." (Jno. 5 : 40.) Again, "Verily, verily I say unto you, if a man keep my sayings, he shall not see [the second] death" (8 : 51.) "I am the living bread which came down from heaven; if any man eat of this bread, he shall live forever [be happy forever, or have eternal life]; and the bread that I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world."

It is worthy of note that the Greek word zoee, rendered life, is found one hundred and thirty-two times in the New Testament, and is the exact opposite in meaning of thanatos, rendered death, which is used one hundred and seventeen times. The definition of zoee is "life, i. e., animated existence, state of being alive." It has been forced by divines to mean happiness, just as death has to mean life in misery, in order to sustain their cherished theory. But it cannot be shown that it ever means happiness, or that it is used in a figurative sense in a single instance in the New Testament. So that the phrase, eternal life (zoeen aionion), employed by Christ and the apostles forty times, means literally endless conscious existence—nothing more, nothing less. Paul—who says he "shunned not to declare the whole counsel of God," and yet never spoke of hell-torments—says (Rom. 1 : 32); "Who knowing the judgment of God, that they which commit such things are worthy of death." 6 : 22, 23,—"But now being made free from sin, and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life. For the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord." 8 : 6,—"For to be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace" [happiness and peace?] James says (5 : 20), "Let him know that he which converteth a sinner from the error of his ways, shall save a soul (psukee) from death, and hide a multitude of sins." What, save an immortal soul from DEATH? 1 : 15,—"And sin when it is finished bringeth forth death." Rev. 2 : 11,—"He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death." 20 : 6,—"Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power." "But the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the SECOND DEATH."

PERISH. Webster says, "to die; to lose life in any manner; to be destroyed; to come to nothing." The tenth definition, which has been manufactured to hand by theologians, is, "to be lost eternally; to be sentenced to endless misery"; and so Webster puts it down as being by them so used. But from the above definitions who has any authority to make perish mean "endless misery," thus taking the word from its primary sense, and making it mean exactly the opposite, i. e., life instead of death? If divines have a right to say, as they do, that perish means to live; death means life; destruction means preservation; to be burned up means always burning, then any person has equal right to put darkness for light; hate for love; sorrow for joy; lost for saved; death for life. But making such a radical change in the meaning of words, where have we any protection to language, to ideas, to doctrines? where any protection to the revelation of God? Who can tell what God means in his holy word, if words may mean exactly the contrary to the definitions given by all lexicographers? Who is responsible for the false doctrine of universal salvation, and all the other false isms of the day, if not the learned theologians who have manufactured these false definitions, and have thus given to the world a false system of interpretation, and therewith a license for men to pervert the holy Scriptures to their own destruction? Is it not time for our divines and clergymen generally to lay aside their creeds, and examine, or re-examine, as the case may be, in the light of the Scriptures, this important subject? We know they do not intend to pervert God's holy word; but they do nevertheless while they advocate the doctrines of the immortality of the soul, the conscious state of the dead, and the endless misery of the wicked.

But are the wicked to perish, to be destroyed, to come to nothing? Ps. 49 : 12,—"Nevertheless man being in honor abideth not; he is like the beasts that perish." When beasts perish we all know they are dead; so when men perish they are dead, and not alive; for no being can be dead and alive at the same time. But will any one tell us why the word perish, when applied to man or to the wicked, does not mean precisely the same as when applied to beasts? The only reason that can be given is, that the theology of the day requires a different meaning. Job 20 : 5, 7,—"The triumphing of the wicked is short; . . . he shall perish forever like his own dung." 6 : 18,—"They go to nothing and perish." Ps. 37 : 18, 20,—"The Lord knoweth the days of the upright; and their inheritance shall be forever. But the wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs; they shall consume, into smoke shall they consume away." "For such as be blessed of him shall inherit the earth; and they that be cursed of him shall be cut off." If the Jewish sacrifices to which the Psalmist refers were not always burning, but were consumed, burned up, then has he most unequivocally here taught that "the enemies of the Lord" shall thus be consumed, thus burnt up. That the final doom of the wicked is here announced, is certain from the fact that the everlasting inheritance of the saints—which which will be the new earth—is promised to them, while the wicked are to be cut off and "go to nothing and perish." If they are to go to nothing, can any one tell us what will be left of them? Isa. 41 : 11, 12,—"Behold, all they that were incensed against thee shall be ashamed and confounded; they shall be as nothing; and they that strive with thee shall perish. Thou shalt seek them, and shalt not find them, even them that contended with thee; they that war against thee shall be as nothing, and as a thing of nought." Luke 13 : 3, 5,—"But except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish." Perish like whom? Like those upon whom the tower of Siloam fell and slew them, says Christ. These men perished, lost their lives, were killed, were dead. "But, except ye repent, ye shall all likewise PERISH."

We will now read this according to the popular theology of the day: But, except ye repent, ye shall all LIKEWISE have eternal LIFE in torment! How strange that great and good men will adopt theories that make even the illustrations and declarations of Christ absurd and untrue, as in the above comparison. Christ says (Jno. 3 : 16,—"For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." 10 : 28,—"And I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish." How plain from these words that the saints only are to have eternal life, while the wicked are to perish.

Paul says (Rom. 2 : 12), "For as many as have sinned without law, shall also perish without law." Acts 13 : 41,—"Behold ye despisers, and wonder, and perish." 2 Cor. 2 : 15, 16,—"For we are unto God a sweet savor of Christ, in them that are saved and in them that perish; to the one we are the savor of death unto death; and to the other the savor of life unto life." According to "orthodoxy" Paul was a savor of life in both cases. If it were true, why did he not say to the one, we are the savor of torment unto torment; and to the other, the savor of happiness unto happiness? But, according to Paul in this passage, to perish is to suffer death. But Peter (2, 2 : 12) speaks, if possible, with still greater emphasis: "But these, as natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed, speak evil of the things that they understand not, and shall UTTERLY PERISH in their own corruption." The apostle says that beasts are made to be taken and destroyed. God says he will destroy the wicked, that they "shall be destroyed forever." Now can any person honestly say that the term destroyed, as applied to the wicked, does not mean precisely the same as when applied to the beasts? If destruction means endless misery because happiness is destroyed, or universal salvation because sin is destroyed, then who knows but that the dumb brutes may suffer endless misery; or that they may be subjects of universal salvation!

BIBLE CLASS.—No. 2.

GEO. THOMSON.

LESSON—John 3 : 3–8,—"Jesus answered and said unto him, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God. Nicodemus saith unto him, How can a man be born when he is old? Can he enter the second time into his mother's womb and be born? Jesus answered, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God. That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit. Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again. The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth; so is every one that is born of the Spirit."

Q. What is the subject of this dialogue?

A. The new birth.

Q. Is it concerning a new birth, or the new birth?

A. Evidently the new birth, for to be born again is but one repetition; whereas, if it were more, it would be—born again and again.

Q. What is the nature of this birth?

A. It is a spiritual birth.

Q. In what sense is it a spiritual birth?

A. Because it is brought about, or caused by the Spirit of God.

Q. Is there any other sense?

A. Yes; it is a birth into a spiritual nature; "that which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." ver. 6.

Q. What will be the result of this new birth?

A. An introduction of its subject into the kingdom of God.

Q. Is it a fair inference that all who are thus born again will necessarily enter the kingdom of God?

A. I conclude from the form and face of the negative statement that the reverse is absolute.

Q. Will this idea aid us in arriving at the truth in further investigating this subject?

A. I think so, materially.

Q. What constitutes this new birth?

A. According to the generally received opinion, it is conversion.

Q. Is that opinion correct?

A. Certainly not.

Q. Are you prepared to prove it incorrect? if so, how?

A. Yes, by common sense and Scripture. 1st, by common sense reasoning. Many have been converted to christianity, who have afterward backslidden and apostatized from the faith of the gospel; and some such have committed things which will forever exclude them from the kingdom of God, which could not be true had they been born again. Again, reasoning from analogy, on the figure employed, a birth. A person born of the flesh into this world may live a longer or shorter period, and then die; but they never can go BACK to the condition in which they were prior to birth. In the case of conversion this analogy utterly fails. The well-known proverb of the dog returned to his vomit again, and the sow to her wallowing in the mire, is illustrative.

Q. That seems to be a strong point in reasoning; what is your Scripture proof?

A. I think the following conclusive:—"Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him, let him know that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins." James 5 : 19–20.

Q. Don't you believe in the witness of the Spirit in conversion?

A. I believe that the witness of the Spirit is distinct from conversion, and, as a result of faith, follows conversion.

Q. Then a denial of conversion being the new birth is not, you think, a denial of the operation of the Holy Spirit on the heart?

A. Not by any means.

Q. But what do you do with all those passages in John's Epistle (1 John 2 : 29; 4 : 7; 3 : 9; 5 : 1, 4, 18), where the converted person is represented as being "born of God"?

A. The word "born" in all those passages is evidently a mis-translation, and should have been rendered "begotten," as appears from 1 John 5 : 1, 18, where the same word is rendered both "born" and "begotten"; and the American Bible Union translation render these passages invariably begotten; the word rendered "born" in our lesson is a different word.

Q. How are we the children of God now, if not by birth?

A. "For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus." Gal. 3 : 26.

Q. In what sense does the Spirit operate on the believer, if it does not produce the new birth in conversion?

A. But ye have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father. The Spirit itself beareth witness with our Spirit, that we are the children of God." Rom. 8 : 15–16.

Q. What is the new birth of our lesson?

A. That spoken of by Isaiah (66 : 8), when a "nation shall be born at once."

Q. When will that take place?

A. At the resurrection of the just.

Q. Where is your authority for placing it there?

A. The resurrection of Christ is called a birth, and he is called the first-fruit.

Q. Where is his resurrection called a birth?

A. "And he is the head of the body, the church, who is the beginning, the first born from the dead, that in all things he might have the pre-eminence." Col. 1 : 18. If he is the first one born from the dead, it follows that others will be born from the dead, which will be the new birth.

Q. Have you any other Scripture evidence on the point?

A. "But they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage; neither can they die any more, for they are equal unto the angels, and are the children of God, being the CHILDREN OF THE RESURRECTION." Luke 20 : 35, 36.

Q. Can you explain that in detail?

A. In this life, christians are all "the children of God, "by faith in Christ Jesus," having "received the Spirit of adoption," and are thus "begotten." In the future life, they will be the children of God absolutely, by a resurrection from the dead, or its equivalent,—"changed," "in the twinkling of an eye"; or a birth into a new state of existence and a new nature. We now possess a human nature; the promise is that we shall be "partakers of the divine nature."

Q. You said that this "new birth" was produced by the Spirit of God; is this true of the resurrection?

A. "But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken (make alive) your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." Rom. 8 : 11.

Q. How do you explain the sixth verse—"That which is born of the Spirit is spirit"?

A. It refers to a new physical nature, distinct from and to succeed the fleshly nature.

Q. Will not that apply to the converted man?

A. No; the converted man still remains a flesh-and-blood man; and Paul says such "cannot inherit the kingdom of God" (1 Cor. 15 : 50); but the man that is "born again" shall enter the kingdom.

Q. How do you explain this in connection with the resurrection?

A. "It is sown [in death] a natural body ["that which is born of the flesh is flesh"]; it is raised [in the resurrection] a spiritual body" ["that which is born of the Spirit is spirit"]. 1 Cor. 15 : 44.

Q. How do you prove that those two states, or natures, do not exist cotemporaneously?

A. "Howbeit that was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural, and AFTERWARD that which is spiritual." 1 Cor. 15 : 46.

Q. What does the Savior mean by being "born of water"?

A. As the water-birth is a type of the Spirit-birth, it can apply only to baptism.

Q. Have you any Scripture proof?

A. "Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ, were baptized into his death; . . . For if we have been planted together in the LIKENESS of his death, we shall be also in the LIKENESS of his resurrection." Rom. 6 : 3, 5. "Buried with him in baptism, WHEREIN ALSO [in the same ordinance typically] ye are risen with him." Col. 2 : 12.

Q. What does the Savior mean by his illustration of the wind?

A. The Savior said, in applying the illustration—"So IS [not the modus operandi of the new birth, but] every one that is born of the Spirit. The Savior after his resurrection could come and go as the wind; so shall all who are born into the immortal state.

LOVE TO JESUS.

J. W. THOMAS.

"Lovest thou me?"—JOHN 21 : 17.

Do we really love Christ? This is an important question. Without true love to Jesus, we have no part nor lot in the matter of salvation. Our profession may reach high as heaven, and our fame be broad as the universe; yet in the sight of God we may be "wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked." Many will be deceived in the day of judgment. The foolish virgins will knock when the door is shut, saying, "Lord, Lord, open unto us," but it will be too late. They did not love Jesus in sincerity, consequently they are forever excluded from the paradise of God. What an awful day that will be, when multitudes who have made a profession of religion, and done many wonderful works in the name of Jesus, shall hear from the lips of the righteous Judge the solemn words, "I never knew you; depart from me, ye that work iniquity."

There is danger of being deceived. If we can tell anything by the fruit which many bring forth, then we may come to the conclusion that much of the religion in the present day is a sham, and a falsehood. It is useless for persons to say that they love Christ, while those marks which distinguish love to him are wanting. There are certain outward tokens by which we may know that true love exists in the heart. God has not left us in darkness on this point. It is our privilege to know whether we are saints or sinners. The religion of Christ is a positive, decided, know-so religion. Many think we must wait till the judgment before we can know whether we belong to the Lord or the devil; hence they live along from year to year in a kind of dreamy, undecided, half-hearted, dissatisfied state. One "thinks" he is the Lord's, another "hopes he has a hope," and another "guesses" he is a christian, and so they live on dishonoring God, and making their own lives and those about them miserable. It is evident to my mind that if we do not know that we are the Lord's now, we shall know then that we are not his. But how can we decide that we really love Jesus? What are the evidences that his love is shed abroad in our hearts?

1. If we love him, we delight to think of him. Our thoughts unavoidably follow the object of our affections; hence if Jesus is the supreme object of our regard, then he is much in our thoughts. Our meditation of him will be sweet,

2. If we love him we shall talk much about him. Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh. We shall preach Jesus everywhere, if his love constrains us. His life, sufferings, death and resurrection, salvation through him, and his coming again, will be the theme of our conversation. "We talk of what we love.

3. If we love him, then we converse much with him. Persons who love each other in this world delight in communing together. We tell Jesus everything if we love him. We love secret prayer. The Bible is precious because it tells of the one we love.

4. If we love him, it is a pleasure to obey him. His service is not irksome, but delightful. The wife who loves her husband delights to please him. Says Jesus, "If ye love me, keep my commandments."

5. If we love him, then we love his friends. "Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you." This is a positive evidence that we have passed from death unto life, if we "love the brethren."

6. If we love him, we long to see him, and enjoy his personal presence. Separation is grief; absence, torture. How can any one love Jesus and not want to see him? The wife who loves her husband longs to have him return. His presence is her delight and joy.

Have we these marks of love? There are many more we might mention, but have we these? Do we love the appearing of Jesus? Can we say with Peter, "Lord, thou knowest all things; thou knowest that I love thee"?

REST THEE.

M. I. HERRON.

Rest thee, dear one, rest!
Thou wast weary here;
Rest thee, till the blest
Morn of life appear.

Sleep on, dear one, sleep!
Sweet thy slumbers be;
Guardian angels keep
Faithful watch o'er thee.

Glorious soon thou'lt be,
Rising from the tomb—
Bright as seraphs be,
Fair as Eden's bloom.

Rest thee, dear one, rest!
Thou wast weary here;
Rest thee till the blest
Morn of life appear.

OUR SONSHIP.

F. BURR.

Saints are to be sons and daughters of the Lord. This is the relationship between God and his people. We are not to be servants merely, but sons and daughters, having a family relationship to God. And as there is neither male nor female, but all are one in Christ Jesus, so the term sons in the Scripture expresses the relationship of all, both male and female.

This relationship is in character here, and not in physical constitution. Our bodies are to be changed to this condition at the coming of Jesus in glory. The present relationship of character is what most concerns us just now, for much as the last great change to immortality is desirable, it can only be obtained by accountable beings on the condition of possessing the character of sons while in this mortal state.

The relationship is not one of the first creation, in which we "all have one Father," as the Universalist will often quote. It is something nearer and dearer, and which draws more directly upon the fountain of divine love, and insures eternal salvation to all who possess it. The relationship of a creature because he is the created of the Father can be nothing higher than that of a servant. But to be begotten of God as his sons is to become the possessor of the character and spirit of divinity, and that is the ultimatum of all christianity.

Adam was not thus created, but he might easily have become thus had he cultivated goodness, instead of permitting the seeds of evil to take root in his disposition. The second Adam was actually thus begotten, and the resurrection birth completed for him the fullness of the sonship. I am strongly of the opinion that the occurrences in Eden were not unexpected by the divine mind, and that the remedy for the contingency was prepared, and calculations made beforehand. The sonship, all that he had or could have, be it more or less, was entirely forfeited by Adam. The second Adam comes to restore the power of sonship. Those saved must be "born again," and "born of the Spirit."

By nature men are not in character the children of God. Adam lost that position for his race. A new principle must be infused. It is the Spirit of God. I am writing now of accountable beings. Groaning creation may be delivered from the curse; infants may be redeemed as the innocent offspring of Adam; but it is reserved for those who overcome to sit with Jesus on his throne in glory. Delivered, redeemed, glorified. High, higher, highest. All made immortal, but differing in position as "one star differeth from another star in glory." All the result of the working of the self-same Spirit, dividing to each severally as he will.

We can become sons of God only by having the divine principle and power in us, changing our affections, and making us godlike. Knowledge of itself does not save, else Satan would be found a child of God. It is Christ that saves. Persons may live moral lives, and talk the truth, and contend for the truth, and if need be die for the truth, and be lost at last. And why? Because they lack Christ within.

Dear reader, you cannot be saved as a servant. You must be a son. You must have the relationship that comes from feeling in your affections the power of God. Men may talk about being baptized into Christ, and putting on Christ, and walking in Christ, but this is outward. It is worthless unless Christ is within. "This ought men to do, and not to leave the other undone." Christ must dwell in us or in vain we work. Without this inward power, the professed saint of God is but a whited sepulchre.

Come, then, you who are idly dreaming of salvation, because you serve God, be no longer a hireling. Be adopted into the family. Become a son, and you shall be free. Else you are no heir of God, and will lose the inheritance at last.

BE TRUE TO YOUR CONVICTIONS.

A man may hold erroneous views on many points, and yet be a christian. He may love God with all his heart, and yet be defective in knowledge and in judgment. But it is required of him that he be honest. The lowest state of saving grace, implies a readiness to know God's will, and a fixed determination to do it at all hazards. He who would be a christian in reality, as well as in name, must follow Jesus, whatever of sacrifice or suffering may be involved. When the path of duty is ascertained, the considerations of worldly policy must not be allowed the slightest influence in determining our conduct. He that will save his life shall lose it. The first step towards heaven has not been taken by him who counts his life dearer than the favor of God. We are not now speaking merely of those who have become accustomed, by years of obedience, to follow the Lord fully, but we say of those who are pardoned—who stand in the justifying grace of God, that they must be true to their convictions. If they fail here they fall into condemnation. The Scriptures are clear and explicit upon this point. If we say we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie and do not the truth. But if we walk in the light as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ, his Son cleanseth us from all sin. —1 Jno. 1 : 6, 7. If we live in the Spirit let us also walk in the Spirit.—Gal. 5. : 25. For if ye live after the flesh ye shall die, but if ye, through the Spirit, do mortify the deeds of the body ye shall live. For as many as are led by the Spirit of God they are the sons of God.—Rom. 8 : 13, 14.

There is no mistaking the meaning of these passages. They teach us that we cannot trifle with our convictions—much less go contrary to them and stand clear with God. To walk in the light, is to obey our inward, abiding impression of God's truth as applied to our own course of conduct. If we fail to do this, it is folly to imagine that we enjoy the favor of God. Our own hearts condemn us; and God is greater in rectitude than our hearts.

These truths are of general applications. There is need for their being called into exercise in our every day life. We will notice a few particulars.

1. We must follow our convictions with regard to our social and religious associations. God's people are not of the world. Their aims, their motives, their spirit is different from those who are living only for the present. Their enjoyments are opposite in their nature. No one ever made a beginning in the divine life who had not clear convictions upon this point. But he sees many professors of godliness going into the world for happiness or profit. He is told that he is over-scrupulous. He listens to the suggestions and becomes entangled in the yoke of bondage.

Even our religious associations must be guarded with jealousy. We cannot choose our church, any more than our social relations, upon the principle of worldly wisdom. When we put on the Lord Jesus Christ, we must make no provision for the flesh to fulfill the lusts thereof.—Rom. 13. 14. "Whosoever," says Dr. Orlin, "chooses his creed or his church, with any, the slightest, reference to the honor, or the ease, or the emolument it may give or withhold, does, by such an admission, utterly vitiate all his claim to have any part or lot in the matter of saving piety. I do not speak of those who knowingly and deliberately make these their chief ground of preference; but I affirm that it is wholly antichristian, and an insult to the crucified Savior to yield any, the smallest place to worldly motives in choosing the christian position which we will occupy. Let Christ and conscience decide in this matter. The gospel will admit of no compromise here. This is its point of honor, which it cannot and will not yield by a single iota." He who belongs to a church because it is rich, or powerful, or because it affords him opportunities for worldly preferment, shows that he is not governed by the spirit of Christ; however much, at times, he may have felt its influence.

When Judson was on his way, as a missionary to India, he became convinced that his views on the subject of baptism were wrong. His convictions may or may not have been Scriptural. This is a point we are not called on to decide. It may be that God allowed him to cherish them, to test his sincerity, and to stir up another denomination that had been too indifferent on the subject of missions, to put forth strenuous efforts for the evangelization of the heathen world. Be that as it may, his convictions had to him the force of truth. To follow them implied the breaking up of his life-long associations, and the throwing of himself, in a heathen land, for support, upon strangers who had hitherto manifested little interest in the work to which he had consecrated his life. But he made the venture and never wanted for a friend.

2. We must follow our convictions in the use of our influence. All have one talent. It were far better to bury this talent than to use it for the support of principles which we are persuaded are wrong. Yet simply to bury our talent, is to expose ourselves to being cast into outer darkness. How, then, can any dream of safety when they are giving their influence to practices opposed to the gospel of Christ?

Here is a man who sees that it is wrong to build costly church edifices from which the poor are excluded. He does not believe that the gospel gives its sanction to the custom of selling the right to worship God in his temples, any more than it does to gambling. He says so. Yet he gives a thousand dollars for the church built to gratify pride; and a hundred dollars for a plain church, with free seats, where the poor may have the gospel preached to them. His convictions are in one direction—his influence in the opposite. Where is there one passage of Scripture that encourages such a man to hope for eternal salvation?

3. We must follow our convictions in regard to our personal experience. There is no stopping place in the road to heaven. We rest by running. Our convictions for grace must be carried out, or they will be lost. "Walk while ye have the light, lest darkness come upon you." Jno. 12 : 35. The penitent, convicted of the need of pardon, if he fails to seek the Lord with all his heart, loses his tenderness and contrition. The justified soul, who sees it to be his duty to obtain full salvation, but fails to go on to the enjoyment of perfect love, loses his justification, and either becomes an open sinner, or a dead formalist. The sanctified one who is divinely called to go forward in his experience, but who refuses to yield to the call, settles down into a state of sentimental piety, loses his power, or openly departs from God.

Be true then to your convictions. Have your heart opened to the light of the Holy Spirit. Go where God leads. Obstacles will vanish as they are approached in strong confidence. The yielding waves will bear you as you step out upon them at the call of Jesus. . . "When wisdom entereth into thine heart, and knowledge is pleasant unto thy soul, discretion shall preserve thee, understanding shall keep thee."—Earnest Christian.

SICKLY CHARITY.

B. F. NEWTON.

"Art thou faithful? then oppose
Sin and wrong with all thy might;
Care not how the tempest blows,
Only care to do the right."

Sickly charity! endorse it? will the Lord? does he? Is it not a stench and a hissing? "Holiness to the Lord," the precious, sweet, glorious doctrine of the Bible, where is it? O, where? Trailed in the dust? The psalmist said, "I have seen the end of all perfection." Ps. 119 : 90. Be popular in the world, and still be holy? Love the praise of men more than the praise of God, and still be holy? Be lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God, and still be holy? Go to the hop, the dance, the frolic, the horse race, the circus, attend festivals, parties of pleasure, scenes of mirthfulness and levity; raise money for church debts by lotteries and gambling; make the house of God a house of merchandise, a den of thieves, and still be holy? What now? Profess to walk in newness of life, enjoy the smiles of heavenly grace? "Know ye not, friends, the friendship of the world is enmity with God?" "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin."

"Will ye play, then, will ye dally,
With your music and your wine?
Up! it is Jehovah's rally!
God's own arm hath need of thine."

Again, both ministers and people, not a few, connect themselves, in the face and eyes of God's holy precepts, with odd fellow's and free mason's secret abominations; enter into positive agreement "with death and hell" (Isa. 28 : 15), and yet profess publicly to be holy, entirely sanctified! Then what follows? Sins of course are winked at, heaven-daring, in the pulpit and out of it; sins of the world, the flesh, and the devil. Is this all? Write novels, sell novels, puff novels, read novels, the light, frothy readings of the day, the very scum of the pit; prophecy smooth things, heal slightly, confer with flesh and blood. What now? Profess holiness, perfect love, entire sanctification, to love every body—nothing short? This professing the higher christian life, to love every body, is the order of the day—popular, customary. It requires very little, if any, self-denying or cross-bearing. One can profess love, perfect love, the love that "loves everybody," and the Lord with all his "heart, soul, and strength," and still love the world; be proud and covetous, follow worldly fashions, adorn the exterior with artificials, "gold, pearls, and costly array"; read novels, romances, silly love-tales, talk nonsense, attend pleasure-parties, fancy fairs, sit down, eat, drink, make merry, and rise up to play, sip the wine-cup and brandy-bottle, chew and smoke tobacco, wink at popular sins in the pulpit and out of it, advocate the doctrine of expediency and compromise, carry religion in one hand, the world, sin and Satan in the other. "Believe and love," is the motto.

How many parents love their children in the same way! Eli and David (like very many fathers and mothers at the present day) suffered their children to grow up in idleness, in all manner of sin and folly; to live as they pleased; to be lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God. Instead of love, God calls this hatred. "He that spareth the rod, hateth his son; but he that loveth him chasteneth him betimes." Prov. 13 : 14. "Be not deceived. God is not mocked." Holiness is popular, it walks in silver slippers. The dearest, sweetest, the most exalted, heavenly, gospel truths, are trailed in the dust. Exaggerate? the half is not told. We speak that we do know, testify that we see.

If our leaders are corrupt, blind leaders of the blind, what can we expect of the people? Is it a marvel the whole world is tottering on the very brink of dark damnation?

"'Tis when the cross is preached, and only then,
That from the pulpit a mysterious power
Goes forth to renovate the moral man.
He that without it wields
The sacred sword, at best in mock display,
A useless weapon flourishes in its sheath;
None feel its edge—none fear it."

— He that is desperately inclined to his own will, is ever most near to the wrath of God.

The World's Crisis
AND
SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

THOSE who send articles for the Crisis, should direct them to MILES GRANT, Boston, and not to the Business Agent.

MISSION WORK.

As the time has arrived to commence missionary labors in the south and west, we hope those who feel an interest in having the people prepared to meet our soon-coming Savior will now give the missionaries the benefit of their material aid, as well as a warm place in their prayers and sympathies. Bro. Sheldon will go forth into the southern field, among strangers, to meet much prejudice and opposition; and where he cannot look for much assistance. We also purpose to enter new fields in California, where we may expect to have hard-fought battles; but hope for glorious victories. Dear Bro. in Christ, now is the time the missionaries need our special help. Do not let them fail in their efforts for the lack of necessary means to obtain suitable places to hold their meetings. This is the time to make a sacrifice to the Lord for the good of our fellow men. We look for a noble response, worthy of the importance of the glorious cause of our blessed Savior. The hour has come to make a grand rally against the powers of darkness. Let all help in some way, if possible. The day of judgment is at hand. Eternal life is soon to be gained, or lost for ever. Help! help! while the watchmen go forth to sound the alarm.

NEW YEAR'S GIFTS.—Would it not be well for those who are able, to make a New Year's gift of the Crisis to some friend, or some poor saint, who has not had it to read? This has been done in other years with very happy results. Look around and see if you can not think of some one or more, to whom you may send "our paper" for the coming year, and thus cheer the widow's heart, and add a special comfort to her lonely dwelling. Is there not some friend, who has not seen the light on the blessed hope, who may be led into it by reading the Crisis? Try it, and look to the Lord for a blessing. We are now so near the end of this dispensation, every friend of Jesus should do all in his power to persuade men to be ready for the coming of the Son of man.

LIGHT SPREADING.

The lovers of truth have great reason to rejoice over the rapid spread of light upon the glorious truths of the Bible, that have been so long obscured by the traditions of men. The anathemas of the Pope no longer cause those to tremble who are free in Christ. The thunders of the Vatican are now as harmless as the dying roar of the distant retreating storm, after the return of the clear sky and the glowing sunshine. And shall the lovers of Jesus and his word, of his coming and his glorious kingdom, cower down and be discouraged at the proclamation of Protestant anathemas hurled against them for believing and proclaiming the very truths that strike a death-blow to Catholicism, Spiritualism, and every other false system of religion under heaven? Nay, verily. This is the hour for brave men in the Lord, like Luther and his associates. This is the time to be daring for the right.

The friends of Jesus have reason to rejoice in the fact that the Lord is raising up strong men to advocate and defend the doctrine of man's natural mortality, and the final destruction of the wicked. Among these is Henry Constable, Prebendary of Cork, who is said to be a superior scholar, one of the best and ablest Congregational ministers in Europe. He has recently published an octavo pamphlet of 68 pages, entitled, "The Duration and Nature of Future Punishment." The work has been reprinted in this country by Mr. C. L. Ives, New Haven, Ct. In his introduction to the American reader, he says:

> "I may state that this question of future punishment, has been of late freely discussed in the religious magazines of England; and I am informed that a large proportion of the intelligent and devout English clergymen, of all denominations, accept the truth of the views herein stated. The agitation on this subject has not reached our shores, at least not fully as yet, but it must be met; and the sooner the truth prevails the better, for the glory of God, and for our common Christianity."

In Mr. Constable's preface to the English edition, he says:—

> "For myself, I cannot express my sense of the value I place on the view I now seek to impress on others. It has for me thrown a light on God's character, and God's word, and the future of his world, which I once thought I should never have seen on this side of the grave. It has not removed the wholesome and necessary terrors of the Lord from the mind, but it has clothed God with a loveliness which makes him, and the eternal Son who represents him to man, incalculably more attractive. I am no longer looking for shifts to excuse his conduct in my own eyes and those of others, and forced to feel that here at least I could never find one to answer my object. I can look at all that he has done, and all he tells me he will hereafter do, and, scanning it closely, and examining it even where it has most of awe and severity, exclaim with all my heart and with all my understanding—'Just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints.'"

Price of the work 40 cts. Published by C. C. Chatfield & Co., 460 Chapel St., New Haven, Conn. For sale at this office.

WE would say to those who have sent us the papers we wanted, that we are very much obliged to them all. We have a plenty now.

THE ROMAN WIDOW.

During the session of the Ecumenical Council at Rome in 1869 and 1870, the "woman" upon the scarlet colored beast boasted of her exalted position, and flattered herself that she should be honored and protected more than ever after the passing and proclamation of the infallibility dogma; but, to her surprise, she was abandoned at once, and left in a widowed condition. Just before that she had been fulfilling the Scripture: "She saith in her heart, I sit a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow." Rev. 18: 7. How changed now. The next verse introduces her plagues of "death, and mourning, and famine." She was struck with death when she most expected life. Her husband was taken away, "mourning and famine" are upon her, and her term of widowhood will be more and more terrible. The cup of anguish she gave to the martyred saints will be filled "to her double." Already she is beginning to taste its bitter contents. She must drink it to the dregs.

> "A law has been voted this week supplementary to that of several years ago, called by the clergy the Ecclesiastical Spoliation Scheme. The present law sweeps into the public Treasury what is left of property—and it is in the aggregate considerable—upon which the clergy live, and by which worship is supported. The church and its servants will soon be reduced to the smallest possible allowance, and the inducement to become a priest, for any money profit accruing, will be taken away. 'As poor as a church mouse,' instead of 'as fat as a priest,' will be the phrase to be applied to the ministers of the altar."

This law is now in active operation, and the noted "queen" who gloated over the blood of the martyrs sits in the dust "mourning" the loss of her power, and her treasures.

THE MORMON QUESTION.

In his late message President Grant says:—"In Utah there still remains a remnant of barbarism repugnant to civilization, to decency and to the laws of the United States. Territorial officers, however, have been found who are willing to perform their duty in a spirit of equity and with a due sense of sustaining the majesty of the law. Neither polygamy nor any other violation of existing statues will be permitted within the territory of the United States. It is not with the religion of the self-styled saints that we are now dealing, but with their practices. They will be protected in the worship of God according to the dictates of their consciences, but they will not be permitted to violate the laws under the cloak of religion."

Of the Italian affairs, he says:—

> "I have been officially informed of the annexation of the States of the Church to the Kingdom of Italy, and the removal of the Capital of that kingdom to Rome. In conformity with the established policy of the United States I have recognized this change. The ratification of the new treaty of commerce between the United States and Italy has been exchanged. The two powers have agreed in this treaty that private property at sea shall be exempt from capture in case of war between the two powers. The United States have spared no opportunity of incorporating this rule into the obligations of nations."

THE WAY OF HOLINESS.—The question is asked, "How shall I make the desired attainment"?

1. Do not allow any question of doctrine to hinder you a moment. Do not try to settle questions of a doctrine in advance. As well might one awakened, but not converted, undertake in his blindness to settle the doctrine of regeneration before giving his heart to the Savior. Give yourself at once, and without reserve, to Jesus, and let him teach you, as he will, all you need to know about the doctrine of sanctification. But do not shrink from any opprobrium which may come upon you as a result of being entirely consecrated to Jesus.

2. Present yourself to the Savior just as you are now. Do not wait to make any preparations, or to have any change wrought in you before you give yourself wholly up to him. Do not hold yourself back in any interest or anything. Just as you are, just where you are, just what you are, neither holding anything back, nor waiting to be, or to do, anything more. Now leave yourself in his hands.

3. Believe that he now receives you, and will work in you all the good pleasure of his will, and will keep you and purify you, and finally present you faultless before his throne.

Do this and abide in it. Abide in Jesus, and accept that he abides in you, and be assured he will not leave you without witness of the Holy Ghost, that he is yours, and you are his.—Christian at Work.

A VALUABLE WORK.

Messrs. Tafel, of Philadelphia, New York and London, are about to commence the publication of a work that will be of great value to the Bible student, called an "Interlinear Translation of the Sacred Scriptures." The following will give some idea of the work:—

> "Above each word of the Hebrew, Chaldee, and Greek texts, will be placed an English equivalent, which shall render its fundamental meaning and grammatical function in such a manner as to enable any one familiar with the English grammar to analyze every sentence of the foreign language.
>
> The Text and Translation of the Old Testament will be issued in nineteen or twenty parts, that of the New Testament in seven or eight. Each part will contain about 160 octavo pages, and fifteen or twenty pages of the 'Notes,' which being paged independently, may be bound by themselves.
>
> As the Biblical Greek was written by men on Semitic ground, the interpretation will be kept in continual accord with the Hebrew way of thinking, and the Hebrew idiom.
>
> Dr. Leonard Tafel, of New York has associated with himself, to insure the early completion of the work, his two sons, Rev. R. L. Tafel, Ph. D., of London, and Rev. L. H. Tafel, of Philadelphia, and will begin the publication of the work on his own account; the former publishers having transferred their subscribers to him. The first (Hebrew) part of the work is now in the hand of the printer, and will be published in February, 1872, Twelve parts are already translated, so that there need be no unnecessary delay in the work.
>
> The Hebrew and Greek parts will be published alternately, beginning with the Hebrew. No labor or expense will be spared to bring out the work in substantial and elegant style.
>
> Price for each of the single parts of the Old Testament, two dollars; for the single parts of the New Testament, one dollar and fifty cents. Subscriptions are also received for the Old and New Testaments separately.
>
> Price of single parts of the Old Testament to non-subscribers, three dollars; of single parts of the New Testament to non-subscribers, two dollars.
>
> As an inducement we offer to every one sending the names of six subscribers a seventh copy free."

SMITH'S DICTIONARY OF THE BIBLE.—We take much pleasure in commending to all Bible students, and especially to preachers, Smith's Dictionary of the Bible, published by Messrs. Hurd and Houghton, Riverside, Cambridge, Mass. This valuable work is considered the best in the world to assist the Bible student in a careful examination of the sacred Scriptures. It was first published in Europe, and denominated "the great monument to English Biblical scholarship." Dr. Crosby says: "It is worth more on a Bible reader's desk than fifty commentaries.' It contains the results of the researches of the most distinguished scholars in all matters pertaining to the sacred Scriptures. Every minister should have a copy. It would afford a poor preacher much joy to receive it as a present from his friends. Price, in cloth, 4 vol's, $26.00 Address H. O. Houghton and Co., Riverside, Cambridge, Mass.

THE FAITH OF JOB WHEN TRIED.

The Lord pronounced Job a "perfect man," but Satan insisted that the faithfulness of Job arose from the fact that God had showered temporal blessings upon him, and had made him prosperous, and shielded him from calamities. "Satan answered the Lord, and said, Doth Job fear God for nought? Hast thou not made an hedge about him, and about his house, and about all that he hath on every side? thou hast blest the work of his hands, and his substance is increased in the land. But put forth thine hand now, and touch all that he hath, and he will curse thee to thy face." Job 19: 11.

To demonstrate the fact that true religion is based on principle that will lead its possessor to cling to the Lord in adversity, as well as in prosperity, the Lord gave Satan power to test Job by depriving him of all his wealth and children. "And the Lord said unto Satan, Behold, all that he hath is in thy power; only upon himself put not forth thine hand." v. 12. Now Job was a man of wealth, having a thousand oxen, five hundred asses, seven thousand sheep, and three thousand camels; worth, at very low figures, over $300,000; besides, many servants. Satan conceived the plan of bringing successive calamities upon him, by which he should be dispossessed of all his wealth and be robbed of all his children in a single day, to see if his faith would not falter under the trial; and this plan was executed, and calamity followed on the heel of calamity.

1. A messenger flies in haste to tell Job the Sabeans have stolen all the oxen, and all the asses, and slain all the servants that were with them.

2. Another messenger comes in great haste, before the first one could finish his story, to bring the sad information that all the sheep are burned up in a miraculous manner by fire from heaven.

3. Then another messenger comes, all out of breath, to inform him that three bands of Chaldeans had killed the servants, and had stolen all the camels.

4. And before this message could be finished, a fourth messenger comes to announce the painful fact that the wind had blown down a house upon his ten children, and had killed them all.

There stands Job, made childless and shorn of all his property in a single day. Will he desert God, or love him any the less under the storm of adversity, than he had done under the sunshine of prosperity? No, but he "fell down upon the ground, and worshiped, and said, ... the Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord." God had suffered his property and his children to be taken away from him, yet he clung to the Lord. The Lord had "taken away" only in the sense of giving Satan direct power to take away his property and his children.

But how often this language is perverted on ordinary funeral occasions, where no such interposition of power delegated to the devil has taken away the deceased; yet we hear it there said, "The Lord hath taken away," which is not true in such cases. The Lord does not ordinarily take away our friends; but in Job's case, God had permitted Satan to take away property and children, and it could be said that the Lord had "taken away" only in the sense of permitting Satan to engulph them in a premature death.

This severe trial was enough to demonstrate the fact that Job's affections were not placed on property or children more than upon God. But Satan was not satisfied with this test, and insisted that personal affliction would lead Job to desert the cause. "Put forth now thine hand, and touch his bone and his flesh, and he will curse thee to thy face. And the Lord said unto Satan, Behold he is in thine hand; but save his life." Having thus obtained permission of the Lord, Satan "smote Job with sore boils from the sole of his foot unto his crown." Though Job could not see through this dark cloud of affliction, he felt resolved to trust in God though he should slay him, by giving Satan power over his life, for he saw by faith a life beyond death. "O that thou wouldest hide me in the grave. . . . . If a man die, shall he live again? All the days of my appointed time will I wait, till my change come. Thou shalt call, and I will answer thee." Job 14: 13-15. "For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth; and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God; whom I shall see for myself." Job 19: 25-27. Christ, when raised, affirmed "It is I myself"; so Job expected to be himself "at the latter day," though he should previously repose in death. He expected then to hear the Redeemer's "call." W. S.

THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN.

The popular use of this language is not in agreement with its scriptural signification. Now, it is often applied to a supposed world of disembodied souls above the starry skies; but such could not have been its meaning when John, Christ, the twelve apostles, and the seventy proclaimed, "The kingdom of heaven is at hand." They could not have meant a sky kingdom, for that existed long previously, and therefore could not have been "at hand" in the sense of coming into existence; and yet in the sense of its future removal to the earth, for the city will "come down from God out of heaven"—leaving heaven still in its former locality.

They could not have meant that the Messiah was soon to come, for this message was proclaimed after he came. Evidently they meant the very kingdom Jesus told them to pray for. "Thy kingdom come; thy will be done in earth as it is done in heaven." The very kingdom Jesus referred to when he said, while preaching the kingdom at hand—"As therefore the tares are gathered and burned in the fire; so shall it be in the end of this world. . . . Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." The same kingdom spoken of by Jesus while preaching the kingdom at hand, when he said—"When the Son of man shall come in his glory, . . . then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." It was at hand in the same sense in which Peter affirmed, "The end of all things is at hand." The remaining time was short compared with the previous history of the world. W. S.

WHAT WE NEED.

Is it not time to meet for earnest prayer and solemn conference? I have felt for some time past that the Advent people ought to be more stirred, and take a deeper interest in the immediate coming of Christ to judgment, and awake to more earnest and united action to arouse a slumbering church and guilty world to a sense of their awful danger and responsibility. If, as I verily believe, the evidence points to A. D. 1873, as the time for Christ to come and end probation, and bring us all to a strict account of our stewardship, is it not time to meet in solemn conference to consider this question, and examine and sift the evidence on which this question rests? There are many brethren and sisters scattered abroad who feel a deep interest in this question, and think it high time for a general meeting to be called, for a prayerful and earnest discussion of this deeply interesting subject. The Spirit of Christ in the prophets searched the TIME, not only for the sufferings of Christ, but also the TIME of the glory that is to follow, i. e., the time when Christ will be revealed from heaven in his glory. And this is for our consideration and profit. 1 Pet. 1: 11, 12. Read also the twelfth chapter of Daniel, and learn what deep and earnest solicitude and inquiry moved the pious heart of the prophet Daniel, a man greatly beloved of God, and the specially appointed servant of God to convey his mind to us when the resurrection of the righteous dead shall occur, and the deliverance of all found "written in the book."

As no one who believes the Bible can dispute the fact but that definite time is there recorded for our instruction and use, let nothing prevent our giving it the place in our counsel and action that its importance demands. As there is more or less confusion in many minds, both of preachers and people, on this subject, a meeting of this character is now of special importance. It is high time for us, as a people, to humble ourselves before God, and confess and repent of our worldliness and backsliding, and betake ourselves to earnest prayer to God for help, and the Holy Spirit to awaken us to a true sense of our situation and responsibility. Daniel prayed, with supplications and fasting, in view of the condition of Jerusalem, and his people, and a most signal answer was obtained. See Daniel 9th. Then let us, my dear brethren, arouse from all slumber, and earnestly look to the same source for wisdom, that we may be guided into all truth, and gain a knowledge of the deep things of God, and by fidelity and watchfulness be prepared to welcome our returning Lord and King.

Some brethren at Portsmouth, N. H., also at Worcester, Mass., feel the importance of such a gathering of ministers and brethren as above proposed, and would like to have it at either of the above named places. May we not expect, then, some action speedily taken in this direction? Bro. Adams has spoken of Lowell Street, Boston, as open for a meeting for the general good of the cause of our soon coming King.

Brethren, pray over this subject, and prepare to come together in the name of the Lord, for the judgment of the great day is truly impending. Amen.

A LITTLE GRAVY.

ISRAEL DAMMAN.

BRO. GRANT:—As there is a large space in the Crisis sometimes used for dry bones, such as conference reports, I thought a little juice would make the paper a little more palatable. Bless the Lord for his salvation that I have seen since our campmeetings at Belfast and Alton Bay. Soon after, we went to Portland to attend conference, in company with Bro. Emery and Colby. We had a refreshing season all through the meeting. A number came out and threw off their sectarian bands, and chose to walk in liberty. In the last evening meeting of the conference, two strangers came in to hear the word. At the close, they came to me and informed me of their religious standing. The lady was a member of the Baptist church. She informed me she was in a lost condition, and the word preached had opened her eyes. She ardently desired our prayers. It created a deep feeling in the church. We gave her the counsel we thought was due, with the promise that she would give her heart to God without reserve, and let me know how it was with her. About two weeks after, we received a line from the lady, stating that she had been sick, and confined to her bed with rheumatism. She blessed God that she was led to that house of prayer in Portland that night, and that she had found in Christ a free and full pardon of all her sins, and now could trust in him without fear, exclaiming, Praise to God for full salvation in the midst of affliction, among strangers. She found the grace of God sufficient. Thank God for the salvation of one from a backslidden state.

Two weeks ago, we had the privilege of leading down into the water two happy souls in the town of Levant, who have lately found Jesus precious. While visiting a number of churches, gathered with love for the coming of Christ, we have seen them revived. In Searsport Village there were good signs of a reformation. A number started anew, and the best attendance was given to the word. A cry came from Monmouth, Me., Come over and help us. I have responded to the call, and been here a few days. A number have started. The interest is increasing. I shall remain here awhile preaching Christ to the people, believing our work is nearly done. It looks as though we might close up our labor for the world as soon as eighteen hundred and seventy-five, and lay our armor by and dwell with Christ at home.

"Good old way, how sweet thou art,
May none of us depart from thee;
But may our actions always say,
We are marching in the good old way."

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield Camp-ground, August 22d, 1871, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

BRO. BOWMAN.

Bro. Bowman is receiving much opposition from his former Bro. in the ministry. He sent an article to the "Southern Christian Advocate," for the purpose of correcting some false impressions, but it was declined. The following is the article:—

DR. MYERS:—Dear Bro.:—In last week's Advocate I see a correspondence between a Mr. Perham and Bro. Fleming; in which Bro. F. applies epithets to me, so different from those which he uses in his private letters to me, that I am at a loss how to reconcile them. He emphasizes certain promises which I made, but which I failed to keep. At the Cheraw conference, I promised a committee of three brethren, that if my preaching the unconscious state of the dead until the resurrection, and the final destruction of all wicked beings and principles, was calculated to produce discord (as they supposed), I would desist. Sometime after I reached this (the Darlington) circuit, I became cognizant of the fact that a number of reports concerning my views were being circulated throughout my field of labor; not one of which was correct. Thus situated, I felt it to be my duty to act upon the defensive, which I did; and from every pulpit in my charge I stated the doctrines which I held, and to which the conference objected.

At the third quarterly meeting objections to my views were presented, by some, to the presiding Elder, Jno. W. Kelly, that large-hearted and unselfish man. What his reply was I do not know; but from that time to the end of the year, we had peace and quiet. At the last meeting of the stewards, when every church was represented, they drew up and signed a petition for my return.

At the Charleston conference, last Dec., this whole matter-broken promises, doctrines and all, was fully brought before the body. I stated my reason for having violated my promise, and for the first time, before the open conference, I stated my views in regard to the state of the dead, and the end of evil. The conference then knew my views, and Bishop Pierce, with discipline in hand, told us we had twenty-five articles of religion, and asked, "Which of these has Bro. Bowman violated?" If there was a protest from any part of the room, I do not know it. The Bishop said furthermore, "We have standards, but they contradict one another"; and so they do. For Clarke and Benson say, as soon as a man dies he goes directly to heaven or hell; and Mr. Wesley says whoever teaches that a man goes to heaven or hell when he dies, does not understand the oracles of God.

The conference passed my character, and I was returned to this circuit. No promises were required, no injunctions were laid upon me. Now can any one, at all acquainted with the proceedings of an annual conference, come to any other conclusion than that my case was finally disposed of? Just before the second quarterly meeting of this year, I received a note from Bro. F., stating that he had received complaints against me for preaching heresy, and that he would talk with me on the subject at the approaching meeting. The time arrived, and we had the expected interview. I told him (Bro. F.) that I rarely alluded to the doctrines, and when I did, I simply quoted appropriate texts of Scripture, and that, if he desired it, I would not emphasize the final destruction of the wicked during the year. That promise I kept.

At our third quarterly meeting, when the whole circuit was represented, to satisfy Bro. F., I proposed to retire, that the brethren might speak on the subject without reserve. To this Bro. Fleming objected. I then asked the conference to say whether I had kept my promise or not. One Bro. arose and said I had done so at his church; when Bro. Fleming cut the matter short by saying he would call me before a committee. When about to part, he notified me to appear at the M. E. church, in Sumterville, on the next Wednesday week. I did so, and the result was my suspension for heresy.

I would just say here, that as long as Bro. Fleming and myself have been in the conference, this is the first year we have been associated together; and I am truly sorry that matters have terminated as they have. I believe Bro. Fleming to be a good man, and a genial companion. I believe him to be actuated by the best motives in what he does. Yet I am fully satisfied that he has permitted himself to be counselled by the wrong men, and I am not alone in this opinion. He was advised to defer the whole matter until the next annual conference. An influential Bro. in an adjoining circuit told me he went to Sumterville the day on which the committee met, and begged Bro. Fleming to defer the matter, saying that he was confident, if he did not, it would prove disastrous to the church. One of the most reliable brethren in my circuit told me he approached Bro. Fleming on the same subject, and that Bro. Fleming replied thus: "All you who believe with Bowman, go with him, and build him a church."

It may be heard almost everywhere, "If Bro. Kelly had been here, nothing of this would have occurred." Now let us suppose Bro. Fleming to have spoken thus to those who complained against my preaching: "It will only be a few months until our next conference; try and live in peace till then, and every thing shall be attended to at conference." Is it not probable we would have had a better result?

About my New England gospel and Northern church. Who knows better than Bro. Fleming that these doctrines have been in the church since the days of the apostles: that some of them were more dreaded by the papacy than any others; that, like all the rest, they went down under that horrid domination; that at the dawn of the Reformation they were among the first taught by Luther. The Advent church originated at the north, but not these doctrines. Where did the Methodist church in this country take its rise, but at the north? Over the door in John Street Church, New York, may be seen this inscription:—"The first M. P. Church built in America."

I united with the Advent church because they are purely Armenian in doctrine; because they insist upon entire holiness of heart and life; the speedy coming of the Lord; the unconscious state of the dead; a literal resurrection from the dead; and the eternal destruction of the wicked. They hold class-meetings, love-feasts, conferences, and camp-meetings. Now where is the great difference between this and the Methodist church? I have been a Methodist minister for many years, and never during that time did I ask a member of any other church to join mine, though I received many such from their own choice. I have not asked one from any other church to join the Advent, nor do I intend to. Those who have joined me, requested the doors of the church to be opened.

I saw in the papers last winter that Bro. Grant had been preaching for several months in a southern Methodist church, in San Francisco, which resulted in a gracious revival of religion. So when I learned that Bro. Sheldon was preaching at different points in Georgia, I wrote him a note, inviting him to pay me a visit, and deliver a course of lectures on the prophecies. He complied with my request, and every thing he preached was in accordance with Methodist teaching, except one sermon which he preached by request, on the end of evil. He is a deeply pious and learned man. He did not say one proselyting word to me while here.

Now let me say, in conclusion, that I have stated the whole affair as briefly as possible. Mistakes I may have made, but not intentionally. God knows my heart. I expected, with my family (I say it with tears running from my eyes), to have lived out the remainder of my days in the church to which I have belonged from my boyhood days. I love her; I love all her noble institutions, and her dear, blessed preachers and people. I hope the preachers in their weary rounds will not forsake me and my family, for I do not want my children to be weaned from them. Glory to Jesus! my soul is filled with love to all men. PEYTON G. BOWMAN.

MISSION WORK.

F. & W. DETO.

BRO. GRANT:—At the close of my last, I was on the way to Streator, Ill., where I arrived Sept. 9th. The camp-ground is situated two and a half miles from the town. I soon found Bro. A. N. Seymour, J. W. Burroughs, and others, and was heartily received as a co-laborer in the work. The spot was a beautiful one.

In the nearest farm-house lived a Mr. John Sawyer, who was very kind to us, as well as others. This man was educated by his parents for the M. E. ministry. At the close of his school, he became a Universalist, and finally lodged in Spiritualism, where this meeting found him. On Thursday night, Sept. 14th, he said that he prayed that if there was any truth, he might know it and understand. That night he had a dream three times over, which was in answer, no doubt, to this prayer. The following is the dream, as he told it to me: I found myself in a city, surrounded with a great precipice, at the bottom of which there was a great river, with beautiful land beyond. The inhabitants were a band of thieves and robbers, who wanted me to join them. I declined. They threatened to kill me and throw me out. I promised not to report them, if they would let me go. Then I awoke.

This was repeated the third time, when I went to the watchman, and told him I was lost. He showed me the way, and pointed me to a dim light, which I should follow. I followed on. I saw a light on another street. I crossed over where the people were, and soon found myself at a precipice like Niagara Falls. It seemed like going down a coal shaft. When I got down half way, I got hold of a bush, but it kept giving way. At this time Jesus came and offered to help me, if I would serve him. Two men came and said, "We don't worship God here; if you do, we will throw you over the precipice." Jesus caught hold of me. These men fell over. I got away, awoke, and the scene closed for the night. I felt it my duty to come to meeting, and confess Christ; but I delayed.

Saturday night, Sept. 16th, I had the dream again, with more added to it. After passing the city, I got to the edge of the earth, which caved off, and I went down. I thought I died. It seemed it took an hour to go down. All my deeds came up before me. I knew when I went into the river, but did not realise it while there. I came up the other side. I saw my father and children, who had formerly died. We were joyful and happy. I said, They tell me that there are ghosts here. I felt of them, and said, You are not ghosts. Then I saw a great crowd, like a great procession. My friends asked me about my preparation. I asked, For what? They said, the judgment. I told them I was not prepared. They went up like persons going to vote. They had a clerk, and Jesus seemed like a Judge. It seemed about an hour. Then came my turn. I went up, gave my name—Sawyer. The inquiry was made, Is it John Sawyer? I said, Yes, He told me that this was an account of over fifty years standing, and commenced to read, "Misrepresentation, deceit, neglect—neglect—NEGLECT of duty." Jesus bowed his head and wept, and my friends wept. I turned and shook hands, and parted with them. To part with friends here at death is nothing to be compared with it. No tongue can express the anguish. I would have given the world for one more hour to prepare. Then I began to realise what I had lost, and what I would give for an opportunity to repent.

O! the scene I can never forget. I turned to get my sentence. Jesus said, What do you say to this? I said, Nothing; it is just. He reminded me of the opportunities I had had. I said, If I had only known what I do now, I would have done differently; but the preachers said one thing, and others another thing. Jesus said, It is a lamentable fact that the preachers have done so. I told him if I had an opportunity, I would be a christian. He said, If you think you will try, I will make a covenant with you. I told him if there was anything I could do, I would do it; if I had it, I would give all the world. He said he would require me to give all my possessions. That is not all, you must give up your creeds and traditions; then I want all your heart. If that is too hard to do, you can call on me, and I will help you. On these considerations I will defer the judgment. If you prefer, I will cancel all the debt. The clerk was ordered to record, and postpone the judgment one day more. I turned to my friends; they took hold of me, and said, Do bring the rest; bring mother and the children; do be faithful, and come home safe. I promised I would do the best I could, and then I awoke. I had been in this about three hours. I thought I wept; and I found I had, for my pillow was wet with tears. By the grace of God I will take the warning, and serve Jesus, and meet you all in the kingdom.

Bro. Sawyer came into our tent just at the hour of worship, as we were about to pray. He said, "Pray for me." We did so. At the love-feast at nine o'clock, he made this confession, stating he thought it was his last call. This day was spent faithfully, for he and his wife were buried with Christ in baptism, with four others, and at night the rest of the family, consisting of three that were at home, promised to serve the Lord. There were about twelve that turned to the Lord, beside some backsliders who were reclaimed.

Thank the Lord, that this meeting was held. There were about fifty who camped on the ground. There were five ministers present. Every thing moved off as well as could be expected.

On Monday, we struck tents, and parted. I went to Ancona and preached that evening, then returned to Streater. I went west to Farren Ridge, to hear Bro. Seymour speak on the subject of the Sabbath. I must say that this was a rare treat to me. I found that Bro. Seymour was master of his subject. There was much light shed on my mind. He said the ten commandments are nowhere called the "law of God" but by the Sabbath keeper. They continually assume that it is so. They were challenged to produce a text. The opportunity was given, but they did not bring any forward. It could not be done.

"HADES AND SHEOL."—This is a new pamphlet by Eld. L. C. Collins, published by the W. A. C. P. A. It is deserving of a wide circulation, and will richly repay every Bible student who buys and examines it. The word sheol, which is translated hell in the Old Testament, and hades, translated hell in the New Testament, are carefully and critically examined, giving the general meaning and use of the words, showing that they are universally used to signify death and the grave, as is shown also by several of the best authors. The case of the rich man and Lazarus is then criticised by the rule obtained for the use of hades, and a new view of this subject presented, differing from the one usually given by our writers. We are not fully satisfied it is altogether correct, but appears more rational than any we have seen published. To this is added an essay, entitled, "Literal Death the Penalty of the Divine Law." Thinkers should have this work. Price by mail, ten cents. For sale at the Crisis office.

I. C. WELLCOME.

THE WITNESS OF THE SPIRIT.

When Samuel Wesley, sen., was dying, he cried out, "The inward witness, the inward witness! that is the proof, the strongest proof, of Christianity." In like manner, the sainted Rutherford wrote in one of his inimitable letters, "Make meikle (much) of assurance, for it keepeth your anchor fixed." The doctrine of the witness of the spirit is inseparably connected with all true vital godliness. The spiritual life of the christian, his peace, his joy, and his hope, are all based upon this truth and this experience. I must know that I am freely justified before God, before I can have conscious peace with God and unspeakable joy; I must know that I am a child of God, before I can know that I am an heir; and I must know that I am an heir of God, before I can have a shameless hope of eternal life. But the question at once arises here, how can I know that I am justified, and that I am a child of God?" Those who believe it at all possible to have such knowledge are not all united in the answers which they give to this inquiry.

Some will say, that this knowledge may be had; but that it is only after a period, longer or shorter, of earnest, anxious inquiry, that we may begin to infer from certain inward experiences and outward actions that our sins are forgiven, and that we are the children of God. The whole method to be pursued, according to this view, is one of inference, or induction, and the result reached is solely from a process of reasoning, based upon Scripture data it is true, but a process of reasoning after all; any flaw in which may endanger the whole salvation of the one who employs it.

Another, and a more direct answer is given to this question by others. It is this: That when man is justified by faith in Christ, and adopted into the family of God, the Holy Spirit comes directly into his heart and bears his direct and positive testimony there as to the fact of his forgiveness and adoption. Now, besides this being a scriptural view of the case, it is infinitely more satisfactory than the first mentioned opinion. Let us look for a moment at the scriptural proof of this position. The apostle, writing to the believers in Rome, says to them, "Ye have not received the Spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father. The Spirit itself," or the self-same Spirit, viz., of adoption, "beareth witness with," or to, "our Spirit, that we are the children of God." Again, "Because ye are sons," —that is, if I understand it, because the act of pardon and adoption has passed in the divine mind, constituting you the sons of God, therefore,—"God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, 'Abba, Father.'" Thus much for the direct Scripture proof on this point.—Advocate of Christian Holiness.

Correspondence.

From Bro. Ira Andrews.

Bro. Grant:—I see my subscription for the Crisis is run out, for which I am exceedingly sorry, for I know of no way to renew it. I presume you are aware that I lost nearly all my worldly goods by the Chicago fire, so that I have nothing to do with. I have been helped to clothing and bed-clothing sufficient for the winter, but I have no work or money, so I shall have to discontinue the paper. The visitation of the Crisis was looked for with earnest love for a new set of weekly jewels to lay up in my treasury for God's blessed truth. [We will continue to send you the Crisis.—Ed.]

I praise God for his care over me and mine in this great calamity, that engulfed so many, leaving them homeless and penniless in the world. Through all the mountain waves of affliction that rolled upon me, God has helped me to keep a good share of my body out of the water. At the time of the fire, my wife had been on a sick bed for three weeks. I looked to God for help, and cried in earnest that he would strengthen her for the work before her, and he heard my prayer; for she had to walk some five miles for a place to rest her weary limbs, and that in a school-house, from Monday till Friday. The next day my daughter went out for charity to clothe and feed our large family of fourteen, including a son-in-law with his three children, of which all lived together, and our goods were all burned together. On Tuesday evening supplies of food began to come, so that we were fed, while some were not.

The Lord has been with us all the way through, and we have been cared for in a providential way, so that we suffer for nothing but the health of my wife, who is now at Bro. Spaulding's, in Aurora, Ill. I beseech the prayers of God's lowly ones in her behalf, that her health may be restored again, for I fear nothing but the power of God can restore her to health and her family again. I rejoice that the time is soon to come when sickness, trials, affliction, and death, will end; when we, if faithful, will have in exchange eternal life in the kingdom of our blessed Lord.

O how glad I shall be to see Satan foiled of his power, and Jesus my Lord reign instead on his father David's throne. To set foot in a land free from the blight of sin will be joyful in the extreme; and to roam in a land where death can raise no mounds to mar its beauty will be a delight to the roamer. I pray God to hasten the time for the coming of his Son Jesus, my Lord, and bring this welcome time.

Rock Island, Ill., Nov. 26th, 1871.

From Bro. Charles Angle.

Bro. Grant:—I was born in the village of Ithaca, N. Y., in the year of our Lord 1819. My parents moved to Bradford Co., Pa., in 1827. I grew up among the vilest of sinners, and was a cunning worker for Satan. In 1843 I married, thinking that I could settle down for life, but my old cunning master found plenty of business for me. He kept me busy in wanting to go somewhere. Never was I contented but a short time in one place. In 1855, I moved to Michigan, determined to lead a steady life; but it did not go as I intended. I think I was worse off than ever before. In 1857, when hard at work, this passage of Jesus' blessed words came into my mind: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." These words rang in my ears until I was compelled to inquire, Who was this Jesus? I soon learned it was necessary for me to pray. I was not disobedient to the call. I joined the Protestant Methodist church. They made me a class teacher.

In the fall of 1867, I found out that I was destitute of an immortal soul. Reader, I cannot tell you how I felt about those days. I supposed that I was all that God wanted me to be, but when I came to look for myself, what God required at my hands, I found it very different from what my brethren had taught me. My troubles grew greater and greater every day. I was in deep sorrow, for I did want to be a christian. I was not compelled to bear more than I was able. I saw in a paper, that there was a man in St. Joseph Co., Mich., who preached things concerning the kingdom. I wrote to him. He wrote to me, telling me to send to Grand Rapids for one Bro. Hoyt, or Simonds. I obeyed, and soon Elder E. Hoyt came. He preached thirteen times, baptized my household, or my whole family. My Methodist brethren did not like any teaching from a man that had no immortal spirit, or soul. I became very lonesome, and sold all that I had to go up to Prairieville, and spent the rest of life's journey. The 8th day of last May, I shipped my small handful of goods. How cheerfully I left to go among the saints. Reader, I wish that you could have the happy feeling one hour that I had, at the thought of being with brethren that could help me fight the great battle.

Prairieville, Nov. 5th, '71.

From Sr. Sarah Gadsby.

Bro. Grant:—I feel it my duty to say that I have been blest by the reading of the Crisis. It is about one year since I had it sent to me by my friend Lucy D. Harrington. I read it with care, and it gave me a great deal of peace in my mind; for at that time it seemed to me that I could not live any longer, I was so much discouraged; but I thank God for the light of the blessed gospel of the coming of Christ. It gave me new life. I feel that it was the Lord that sent it to me.

I have been a member of the Orthodox church for fourteen years, but I can say that I never enjoyed the love for Christ in that time that I have since I had the Crisis; although I feel that I did love my Savior, but I did not enjoy that sweet peace that I now have. I know I may be forsaken by my friends, but I care not for that. I am willing to be a pilgrim and a stranger. I have no earthly store, but I have Jesus to cheer me on my way, and guide me every day. I want to be one of his people, and believe I have that light for which I prayed so long. May God bless my brothers and sisters in Christ, and make us what we ought to be.

Ware, Mass.

Bro. Ira Slocum writes from Brookfield, Pa., Nov. 17th, 1871:—"The Lord is yet with us, and is pouring out his blessing in copious showers among us. The cause is still advancing, and with but very few exceptions, all are looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of our blessed Savior, who shall change our vile bodies and fashion them like unto his glorious body. The signs of the times and the present struggle of the world at large, plainly declare that Jesus is near, even at the door. I humbly trust this little church will be of that happy number that shall be found of him in peace."

A Request.—Bro. Grant:—I ask for an exposition, in the Crisis, of a part of the 11th of Daniel, commencing with the 20th verse, and closing with the 30th.

I believe a true and full explanation of this portion of prophecy would help some to understand that in regard to which they now are in doubt. I. I. Leslie.

Obituaries.

Blethen. Died at Frankfort, Me., Oct. 14th, 1871, G. Washington Blethen, aged twenty-nine years, five months, and fourteen days.

Bro. B. was converted nearly two years ago, and baptized into Christ; since which he has been one of the main supporters of the cause of Christ at Frankfort. His death comes as a very heavy affliction to every christian who knew him, and casts a shade of sadness over the entire community. He has left behind a tenderly beloved christian wife, and two tender boys; a widowed mother, deeply afflicted at the loss of her eldest son, and two noble-minded and affectionate brothers, who feel that the three-fold cord is broken. May God sustain and comfort all who mourn the loss of one so precious. Words of consolation were offered at the funeral by F. A. Baker.

Pecu. Died in Ferrisburg, Vt., Dec. 2nd. 1871, of typhoid fever, Obadiah J., eldest son of Bro. Joseph and Sr. Fidelia Pecu, aged nearly nineteen years.

Thus, just as he was ripening into manhood, "Obey" has been stricken down by death. He was a kind, affectionate son and brother, and died trusting in Jesus. They buried him with a copy of the New Testament in his hand, and so he carried into the grave with him the blessed words of Jesus—"I am the resurrection and the life." The family circle is deeply afflicted, but find comfort in Christ. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer, from 1 Cor. 15: 45–48.

L. C. McKinstry.

Chatfield. Died at Le Sueur, Minn., Oct. 21st, 1871, our father, R. T. Chatfield, aged sixty-two years and eight months.

We believe he sleeps in Jesus, as he said the night before he died that he was ready for the promised land. He leaves a wife and seven children to mourn his loss. Funeral sermon preached by Bro. E. Bacon, of Ottawa, Minn., from 1 Thess. 4: 14. C. I. Chatfield.

Cranston. Died at Richmond, R. I., Aug. 24th, 1871, at the age of five months and twenty-five days, Joseph C. Cranston, son of Lyman N. and Alzado T. Cranston, and grandson of Eld. J. J. Northup.

Funeral services were held by Eld. A. Durfee.

Our bud of beauty and of grace,
Lies blasted by death's chilling power,
But in the heavenly dwelling place
It soon shall bloom a fadeless flower.

There, free from earth's untimely blasts,
The storms and woes of time all o'er,
The frosts of death's cold winter past,
Our bud shall bloom forevermore.

Merrill. Died in Holderness, Nov. 22nd, Sally Merrill, wife of Asa F. Merrill, aged sixty-six years and twenty-two days.

She sleeps in Jesus. She will wake up in the resurrection morning, clothed with immortality, to die no more.

Cable News.

The Prince of Wales.

London, Dec. 11. It is manifest from the actions of sympathy everywhere and prayers for the Prince of Wales that the symptoms of death are very imminent, and all hopes of his recovery have been abandoned. The Queen and Princess Alexandria are bearing the fatigue well, and the latter hardly leaves the sick room.

The Times to-day gave nearly all its space to the subject of the Prince's illness, and its possible fatal result. Several columns are devoted to dispatches describing the manner in which the news was received in the Provinces. The Times also gives in detail an account of the progress of the fever. This report shows that soon after the fever set in the mind of the Prince began to wander. The first lucid interval he had was on the birthday of his wife, the 1st of December, when he exclaimed in a natural tone of voice, "This is the Princess' birthday." On another occasion, just before his relapse, something was said in his hearing about the Queen, and he asked, "Has the Queen arrived from Scotland? Does she know I am sick?" With the exception of these brief intervals the Prince has been unconscious up to the present hour.

Special to the New York Herald. Tremendous excitement prevailed in Madrid on the receipt of President Grant's Message, relating to the Cuban difficulties. The Government has resolved to maintain a firm attitude, and reinforcements of 4000 men, two additional generals, and four iron-clads will be immediately dispatched to Cuba.

The New Mission to America.—We have already alluded to the decision of the Propaganda at Rome to send to this country a delegation of newly gravated clergymen to labor among the negroes in the South. These priests have received the special and exclusive mission of converting the whole colored race on this side of the water. Four priests have sailed, almost immediately to be followed by forty others. There are five millions of the negroes in this country, and Rome has made up her mind to have them. The priests are English and the mission is the first foreign one which has ever been given to the English Roman Catholics. The reason for assigning England this one is somewhat peculiar. It is claimed that as Great Britain is guilty of having originally forced slavery upon North America, she should now make reparation for that sin by converting all the now freedmen to the "only true church;" therefore those members of the English aristocracy who have remained firmly attached to the Roman mother have zealously entered upon the new work.

The ceremonies attendant upon the departure of the first four "missioners" were celebrated at St. Joseph's College, near London, some days since, and were very impressive in character. The students and visitors all assembled in the afternoon of a bright day, upon the "Calvary" of the college grounds, and there, kneeling before the crucifix, they sang songs of praise and adoration. The archbishop then led the way to the chapel, where, attired in robes glittering with gold and silver, he delivered a glowing address, explaining the grandeur of "the mission to the heathen of America." Next came the administration of the "Gospel vow," after which the missioners, clad in black, with crimson sashes around their waists, were seated in front of the altar, and the venerable archbishop and all his accompanying priests kissed the feet of the newly ordained, and afterward tenderly embraced them on both cheeks. The four priests were sternly enjoined to labor only among the negroes, and to be turned aside from their purpose by no degree of persecution, by no obstacle, however great.

Catholicism in New England.—The Pilot says that in the city of Boston alone there are nearly sixty priests and over 100,000 Catholics. There are in the diocese, which, instead of comprising all New England, is now only half of Massachusetts, 160 priests and nearly 300,000 Roman Catholics. In the whole of Massachusetts there are now over two hundred priests, and 400,000 Catholics. In the original diocese of Boston (all New England) there are over 300 priests, and probably over 600,000 Roman Catholics.

In Brief.

—— The benevolent institutions of the Baptist Church during the past year averaged thirty-six cents per communicant; the Methodist, twenty-four cents; the Episcopalians, one dollar and thirty-seven cents; the Presbyterians, three dollars and seventeen cents.——The dedication of the first church erected in Chicago since the fire took place on Sunday. It was the Grace (Methodist) Church, corner of La Salle street and Chicago avenue. It is a temporary edifice, 60x40 feet, and capable of seating three hundred persons.——There will be granite, iron and brick enough in the new Post Office building, when completed, to build a row of houses, fifty feet in depth, extending from the Tremont House in Beacon street to Charles street.——The Philadelphia Press says one of the great manufacturing establishments in that city has contracted to supply the Russian Government with five hundred locomotives.——Aggravated forms of the scarlet and black fever are causing great distress in Quebec. Young and old are alike attacked.——Eight new bridges are to be built across the Rhine uniting "the new provinces with the German Empire." About $25,000,000 are to be at once expended in the construction of new strategic railways.——The Prussians are systematically engaged in creating new works of defence around Carlsruhe, in Baden, and at all points where in future an attack by the French might be anticipated.——The German Federal Council has received a proposition from Bavaria that every priest, who, from the pulpit, shall pronounce any words which might trouble the Government, may be imprisoned.——The Jews in many cities in England have formed an association to oppose the London Society for the conversion of the Jews.

Marriage of Mr. Home.—Mr. D. D. Home, the celebrated physical medium, has been married to the youngest daughter of his Excellency, the late Hon. Basil de Gloumeline, counselor of State to the Emperor of Russia.

NO ROOM FOR JESUS.

O plodding life, crowded so full
Of earthly toil and care!
The body's daily need receives
The first and last concern, and leaves
No room for Jesus there.

O busy brain! by night and day
Working with patience rare,
Problems of worldly loss or gain,
Thinking till thought becomes a pain!
No room for Jesus there.

O throbbing heart! so quick to feel
In others' woes a share,
Yet human loves each power enthrall,
And sordid treasures fill it all!
No room for Jesus there.

O sinful soul! thus to debase
The being God doth spare!
Blood-bought, thou art no more thine own,
Heart, brain, life, all are his alone;
Make room for Jesus there,—

Lest soon the bitter day shall come
When vain will be thy prayer
To find in Jesus' heart a place;
Forever closed the door of grace,
Thou'lt gain no entrance there.

CALIFORNIA ITEMS.

O. R. FASSETT.

We are here in the midst of winter, and yet since our arrival on this coast we have seen nothing to remind us of it, save a chill in the atmosphere mornings and evenings, and on damp days. The weather has been most delightful. While writing, my window is open, and the warm, refreshing air is like that of summer. The hills, mountains, and valley's look bleak and barren, more so than any I have seen; and they say unusually so for this section, as there have been no rains of great amount for two years. On account of this lack of the rains in winter, there has been much suffering this season among farmers in certain sections of the state, and many fears are entertained as to the future, if a third season should pass without the required rains. It is hoped that a kind Providence will thus favor this land, and give food to man and beast. Notwithstanding the long continued drougth, fruits and vegetables of every description abound in the markets. And such a variety, and quality, and quantity my eyes never witnessed. It exceeds even the markets of Philadelphia. Grapes! grapes! grapes! of every variety grown, make one think of old Palestine in the days of ancient Israel and Joshua. I saw a cluster the other day, presented to Mrs. F., which, when she showed it to me, the first impression was, from its beauty, freshness, and gloss, that it was artificial wax work. Some clusters weigh from four to eleven pounds. Apples, peaches, pears, figs, tomatoes, strawberries, etc., are all in the market, though the season for some of these fruits is past. Potatoes of every variety, with abundance of that delicious esculent, the sweet potatoe, and other vegetables, appear to crowd the markets, and this after a two years' drougth! What then must this coast provide for its inhabitants, when Providence favors the land with its usual amount of rain?

With this abundance, one thinks of the cities of the plain. The people are living well and fast—many too fast altogether. Every thing is at a state of nervous excitement. Men and boys on horseback rush through the streets of San Francisco almost always on a full gallop. And horses and carriages, and market wagons, and bake and milk carts, are driven at dangerous speed, and pedestrians must be on the lookout at the crossings of the streets. Children have been run over and killed, while the drivers drive on as though nothing had happened, till perhaps they are arrested by the police. Wine and cider are very abundant, to say nothing of more stimulating liquors, of which there is enough, help to keep up this tension of nerve in the populace. I have seen more drunkenness on the streets of San Francisco and Vallejo than in any other cities I have yet visited. The cause of this inebriety should be sought out and remedied by the philanthropic and benevolent. Is this owing to the grape culture? We have been told that in countries where the grape is produced in abundance, intemperance is but little known. Wines, I am told, are substituted on the tables in families for water and other drinks in this State, and all the family from the children upward drink of them. "Who hath woe?" Will not these families reap a harvest of sadness? Parents, beware! Beware all!

San Francisco is a live city, though we are told that it is now depressed from various causes. In the bay and harbor are vessels from all parts of the world. Boston shipping looks good in our eyes, and makes us think of home. These vessels enter into this secure and beautiful bay by a remarkable opening from the seas, called "The Golden Gate." Once within the bay, the tempest-tossed vessel and crew, after a long, tedious, and perilous voyage, amid storms and calms, are at rest; a beautiful picture of "the straight gate" through which each of us must steer our bark during life's voyage to enter the haven of eternal rest on "the evergreen shore." Jesus says, "I am the way, the truth, and the life."—"I am the door; by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and out and find pasture."

VALLEJO.

This is pronounced as if the j was silent, and giving the e the sound of a (Valiao.) This is a city containing about ten thousand inhabitants, and is the terminus of the "Transcontinental R. R.," where passengers take boat for San Francisco by a recent arrangement. Its location upon the bay is beautiful and romantic. Opposite, on Mare Island, is the navy yard. By the kindness of Bro. A. J. Young, I was permitted to visit the yard, as as he conveyed me in his boat across the bay, and introduced me to the general officer in command. The buildings and officer's dwellings are all of the first class. The gardens and pleasant walks are delightful, and I thought, as I passed through them, my poor fellows, this is your paradise, and all the eden you will have. Alas! how short-lived the joy. I coveted not the good, nor the honors here enjoyed. It is all vanity.

THE KEARSARGE.

This vessel is here on the docks for repairs; and one object in visiting the navy yard was to see her. It will be remembered that this vessel had the honor of running down and capturing the "Alabama," of rebel fame. She was built for fast sailing, as appears from her structure. Though a staunch ship, she is needing much repairing. I could hardly suppose that so young a vessel was so much decayed in her timbers and frame. Relics will be conveyed from this vessel over the land in the form of canes, etc., no doubt.

VANDERBILT.

The old steamship of the line is here in the bay at anchor. She was given to the government by her owner, the name she bears, during the late rebellion. She looks old, but is used for transport.

THE INDEPENDENCE,

of old revolutionary fame, is here, and used as a receiving ship. My curiosity was much excited to go on board and see this monster relic of the American Revolution. Her keel was laid in 1812, five years before I was born, and it took eleven years to build her, and she took her first sail in 1823. She was built in Charlestown, Mass., and there is a man living in Vallejo, over eighty years of age, by the name of John Paul Jones Davison, who worked upon her in building, and looks today to be not over fifty years, erect and strong, being but little gray. Furthermore, he is an Adventist. The old war ship looks as solid and sea-worthy as when first built. Our fathers built things to stand the storm, and as though they believed the world would endure for a while; while the present generation build as if they expected the end of all things to be at hand. The "Independence" was struck with lightning fifteen years ago in her main mast, on the day of our national independence, July Fourth,—a forewarning of what was to come upon the nation. She is of fifteen to sixteen hundred tons burthen, with "timber enough in her," said our guide," "to build a good sloop of war." She has three gun decks, and a capacity for one hundred and twenty guns. She stands twenty-seven feet out of water, having a draft of thirteen feet under water. She is two feet thick through her sides, and solid at that. Her cross beams and timbers are eighteen inches square, and her knees and whole frame work of white oak, are put together so as to be a marvel to the beholder. Her capacity is for five hundred men, and provisions and military supplies and stores for a six month's cruise. The officers on board treated us kindly, inviting us to lunch, which we thankfully declined, having no desire, and furnished us with a guide, who led us into all parts of the vessel, even to the poisonous cells and hold. I left this vessel with many reflections on the past history of our republic, and the days which tried men on sea and land, and the thought that the day is near when we shall need no war vessels nor "gallant ships," nor implements of destruction, as "the prince of peace" will reign in a kingdom that will know

"No war, nor battle sound."

Thank the Lord!

The war ship "Pensacola" left this island Nov. 18th, for the Sandwich Islands and the sea, to rescue the unfortunate crews wrecked by the icebergs of the Arctic fleet. I saw her as she set sail on her benevolent voyage, under salute from the navy yard. It is to be hoped that she will have a prosperous voyage, and land at their homes those men who have lost all on the high seas.

ANNOYANCES.

Of these there are many in this land of beauty and plenty, indicating to us that "the better land" is beyond this temporal world. The effect of the curse is seen in the "California thistles." Woe be to the victim that touches them, as they have bearded thorns which enter deep into the flesh. Insects abound, and the most troublesome and dreaded is the flea. It is as common to talk of this little insect in company as of the weather. Ladies converse about their little enemy in the society of gentlemen, without a blush. A sister said to Mrs. F., "I was sorry for you the moment I heard of your coming to this coast, as I knew you would suffer by the fleas." These little pests, so difficult to capture, and so provoking to patience, attack both sexes, and all classes of persons indiscriminately, and without regard to time or place, and make one feel so uncomfortable that at times "a leave of absence" is desired, and an excuse is framed to leave the most inviting society for a season, that these little fellows may be hunted, killed, or routed from their entrenchments. I, myself, have been much favored, somehow, and can speak of but little personal experience as yet. Solomon says: "Whoso findeth a wife findeth a good thing," and this is true in more senses than one, and certainly a husband is favored in this instance; and I advise all the brethren who come to this land, to bring their wives with them if they wish to be favored with rest at night.

ADOBE.

What is this? says one. Well, come to this country and see. Elder Grant has tried it, they tell me, and he pronounced it "the worst kind of mud he ever saw;" having rubber soles to his boots, he was specially fitted to judge. I had been told that we must hold our protracted meeting at Vallejo before the rainy season came on, for it would be impossible for the people to get out to meeting through the mud. I did not regard this reason worthy of much notice, as I had seen congregations in the east, after a religious interest was excited, go through mud and water to reach meetings. But this "Adobe!" Well, let me say, that while at Vallejo, we had an experience in the mud. Though it had rained only one night, Mrs. F. and myself started out to visit friends by appointment. First there must be a preparation. Rubbers were brought, and strings sewed on to them, to keep them from slipping off the feet. All fitted, we launched out into the street, one half-dozen steps, and alas, our experience corroborates all the testimony we have heard concerning the "Adobe." First we would slip, then waddling like geese, and then try to detach a part of the real estate we were carrying off with us without paying for it, as we sought to cross lots; but how to get rid of this amount on each foot, that's the question. Wife proposes next time to carry with her a case-knife. She started off like a heroine for a while, but by and by I perceived her smiles and courage were gone, and she was sobered by the reality. Our journey's end found her dripping with sweat, and fatigued beyond what I had seen her for a long time. Then, dear woman, her eyes had to suffer for the heat induced by this exercise. A description of this mud is impossible. The Spanish built their houses and forts of this mud and straw, as in ancient times, and the roofing was of burnt adobe. Some modern houses are of this material.

The Advent cause is making headway on this coast. There is nothing really discouraging comparatively to other fields, but much to encourage faithful laborers to enter the harvest and gather sheaves for the Lord. The people listen with great interest, and are inquiring, and new believers are multiplied. There is much hostility on the part of some of the ministry and churches, and they say "This Jackass doctrine must be put down." But I tell them that the Jewish high priest, and priests, scribes and Pharisees, endeavored to do that once, but in doing so they put themselves down, and that they will probably find themselves in the same condition in the end. I warn them of the consequences of rejecting "the gospel of the kingdom," by referring to the Jewish nation and church. One clergyman, who aided Bro. Grant on this coast, declares the Advent doctrine "all bosh," I am informed. Well, these men are to be pitied, for their end is the end of "scoffers." Let us be patient, and pray for them, if peradventure their eyes may yet be opened. We have great liberty in preaching the word, and the people who hear us are thinking and intelligent citizens. We feel that the Lord has sent us to this coast to do a work for him, and that he is aiding us in it. Unworthy, the most unworthy, yet has he honored us with this blessed mission of heralding the last great truth on this far distant coast, and where the news can be spread among all the peoples of our globe, for they are here represented. The Lord be praised.

OUR TREASURES.

S. B. MITCHELL.

Let your treasures be laid up in heaven,
And your heart will also be there;
Though the ties of nature be riven,
It will help us our trials to bear.

When pressed by losses and crosses,
Remember the cross we must bear;
The treasure is more than our losses,
He sanctions our crosses with care.

When perils around thee do thicken,
And the waves of affliction run high,
Let your treasures be laid up in heaven,
Look to God for every supply.

ODDS AND ENDS.

It is oftentimes only necessary that the attention of a Christian mind should be drawn to the statements and arguments that are first given in favor of the truth on the Life and Death question, in order to ensure an acceptance of the correct views. Hence the propriety of studying to catch the earnest notice of the "orthodox," but as yet unprejudiced, or, at least, unbigoted christian. I have known old men and young men to hear the truth of man's nature on one day, and before a week had passed all doubt of the interpretations as advocated had been dissipated, and they rejoiced in the light exceedingly. They seemed to have been waiting only for some one to merely make mention of the truth,—so ready and apt were their hearts and intellects to understand sound doctrine.

One of the best popular documents that I have read on the main subject referred to is a hundred-page pamphlet, entitled "Forgotten Themes";—six lectures by Geo. A. Brown, reported by Wm. Kellaway. The familiar style, the local-item style (that best expresses it) is calculated, I think, to quickly engage and hold the attention of the simple-minded man who picks up the tract. With the many errors of typography corrected, it deserves a re-publication in this country. As for Whitmore's work, the more I read it, the more excellent reasoning I comprehend in it. The points are pursued in a straight, cool, business-like way that is provokingly satisfactory; surprising one with new juxtapositions and coherences of logic. Indeed, the literature of Bible truth is waking up. Hudson, Whitmore, Hastings, Taylor, Grant, Sheldon, and several others equally strong in facilities for statement and debate, have given us BOOKS worthy of a revival of truth—a revival which shall not be broken by the falling away of some.

"Introductions" of the Life and Death truth are now springing up from the seats of learning in both Europe and America. Prof. Ives, of Yale College, will soon be followed by a Harvard Professor; and a distinguished Professor in Williams College may soon "speak his mind" in an approving preface. And while from these great schools for our young men the voices of teachers are boldly raised for the right theology, the old gentlemen who do not yet agree with the writers will not dare to controvert, or attempt to reply.

Talking of prefaces: one of the best and most touching is the one prefixed to "Christ our Life,—a work not free from blemishes—by the Rev. Wm. Ker, A. M., incumbent of Tipton, Staffordshire, Eng. He says: "In these days the 'argumentum ad hominem' no longer has the weight it formerly possessed. Men will no longer consent to walk blindfold in the footsteps of their predecessors, but will have sound and solid reasons for all they are required to believe. The more so is this the case in the question of man's inherent immortality, seeing that it leads directly to the monstrous dogma of eternal TORMENT—so injurious to the character of the Most High; so utterly inconsistent with the equity of his government; and so subversive of all those ideas of justice, mercy, and truth, which were implanted in man's breast by the Creator himself. These grand and all-important questions are treated of in the following essay with so much acuteness of argument, combined with moderation of expression, that if the reader will only give it a fair and unprejudiced perusal, he will soon find the 'popular' theology, in respect of those subjects, to be not only without a shadow of foundation, but absolutely and utterly repugnant to the whole tenor and teaching of Holy Scripture."

The tract so heartily commended by the eminent Episcopalian—himself the author of many most valuable works of similar character—proposes for demonstration the following propositions:

"That man is not, by creation or natural constitution, immortal."

"That immortality or eternal life is, in the proper sense of the words, derived to man only through Christ."

"That those who do not believe the gospel, and have not the spirit of Christ, shall finally be destroyed, or die as to all life."

How delightfully expressive of the common experience on receiving the newly revived truths of the Bible are the following extracts from a letter written by a person in Melbourne, Australia, to the English Church clergyman, who is the author of "Popular Ideas of Immortality, and Eternal Punishment brought to the test of Scripture":—

"I have lately read your book with as much pleasure, and have gained from it so much instruction and comfort concerning matters which for years had been so dark, mysterious and depressing to me, in the popular theology of the day, that I cannot help writing to thank you as the instrument of conveying to me so much pleasure and profit; and to tell you how much I wish the book could be printed in proper covers, in a cheap form, and distributed by thousands, that the mistakes so common might be corrected, and the God of the Bible—the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ—be better understood and adored." "By the popular views of His government of men, and his dealings with them, he is indeed sadly misrepresented, and made to appear a hard Master—more calculated to call forth fear and terror than admiration, delight, and love. Your glorious book!—I cannot help calling it so—exposes these libels on the Holy One, the source of all justice, wisdom, truth, and love. The scales of prejudice drop from the eyes in reading it, and He is seen the Fountain of all good, the God of all truth, the wise and rightful King of men; who will be, must be, glorified in all, saved or lost." "What a motive, too, to thrill through the hearts of believers in Jesus—making them in deep earnest to win perishing souls for him, and to communicate to all unsaved the knowledge of his blessed gospel—is the fact that life and immortality ONLY come to men through his blood. Ever since the Lord called me, a child of twelve years of age, now twenty-six years of age, I have always yearned over unconverted souls, and fervently desired their salvation; and been stirred to speak, and write, and visit, and do anything I could think of to reach hearts in His name. But I never felt so stirred up as since getting this idea from your book—that if they do miss salvation by Christ, they are all dead men, doomed to complete destruction. Life, life, eternal life, by the blood of Jesus! How can those who have it be absorbed in anything else but how they may communicate it to others?"

While our American popular preachers—Beecher, Kirk, and others—(orthodox men, too)—are preaching away the idea of a literal judgment, leading clergymen in England are advancing the consideration of the approaching day. The Dean of Westminster, the learned Richard Trench, has to say in a recently published Advent Sunday Sermon:

"We enter this day upon a period which the church has specially dedicated to the contemplation of the coming of our Lord and Savior—in which she would have us devoutly carry back our thoughts to his first coming in great humility, to the cradle of Bethlehem, with a few poor shepherds around it; in which she would have us carry on our thoughts to his coming again in his majesty, to the throne of his glory, with thousands and ten thousands of angels waiting to fulfill his commands. Following, then, these plain leadings of our church, I propose a little to occupy your attention to-day with the second of these stupendous events, with that yet in the womb of time, but ever hastening to its birth, which shall be, as Christ and his apostles ever taught, the winding up of the present age, the clearing of all the ways of God, the complete redemption of his servants, the final destruction of his foes. And yet I cannot conceal from myself the difficulty, I may say the danger, of my subject. We have so often talked and heard talk about a judgment day, and this with so little of earnest addressing ourselves to the tasks which such a day, rightly believed, would impose upon us, that in just punishment of those hollow, unreal words of ours, we have come, I will not say to disbelieve in such a day, but so to believe in it that it exercises the very slightest influence on our lives. The glorious retributions of that day do not rouse us to more active well-doing. The dreadful terrors of that day do not drive us to that one hope of sinners, the cross of Christ. * * * As I have in each preceding discourse taken for my argument some office or dignity of our Lord, I shall not now depart from my rule, but, as this day suggests, consider the glorious advent of our Lord and Savior, or Christ the Judge of all men—at the same time not leaving out, as the Scripture never leaves out, the Judge, who is the Savior as well; the King, who is also the Brother, and indeed because a Brother therefore a King. * * * *

"There are indeed who see a light breaking, even for them, whom that day shall enfold in its darkness; and far, far off, the faint glimmering of another dawn for them beyond the blackness and darkness which shall encompass them now. I cannot see it in God's word, but, on the contrary, very much which excludes it; which proclaims that for those who reject the gospel of his grace, there remaineth, when once their day of grace has ended, no other sacrifice for sin than that which they have wilfully despised and rejected. And to my mind, our life would lose much of its solemn earnestness, its awful meaning, if I did not believe that within those brief limits which shut it in on either side, the issues of eternity were being decided, and we making our choice which must be ours forever; choosing for God, or choosing against him; to be ever with Christ, or to be ever separated from him; if I did not feel, brethren, that within these narrow lists, which yet are not too narrow for this great decision, everything must be gained, or everything be lost."

Indeed, what a life is this! A bubble, if measured one way; a transcendent opportunity, if surveyed from the hill of Zion. c.

"WHO KNOWS?"

H. BEADLE.

BRO. GRANT:—I desire to submit a few thoughts in relation to the above query, as propounded by Bro. Leslie, in a late number of the Crisis; viz., where was the Son of God after he said, Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit," and gave up the ghost?

I understand the querist as having special reference to the whereabouts, state, or condition of Christ during the interim from the giving up of the ghost to his resurrection, though the point is not thus distinctly stated. Certain it is, there can be no question in the mind of any christian person as regards the whereabouts of Christ after his resurrection. Hence, according to our apprehension of his query, we will proceed to its consideration; remarking in the first place that upon a right understanding of the subject directly involved in said query, hinge other topics with regard to which there exists a great diversity of opinion. Therefore we hope to be indulged in a little more latitude than might otherwise be admissible.

It is not our purpose to tell the reader what we know, nor yet to elaborate our opinions. We desire rather to lay before him certain premises, from which we deduce our conclusions. If so be our premises shall be accepted as true, then our conclusions must follow. If, on the other hand, they are at fault, we trust that some, or any brother cognizant of the fact, will have the goodness to show us wherein, in order that we may adjust our conclusions in accordance with truth as manifest in nature, and revealed in the word of God.

The correlative topics, to which we have made allusion, are—"the state of the dead," "the eternity, pre-existence, or personality of Christ anterior to his first advent, as the babe of Bethlehem," when and whereby he was "made like unto his brethren," thus becoming subject to all things appertaining to his brethren—sin only excepted. It being appointed unto men once to die, therefore Christ being the Son of man, he too must die, notwithstanding he did repeatedly pray the Father if it were possible that this cup might pass from him. But nay; the Father, though infinite in love, wisdom and power, could not devise, or provide an escape, without compromising the verity of his word. Hence the Son of man, yea, the Son of God, in his extremity was left to exclaim, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" Then giving up the ghost he died.

Death, what is it? constitutes the point on which hinge the speculative and practical bearings of our subject. In order, however, to a right understanding of what constitutes death, we must first seek to understand what constitutes life and its concomitants, as regards man. In the first place, we remark that life is not an entity, or substance. It is rather a result, or state of being, the product of normal action on the part of an organism, through which, or whereby life is only manifested; separate and apart from which we can conceive no idea of life. Hence, organization may be regarded as the head of life; which life is the product of normal action on the part of its head or organism. Death, as well as life, is simply a result, which arises from, or is dependent upon, an interruption or cessation of functions on the part of organized living beings. Such is death, the negation, so to speak, of life.

Having thus briefly considered these two important points of our subject, we further remark, that as in connection with the body we have life, so, also, in connection with body and life we have wisdom and power; neither of which can exist separate and apart from a body, or head, and life, any more than we can have life independent of organization. Wisdom being a property, or quality of mind, and power simply ability to perform, therefore neither of them can be regarded as entities. They, too, can have no existence or manifestation save in connection with life and organization. In the extinction of life we have death, in the which both wisdom and power vanish away. Then is it an accomplished fact, even as it is written, "the dead know not any thing"; and again, "there is no knowledge nor device in the grave whither thou goest."

In view of the foregoing, we conclude that the nature and power of death in relation to Christ was precisely the same as it is in connection with his brethren, save in this, God did not "suffer his holy one to see corruption." Paul to the Hebrews (13: 20) says: "Now the God of peace that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus." When? On the third day after he exclaimed, "it is finished, and "gave up the ghost." Therefore, we conclude again that Christ, the Son of God, being dead for three days, could have had no existence during this time as a living personality or entity. Were such the case, then it would not have been true that God brought him "from the dead." Hence, we claim that Christ had no existance as a living personality during the interim heretofore stated.

CHRIST WONDERFUL IN HIS VICTORIES.

Christ was wonderful in his victories. First, over the forces of nature. The sea is a crystal sepulchre. . . . Recent travelers tell us that Galilee, when aroused in a storm, is overwhelming. And yet that sea crouched in his presence and licked his feet. He knew all the waves and the wind. When he frowned they fled. The heel of his foot made no indentation on the solidified water. Medical science has wrought great changes in rheumatic limbs and diseased blood; but when the muscles are entirely withered, no human power can restore them; and when a limb is once dead, it is dead. But here is a paralytic, his hand lifeless, Christ says to him, "Stretch forth thy hand," and he stretches it forth.

In the eye infirmary, how many diseases of that delicate organ have been cured. But Jesus says to one born blind, "Be open!" and the light of heaven rushes through gates that have never before been opened. The frost or an axe may kill a tree; but Jesus smites one dead with a word.

What human voice could command a school of fish? Yet here is a voice that marshals the scaly tribes, until in the place where they had let down the net, and pulled it up with no fish in it, they let it down again, and the disciples lay hold and begin to pull, when, by reason of the multitude of fish, the net brake.

Nature is his servant. The flowers—he twisted them into his sermons; the winds—they were his lullaby when he slept in the boat; the rain—it hung glittering on the thick foliage of the parables; the star of Bethlehem—it sang a Christmas carol over his birth; the rocks—they beat a dirge at his death.

Behold his victory over the grave! The hinges of the family vault become very rusty, because they are never opened except to take another in. There is a knob on the outside of the door of the sepulchre, but none on the inside. Here comes the Conqueror of death. He enters that realm and says, "Daughter of Jarius, sit up;" and she sat up. To Lazarus, "Come forth;" and he came forth. To the widow's son he said, "Get up from that bier;" and he goes home with mother. Then Jesus snatched up the keys of death, and hung them to his girdle, and cried, until all the graveyards of the earth heard him: "O death! I will be thy plagues! O grave! I will be thy destruction!"—Herald of Salvation.

POVERTY AND DISTRESS.

F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

Not for myself do I plead at this time, though still numbered among the "poor of this world." I have a short story of suffering to tell, concerning a family that one year ago lived near the "heart of the commonwealth," so called, and who were also formerly our near neighbors. The family consisted of only two persons, an aged woman over ninety years old, and her daughter. They lived very much retired, and were but little known, so no one took pains to inquire after their welfare. After a long period of privation, after being reduced to extremities, the aged woman died for want of food! Starved to death in this land of plenty. How many who read this would have ministered to her wants, had they known of her condition in time. Thousands certainly would have been willing, but that family is now beyond the reach of sympathy and aid.

But I can tell you of one equally needy, and more deserving, one whom you well know, as one of the lambs of the flock, constantly suffering beyond the power of language to describe. Shall she be left to suffer with want—want of things needful for her in her helpless condition? Brother, sister, will you answer this by writing to Sr. L. B. Weaver, North Dana, Mass.

"This is for your Health."

GETTING RESTED EVERY DAY—METHOD OF GETTING SLEEP.—Every person who would live well should get so thoroughly rested once every twenty-four hours as to feel bright, fresh, active and strong. Many do not do this, but go on feeling tired, over-tired, over-worked, ill-at-ease, sick, never being rested from morning till night. No course could be worse. If a man wishes to last a reasonable number of years on this globe, and live in peace and comfort, he should get rested every day of his life. Many resort to stimulants, when they had better go to bed and to sleep. Sleep does not always come easily. The brain sometimes loses the power to stop thinking when the proper hour arrives for sleep, but keeps on, like the heart, acting involuntarily. How can such people get sleep is one of the most important questions they can consider. Shall they resort to choral hydrate, morphine, tobacco, or as some do, ale, beer, or other alcoholic drinks? We advise no person to take poisonous drugs on his own account, but there are agencies of great value, better for common daily use than all the drugs in the world, which every person can learn to use without harm to himself, providing he is reasonably intelligent. One of the agencies is water. A tepid sitz bath taken just before going to bed, of such a temperature as shall be agreeable, is a beautiful sedative for very many persons, preparing them for sleep that is sound and refreshing. It may be used for ten or fifteen minutes, or even longer if agreeable. It should be taken in a warm room, and such portions of the body as are not in the water well covered with a blanket.

Still another remedy, and often more convenient, is a mild current of electricity, continuing from five to thirty minutes. The positive pole may be held in one hand, or by means of a sponge placed over the stomach and abdomen, and moved about from point to point, while the negative pole may be placed at the feet. This is one of the best methods of producing a condition favorable to sleep that is known, and after a little study can be adopted by almost any one. Every house should have an electrical apparatus, for electricity carefully and wisely used has great value for many purposes.

Still another agent, not yet very well understood, and one not to be advised except it can be given by those who know its use, is magnetism, by means of passes over the head or simply holding the hands of the person to be influenced. In a future number we may say more on this point.

Still another agent, is a very short shower-bath, or a hot foot-bath, or holding the hands, if hot, in cold water; or if the hands are cool, holding them in hot water; or putting a cold wet compress over the abdomen.

The two best remedies, however, are the sitz bath at bed-time and the use of electricity. Whatever is done should be done with judgment and care.—Herald of Health.

THE LAWS OF LIFE.—1. Temperance in all things, whether physical, mental, moral, affectional, or religious.

2. Justice to all creatures that be—justice being the exercise of precisely the same rules of life, conduct, thought, or speech that we would desire to receive from others.

3. Gentleness in speech and act—never needlessly wounding the feelings of others by harsh words or deeds; never hurting or destroying aught that breathes, save for the purposes of sustenance or self-defense.

4. Truth in every word or thought spoken or acted; but reservation of harsh or unpleasing truths, where they would needlessly wound the feelings of others.

5. Charity—charity in thought, striving to excuse the failings of others; charity in speech, veiling the failings of others; charity in deeds, wherever, whenever, and to whomsoever the opportunity offers.

6. Almsgiving—visiting the sick and comforting the afflicted in every shape that our means admit of and the necessities of our fellow creatures demand.

7. Self-sacrifice, wherever the interests of others are to be benefited by our endurance.

8. Temperate yet firm defense of our views of right, and protest against wrong, whether for ourselves or others.

9. Industry in following any calling we may be engaged in, or in devoting some portion of our time, when otherwise not obliged to do so, to the service and benefit of others.

10. Love—above and beyond all, seeking to cultivate in our own families, kindred, friends, and among all mankind generally, the spirit of that true and tender love which can think, speak, and act no wrong to any creature living; remembering always that where love is, all the other principles of right are fulfilled beneath it, influenced and embodied in its monitions.—Ibid.

A SURE REMEDY FOR A COUGH.—Take a handful of hops, put it into three pints of hot water; let it boil one half hour, or until the strength is out. Then strain, and add one and one half cups of best kind of molasses, and one cup of white sugar. Then boil down slowly in a bright dish, or enamelled kettle, to about one quart. Then bottle up, and it is ready for use. Drink a little when you cough.

BREATHING THROUGH THE NOSTRILS.—There are some simple rules which we may, with much advantage, convert into habits. One of them is this: when breathing air that is dusty, or ill-smelling, or otherwise impure, draw the breath slowly through the nostrils. In this way the dust or other impurities are in part arrested in the moist and narrow nasal passages, and are prevented from being thrown upon the lungs. When we breathe through the mouth, they are carried more directly thither. Many would lengthen their lives by resolutely breathing through the nostrils.

WARM BATHS FOR CHILDREN.—A physician, in a very sensible article upon bathing, says: "For the 'wind in the stomach' children are thought to have, for their tiresome crying, and for the restlessness and worrying at night with which they are afflicted, if the warm bath were resorted to oftener, and the dosing of soothing syrups and worse nostrums less, it would be better for the children."

THE HALF-WAY PLACE.

"John," said the teacher, "have you found the beloved disciple's place, in Jesus' bosom? Are you with Him to-day?"

John's eyes and glad smile said even more than his "I hope so."

"And Fred, how is it with you!"

"I guess, if there's any half-way place, I'm there," said Fred, who had been halting some time between Christ and the world.

"And how long do you mean to stay there!"

"I don't know. I can't get any further."

"Ah, you mistake. Where is the half-way place? Where would it have been to the prodigal, had he stopped there? Still a long way from home. No father in sight. No home near. No food. No clothes. No fatted calf. No golden ring. The feast not made. He never would have heard those precious words, My son was lost, and is found. He would, still have been lost. Half-way home would have been no better than the far country. But there is no half-way place. Half a christian is still a sinner. Half way to heaven is nowhere near the pearly gates. Half way to Christ is still on Satan's ground, for 'he that is not with me is against me,' Christ wants your whole heart or none.

"Do you like half-way friends?"

"No; I despise them."

"Do you suppose Christ wishes such friends? Do not stop any longer where you are. If the Lord be God, serve him; if Baal, follow him.

"The half-way place, if such there be, is Satan's favorite ground."—S. S. Times.

ACTING A LIE.

Ralph Royster ventured one day to toss his ball in the parlor. He knew it was wrong, but he wanted to do it, and he did. Presently the ball fell upon the table, and mashed a delicate glass which covered a beautiful collection of skeleton leaves.

"O," cried Ralph, "what shall I do?"

After looking at the fragments, with a rueful face for a few moments he left the room feeling as if his heart were sinking down to his heels with a heavy load of guilt and fear with which his disobedient act had loaded it. As he passed into the hall, the cat rubbed against his leg. A bad thought arose in his breast, and putting the cat into the parlor, he shut her in, and said—

"Stay there, Tabby! Mamma will think you broke that glass, and I shall escape a scolding. Hurrah for you old Tabby! You are good for getting a fellow out of a scrape, if for nothing else."

At the tea-table, that afternoon, Mrs. Royster said to her husband—

"Pa, you must send Tabby away. I found her in the parlor to-day, and she had been on the table, and broken the glass which covered those skeleton leaves,."

Ralph blushed from his chin to the roots of his hair. His heart beat very quickly. The voice within whispered, "Be manly, be true. Confess that you broke it."

But Ralph was stubbornly silent. The poor cat was drowned for his misdeed, and he escaped a scolding by acting a lie.

EARLY PIETY.—"A person converted in youth," says John Angell James, "is like the sun rising on a summer's morning to shine through the long, bright day; but a person converted late in life is like the evening star,—a lovely object of christian contemplation, but not appearing till the day is closing, and then but for a little while."

IF a playmate ask you to commit sin, don't do it. If you are tempted by any desire in your own mind to do what you know to be wrong, don't do it. If you have done wrong, and think of telling a lie to hide it, don't do it; it will be adding sin to sin. If you think you will frighten another just for fun, don't do it.

THE PENALTY OF GOD'S LAW.

No. 4.

H. H. HALL.

"Destroy" and "destruction." Webster says, "To demolish, to pull down; to annihilate a thing by demolishing or burning, as to destroy a city; to bring to nought; to annihilate; to kill; to slay; to extirpate; in general, to put an end to; to annihilate a thing, or the form in which it exists." These definitions are as positive as the most rigid destructionist could desire; and it is the height of folly for any one to say, as is said, that destruction is not annihilation. To say, as many do, that nothing can be annihilated, or that the wicked cannot be, because man cannot annihilate matter, is in the face of Webster's definitions simply ridiculous. But does the word destroy, as used in the Bible, always mean to annihilate? We answer, no. This is especially true of the Old Testament. Aaron Pick, Prof. of Hebrew and Chaldee of the University of Prague, in his Bible Student's Concordance, in which he gives the literal meaning of every word, and where found, puts down thirty-eight different Hebrew words, all rendered by the word destroy; while there is quite a difference in the signification, showing that other and more proper words should have been employed in many instances by the translators. For the satisfaction of those who have not this very valuable work, we give a few of these words with their definitions. "Sopho, to end; shokhath, to spoil, destroy; yorash, to drive away, succeed; notats, to break down; korath, to cut, to cut off; avad, to lose, to miss; shikail, to deprive, to bereave; bola, to swallow; asham, to cause guilt; shodad, to break in pieces; mokhoh, to blot out, erase; dako, to bruise; mooth, to cause death; khorav, to destroy; koloh, to consume, finish, make an end; shomad, to annihilate, to destroy, to ruin; tsomath (hiph.), to annihilate."

We see in the light of the above that the argument so often made, that because the word destroy, as used in the Bible, does not always mean to annihilate, that therefore it it does not necessarily when used in connection with the punishment of the wicked, is not well taken, and falls harmless to the ground. We will now quote a few passages where tsomath and shomad are used, proving positively that the wicked are to be literally annihilated. Ps. 18: 40—"Thou hast also given me the necks of mine enemies, that I might [tsomath] annihilate them that hate me." This is considered a prophecy of what Messiah would do; for when Jesus the nobleman returns he will say, "Those mine enemies, which would not that I should reign over them, bring hither, and slay them before me." Luke 19: 27. Thus they are annihilated. Ps. 94: 21–13—"They gather themselves together against the soul of the righteous, . . . but the Lord is my defense, . . . he shall bring upon them their own iniquity, and shall [tsomath] annihilate them in their own wickedness; yea, the Lord our God shall [tsomath] annihilate them." Ps. 101: 5, 8—"Whoso privily slandereth his neighbor, him will I annihilate" [tsomath]. "I will early annihilate all the wicked of the land; that I may annihilate all wicked doers from the city of the Lord." This is a manifest prediction of Messiah's work; and tsomath is used three times. Ps. 143: 12—"Of thy mercy annihilate mine enemies; and annihilate all them that afflict my soul; for I am thy servant." Tsomath in both places. In these passages the word destroy and the words cut off are used by the translators; in the last one, both are found. Ps. 145: 20—"The Lord preserveth all them that love him; but the wicked will he destroy" [shomad, to annihilate].

How can christians contradict Jehovah, and say the wicked will be "preserved," even unto everlasting life in torment, when only those that "love him" are to be preserved, and the wicked destroyed? Ps. 92: 7—"When the wicked spring as the grass, and when all the workers of iniquity do flourish; it is that they shall be destroyed forever" [shomad—annihilated forever]. No restoration here; it is an everlasting punishment then; for "he that being often reproved, hardeneth his neck, shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy." Prov. 29: 1. Ps. 52: 5; 37: 9–11—"God shall likewise destroy thee forever, . . . and root thee out of the land of the living." "For evil doers shall be cut off . . . for yet a little while, and the wicked shall not be: yea, thou shalt diligently consider his place, and it shall not be. But the meek shall inherit the earth [not heaven], and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace."

Here is positive proof that the wicked are to be destroyed so that they shall not be, shall not exist; or, as Obadiah expresses it, "they shall be as though they had not been." Remarkable language, if the wicked are to live forever. Ps. 37: 38—"But the transgressors shall be destroyed [shomad] together." Isa. 1: 28—"And the destruction of the transgressors and of the sinners shall be together, and they that forsake the Lord shall be consumed." Not destroyed one at a time as men die, according to the popular error; but together, all at the same time, in the day of judgment; for "the wicked is reserved to the day of destruction; they shall be brought forth [from their graves where they are reserved] to the day of wrath." Job 21: 30. And "The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptation, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished."—2 Pet. 2: 9. If they are reserved unto the day of judgment to be punished, then they are not punished before that day, and the papal dogma of suffering souls in purgatory, and the orthodox doctrine of immortal souls going to the torments of hell at death, is all a fable.

Paul says (1 Cor. 3: 17,) "If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy." Not his happiness, as the Orthodox—not his sins, as the Universalists say; but him shall God destroy. It is true that sin will be destroyed; for the apostle declares (1 Jno. 3: 8), "For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil." The works of the devil are sin; and in order to destroy sin, the sinner must be destroyed. As Universalists do not believe in the second coming of Christ to judge the world, and close up the gospel age, but do believe, as we understand, that the earth will forever teem with untold millions of sinners—though flying off to heaven when they die—pray let them tell us when, and how, with such a view, can "the works of the devil," or sin, be destroyed! And will our Orthodox brethren tell us how sin is to be destroyed, if sinners are to live forever in torment, and forever sin, as they believe! Evidently they do not believe that sin will ever be destroyed; thus rejecting the plain declaration of the apostle because it overthrows the doctrine of endless misery. If the works of the devil are to be destroyed, as Paul declares, then the devil also must be destroyed with the wicked; and so the apostle testifies (Heb. 2: 14), "That through death be [Christ] might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil." We will say to our Orthodox and Universalists friends, that we do not think it is the "happiness" or the "sins" of the devil that is to be destroyed, but "him," the devil himself. The apostle places this destruction in the future, but the devil's happiness was destroyed when he first rebelled. Then when God declares in so many places that he will destroy the wicked, why not believe it?

But let us hear what Paul says further (Phil. 3: 18, 19)—"For many walk of whom I have told you often, and now tell you weeping, that they are the enemies of the cross of Christ, whose end is destruction." It is surpassing strange that Paul should thus weep, if only the sins of those wicked men were to be destroyed! "Whose end is destruction." If the wicked are to live forever, they have no end, and this language is absurd. 2 Thess. 1: 7–10—"And to you who are troubled. rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be punished with [everlasting torment? no, but] everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power; when he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe . . . in that day." It is supposed that the words of Christ, "these shall go away into everlasting punishment" [kolasin aionion]. settles the question as to the immortality of the soul, on the ground that the wicked must live forever in order to receive everlasting punishment; thus assuming that nothing can be punishment but the infliction of pain, a most absurd assumption, as we shall see. The truth is, the doctrine of endless misery is founded on the assumption that the soul is immortal; and when we call for the proof of this assumption, we are referred to this language of Jesus as the strongest that can be produced. Their argument then stands thus:—

Assumption—The soul is immortal.

Inference—therefore, the wicked will have endless torment.

Inference—The wicked will have endless torment, therefore the soul is immortal.

The inference is here founded on the assumption, and then the assumption is attempted to be proved by the inference. This, as any logical mind can see, is reasoning in a circle, and a begging of the question.

Kolasin, rendered punishment, means, says Greenfield, "chastisement, punishment"; and punishment means, in addition to the infliction of pain, the loss of any thing, deprivation, etc. Punishment is a penalty for the violation of natural, human and divine laws. Under our laws we have fines imposed, which is loss of money; and specified periods of imprisonment, which is loss of liberty; officers in our army are frequently deprived of their commands as a punishment for some misdemeanor; then comes the death penalty, which does not consist so much in pain as the loss of life. Now what is the punishment for violating God's law? Whatever it is, it is certainly everlasting. Is it endless torment? If so, it is very remarkable that Christ did not say so. But Paul tells us in the above quoted passage what it is. "Who shall be punished [not "banished"] with everlasting destruction." Paul, by the infallible pen of inspiration, here declares that the punishment of the wicked shall be everlasting destruction. But destruction is not torment, and death is not life, and all the quibbling sophistry in the world cannot make them so.

The candid reader will now see, in the light of our proof texts and arguments, that to rely upon the oft-quoted language—"the smoke of their torment ascendeth up forever and ever" [aionon]—language applied to those only who "worship the beast and his image, and receive his mark in their foreheads or in their hands"; "they shall be tormented day and night forever and ever"—language applied only to the devil, the beast and false prophet, as proof of the immortality of the soul, will never do; as we have already shown such reasoning in a circle is a begging of the question. Learned theologians know that the Greek word aion—the root of aionios rendered everlasting—or aionon, rendered forever and ever in the above quotations, means simply "duration, finite or infinite; a period of duration, past or future; time, age, lifetime; the world." They also know that this term of itself affords no proof of endless duration; its duration depending upon to what it is applied; as Bishop Newton says of the term everlasting, "its duration is limited by the nature of the thing"; so forever and ever, when applied to immortal beings, or when used in connection with the words life and live, it has for its meaning endless duration. And when any person will find in the Bible where it is said the wicked shall have "everlasting life," or shall "live forever," then we shall believe in endless misery. But we have positive proof that these words are used in a limited sense in the Bible. It is not necessary to speak of the "everlasting mountains" that are to melt at the presence of Jehovah, and thus come to an end; or of the everlasting priesthood of Aaron, that has long since passed away; or of what the prophet (Isa. 34: 9, 10) when speaking of the land of Idumea says—"The smoke thereof shall go up forever, . . . and none shall pass through it forever and ever"; for these are familiar to the Bible reader; and such can see that these for ever and evers sometimes come to an end. Hence such passages do not prove the immortality of the soul.

A SERMON.

CHRISTIAN UNITY.

C. E. BARNES.

> "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me."—JOHN 17: 20, 21.

These words are a part of the prayer offered by our Savior just prior to his crucifixion. Knowing well the trials his apostles would meet in the performance of their duties, he is led to solemnly commit them to the care of their heavenly Parent. Knowing, too, the weakness of human nature, he foresaw the distracting influence that would arise even from among themselves, and knowing the evil results of strife and division, he prays, "Holy Father, keep through thine own name those whom thou hast given me, that they may be one, as we are." v. 11.

Knowing, further, that evil will surround his people, even to the end of probation, he prays for them also. I pray not for these apostles alone, "but for all them also which shall believe on me through their word, that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." In getting, therefore, an understanding of this oneness, I shall show (1) the oneness existing between Christ and the Father; (2) the oneness that should exist between Christ's people, and (3) the effect such union would have.

I. The oneness existing between Christ and the Father.

That they are declared to be "one," must be evident to every reader of the New Testament. Said Jesus, "I and my Father are one." John 10: 30. And in the chapter from which the text is selected, he says, "The glory which thou gavest me I have given them; that they may be one even as we are one." v. 22. Here the fact is declared most plainly; but in the interpretation of these passages we are to understand them in such a manner as will be consistent with the general tenor of Scripture, and also in harmony with reason and common sense; for, in the words of Tillotson (Vol. 1, p. 19)—"We desire no better evidence that any man is wrong, than to hear him declare against reason, and so acknowledge that reason is against him." The oneness, then, here brought to view must be understood in one of two ways; it is either a oneness in identity, personality and being, or in love, design and harmony. That it is not a oneness of being or personality, I shall prove by showing (1) that God exists in one person, and not in three, and (2) that Christ is essentially and totally distinct from the Father in person or being.

1. That God exists in one person and not in three.

The common doctrine of the Trinity, as now held, is oftentimes said to be of apostolic origin, and many of them who believe it; are ready to brand as infidels those who dare call it in question; while the truth is, that in doubting the theory of "three persons in one God," we are doubting merely the decisions of councils, assembled centuries after the apostles had fallen on sleep and seen corruption.

In speaking of "the doctrine of three persons in the Godhead," Mosheim (Vol. 1, p. 124, Cent. 4), says it had "in the three preceding centuries, happily escaped the vain curiosity of human researches, and been left undefined and undetermined by any particular set of ideas. . . . The exact relations of these persons to each other, and the nature of the distinction that subsists between them are matters that hitherto were neither disputed nor explained, and with respect to which the church had, consequently, observed a profound silence. Nothing was dictated on this head to the faith of christians, nor were there any modes of expression prescribed as requisite to be used in speaking of this mystery."

In the early part of this century, a presbyter named Arius in opposition to Alexander, bishop of Alexandria, affirmed "that the Son was totally and essentially distinct from the Father; that he was the first and noblest of those beings whom God had created out of nothing, . . . and therefore inferior to the Father in nature and dignity."—Ib.

The dispute between these two theologians causing considerable commotion, a council was convoked by the Emperor Constantine in the year 325 A. D. at Nice, in Bithynia, to settle the question, and [illegible] debates, and violent efforts of the two parties, the doctrine of Arius was condemned; Christ was declared consubstantial, or of the same essence with the Father."—Ib. Or, as it is expressed in the Nicene creed, "Our Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God, the only begotten of the Father, that is of the substance of the Father, God of God, and light of light, true God of true God, begotten not made. . . . We believe also in the Holy Spirit." Here we see that in opposition to the Arian supposition, they said Christ was "begotten, not made," and then expressed their belief in the Holy Spirit, without expressing any thing as to its personality. Thus we learn that there was no "Trinity" believed in up to this time.

A few years later, a certain bishop, named Macedonius, taught that the Holy Ghost was "a divine energy diffused throughout the universe, and not a person distinct from the Father and the Son." This also causing commotion, a council was assembled by Theodosius, at Constantinople, in 381 A. D., in speaking of which, Mosheim says:

"A hundred and fifty bishops, who were at this council, gave the finishing touch to what the council of Nice had left imperfect, and fixed in a full and determinate manner the doctrine of three persons in one God, which is still received among the generality of christians." Vol. 1, p. 128.

Thus we find the birth-place of that doctrine, to deny which, is considered heresy and infidelity by those who believe it. But in doubting it, we are not doubting an article of apostolic faith. Our faith in what the apostles taught is firm and unwavering.

But to the proof that God exists as or in one person. In comforting his people, the Lord says through Isaiah, "Fear thou not; for I am with thee; be not dismayed, for I am thy God; I will strengthen thee, yea, I will help thee; yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness." ch. 4: 10. Here the Lord God is addressing his people, and he addresses them as but one person: "I am with thee;" "I will help thee" "with the right hand of my righteousness." If in "the unity of the Godhead" there were three divine persons, these pronouns should be plural; it should be "we will help thee," "we are with thee." Further, this one person says, "I am thy God;" but if the Trinitarian theory were true, it should read "we are thy God." Again, in ch. 43: 14, 14, we read, "Thus saith the Lord your Redeemer, the Holy One of Israel, . . . I am the Lord, your Holy One, the Creator of Israel, your King." Here it is stated as plainly as words can state it, that the Lord is "One." Were the other theory true we should expect to read of the "Holy Three," but as we do not, therefore we conclude that in "the unity of the Godhead" there is but one person, and not three. These two texts are but samples; hundreds of a similar import can be readily produced.

We find the doctrine as clearly stated in the New Testament. Said Paul, "One God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all." Eph. 4: 6. Here Paul most certainly designates the Father as the one God "who is above all." But if the Son and Holy Ghost be the one God as truly as the Father is, with what propriety could Paul declare the Father to be such to the exclusion of the other two? The fact that he does do so is further proof that God is one. Again, we have his faith stated in these words—"To us there is but one God, the Father." 1 Cor. 8: 6. In opposition to which our orthodox friends say, "To us there is but one God: the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost."

But that testimony which is most conclusive, is that of our Savior. In his prayer to the Father, he uses these words: "This is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." John 17: 3. Here the Son addresses the Father, using the pronouns "thee" and "thou" in the singular number, and designates this one person "the only true God." What Trinitarian would declare his belief to be that the Father is "the only true God?" Would he not affirm rather, that the Son and Holy Ghost are just as really and essentially the "true God" as the Father? Thus we can see wherein the current orthodoxy differs from our Savior's teaching: It declares the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost to be the only true God, while Jesus gives this title only to the Father: "that they might know thee the only true God." Thus the point is gained: God exists in one person, and not in three.

2. That Christ is essentially and totally distinct from the Father in person or being.

The truthfulness of this proposition follows as a natural consequence from what has already been said, as it will be seen by all that if God is one person, the Son must be distinct. Indeed, this latter conclusion the Trinitarians admit. But with what consistency they can admit his distinct personality, and still claim an identity of being, is what surpasses human understanding; for if a distinct personality does not constitute a distinct being, then what would constitute one? If the term "person," when used in speaking of the Trinity, is not meant to denote a being, then I would ask, what does it mean? If three persons are not three beings, I would ask, what else is needed to make them such?

The New Testament gives the Son an identity of being. His own words to Mary after his resurrection give it him—"Touch me not; for I am not yet ascended to my Father; but go to my brethren, and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father, and your Father; and to my God, and your God." John 20: 17. If the Son, being on earth, and the Father in heaven, do not constitute two beings, then farewell to all attempts at identification in the future.

Just prior to his death, Stephen was blessed with a sight of heaven, even the "holy of holies," in testifying of which, he used these words: "Behold, I see the heavens opened, and the Son of man standing on the right hand of God." Acts 7: 56. If one person, standing at the right hand of another person, does not constitute two beings, then how could a separate identity be established?

John the Revelator, in vision, saw a certain one sitting upon a throne, whom to look at was "like a jasper and sardine stone," and the four beasts "rest not day and night saying, Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty, which was, and is, and is to come." Rev. 4: 5, 8. In his right hand was a book, which none could open, until one like to a Lamb as it had been slain, "came and took the book out of the right hand of him that sat upon the throne." ch. 5: 6, 7. Here is one person or being seated upon a throne, who is called "Lord God Almighty," and another one coming and taking a book from his hand. If this transaction does not present to our minds two beings, then we may as well cease all attempts to gain instruction by the medium of written language.

To claim an identity of being to be the oneness subsisting between the Father and Son, is to assert that the begotten and he who begat are the same; that the sender and sent are the same; that Stephen saw Jesus standing at his own right hand; that the one sitting on the throne holding a book, is identical with the one who came and took it out of his hand. In a word, it is to declare a doctrine of which a learned Trinitarian writer has said, "Were it not to be adored as a mystery, it would be exploded as a contradiction." —Dr. South's Sermon, Vol. 3, p. 210.

Since, therefore, we find the oneness to be not in identity of person or being, it must be a oneness in design, harmony, and love. Such a oneness does exist between them; the entire life of our Savior manifested it. Under all circumstances he was submissive to the Father's will; not once do we hear a murmur or complaint; on the contrary he says, "My meat is to do the will of him that sent me, and to finish his work." John 4: 34. And in the hour of his deepest distress, in sweet submissiveness he says, "Not my will, but thine be done." Luke 22: 42.

This is the oneness spoken of in the text. He does not pray that his people may be molded into one being, possessing three personalities, but that they may be one in purpose, harmony, and love, even as the Father and he are one. This leads to the second part of the text.

II. The oneness that should exist between God's people.

Of all the peoples in the world, Christ's people should be most closely united. Children of the same Father; subjects of the same King; redeemed by the same Savior's blood; heirs of the same kingdom; led and influenced by the same Spirit; should they not be united lovingly in the great christian warfare? In view of this christian union the Psalmist exclaims, "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity. It is like the precious ointment upon the head, that ran down upon the beard, even Aaron's beard; that went down to the skirts of his garments." Ps. 133: 1, 2. A love that would unite the entire christian body, is to be desired. A warm, fraternal love would lead christians to share one another's joys and sorrows; they would "rejoice with them that do rejoice, and weep with them that weep." They would put on, as the elect of God, bowels of mercies, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness and long-suffering; they would be forbearing with one another, and inclined to forgiveness, even as Christ forgave them. Above all, they would have "charity, which is the bond of perfectness." The peace of God would rule in their hearts; the word of Christ would dwell in them richly, with all wisdom, and instead of tattling, and bearing evil reports to and fro, they would teach and admonish one another in kindness and love. If brethren would thus dwell together, surely the God of love and peace would be with them. It would indeed be "good and pleasant."

This unity should characterize all the different religious sects, but above all, it ought to characterize us, who are, in a measure, separated from the christian body at large, and are waiting for the revelation from heaven of God's dear Son. The various "pet theories" and side-issues, which have been permitted to bring strife, dissension, and divisions among us, should be swallowed up in the proclamation of the great "present truth," which constitutes our identity, namely, the speedy coming of Christ, and the eternal redemption of his people. In presenting this glorious truth, it is necessary to have, not only the wisdom of serpents, but the harmlessness of doves. When a man insists obstinately on having his "rights," regardless of the consequences to the body, it is certain he is not under the control of that Spirit which would lead Paul to abstain from the eating of meat as long as the world should stand, if by eating his weak brother would be offended. That the welfare of the body may be promoted, the individual should be lost sight of and forgotten.

When a man presses some particular idea, to the neglect of more important themes, thereby causing a decline of spirituality, and a falling off on the part of them that attend religious meetings, to say the least, we may safely affirm his zeal is not according to knowledge. It is not the preaching that is calculated to produce the oneness Jesus prayed for.

I think our main lack, as a body, is a lack of warm, cementing love. We are not lacking in theories, nor in doctrinal preachers to press them; but we do lack that fulness of christian love, that will enable us to hear sentiments we do not fully indorse with patience and charity. And the lack is not an inconsiderable one, neither is it unimportant. On the contrary, it is so important that Paul said, in lacking this, though he possessed all other graces, he would be but "as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal." 1 Cor. 13: 1. It is not enough to be intellectually convinced of Christ's soon coming; it is not enough to be firmly persuaded that "the dead know not anything." The prayer of Christ is not fulfilled in this, and it is time the "bride" should be fully alive to the fact, than the most important of the wedding garments is a mantle of love.

III. The effect such union would have; the world would believe Jesus' mission divine.

Many eloquent sermons have been preached, and able treatises written, to show that the gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth, but the most convincing evidence that it is, is to bring forward a man who has been lost; who has been in the very depths of the horrible pit and miry clay, and thus manifest its redeeming power by showing to the world this living instance of its efficacy. Many volumes of "Evidences of Christianity" have been published, and given to the world, to prove the mission of Jesus divine; yet convincing as these may be, the church has still more convincing evidence at her command. Jesus designed his people should prove his mission, and their religion divine in its origin, by manifesting the principles thereof in their lives, and if they would manifest them by being charitable and kind to all; by being united in a close, living union, bearing and forbearing with one another, the world would be constrained to confess that christians were ruled by an influence which was not earthly in its origin.

But when, instead of this, there is envying, and strife, and divisions among them, are they not exhibiting carnality rather than spirituality? If true christian oneness be demanded by the world as proof of the heavenly origin of our religion, where shall we point them for its manifestation?

Denominations there are that are united in themselves, and churches also; but individual churches and denominations do not constitute the church universal. It is this very living within and to ourselves, that is hindering the development of that broad, liberal love, which ought to characterize all the christian sects, instead of that narrow, contracted feeling, which is their shame. It was by the manifestation of this love that Jesus designed his people should reach the unbelieving world; and when it is manifested; when it is seen that christians love one another; when the human nature gives place to the divine; in a word, when christians are one as Jesus prayed they might be, then the world will believe that God sent him, even as he said; but as long as this is neglected, the church is neglecting its most effective and convincing proof.

To conclude, in the words of Paul: "Finally, brethren, farewell. Be perfect, be of good comfort, be of one mind, live in peace; and the God of love and peace shall be with you." 2 Cor. 13: 11

"STRIVE NOT ABOUT WORDS."

2 Tim. 2: 14.

O. W. STETSON.

How often do we see brethren engaged in disputations, in which the entire controversy is a result of misapprehending the terms used by each other, and such, perhaps, to a very great extent, may be the case in regard to the subject of the "new birth." Therefore, I would say, let us reason together, and not to separation. Differences among brethren, however small, even in opinions, not to say in faith, are not desirable, nor agreeable; but where they do unavoidably exist, in consequence of our imperfections in the knowledge of the truth, it is well for the differing ones to be very kindly disposed to each other, and bear and forbear until we all come to know the way of the Lord more perfectly. Even in those cases where brethren have a zeal, but not according to truth, and may be decidedly in error, but think they are right, their exhortations to amendment, in those whom they judge to be wrong, even though right, should be kindly and thankfully received; because the motive was good, and intended to confer, or be the means of conferring, a blessing. To all such, my grateful acknowledgments are tendered for their kind sympathy in behalf of my spiritual well being; but, dear brethren, it does not follow that because we deny the new birth as taking place here, that therefore we also deny spiritual regeneration, or a moral renewing here.

That there is a mighty, wondrous work of grace wrought upon, in, and for, every true believer by the eternal Spirit, through the word of truth, by faith in Christ, in this present life-time, as a means of fitting men for the kingdom of righteousness and everlasting glory, in blessed immortality, I think can never be called in question by any who have ever experienced "the love of God our Savior," and have come to a saving "knowledge of his mercy by the washing of regeneration, and a renewing of the Holy Spirit, being justified by his grace, that we should be made heirs according to the hope of eternal life, . . which God (who cannot lie) promised before the world began, . . . and hath made his Son the depositary of this life for us, in consequence of which all long to see Jesus as he is, that they may be made like him; and whomsoever hath such hope in him will purify himself from all iniquity, even as he is pure, by obeying the truth, unto unfeigned love of the brethren, in consequence of having been begotten again [anna-gennemenoi], not from corruptible, but from incorruptible seed, through the living and enduring word of God."—Diaglott.

To every true believer, no argument is needed to convince him of the fundamental doctrine in the christian religion, that the begetting always precedes the quickening. This follows the former, but is antecedent to the birth. So teaches the word, and I claim this order for the word. To the writer, it does seem strange that any one, professing faith in the holy religion of our blessed Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, can for a moment entertain the idea that anything short of an entire consecration, and sanctification of soul, body and spirit to God, and by him, so that we live pure and sinless lives before him, will be acceptable to him. Holiness of life, holiness of heart, cleansing ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and of the mind, is what the Spirit that raised up our Lord from the dead demands of us; and if we come short of this, by the grace of God assisting us, through the intercession of the eternal Spirit in our behalf, I can find no assurance of our ever reaching a spiritual birth. Like begets like, and the one grand object of divine grace in us, is so to fit, fashion, and develop us, by moulding us into the divine likeness, as at last to produce the divine result, of a divine begetting, divine quickening, and divine nourishing, and development, in our divine manifestation as sons of God in a divine birth. But now we are called (proleptically) the sons of God, and by the same metaphor we are spoken of as having been already born of God.

Let us now make an examination of the terms used, and try to get their true signification, so as to understand them as well as one another. Birth is the act of coming into life, that which is produced. In a theological sense, regeneration is called the new birth; but Scott says regeneration is to renew the heart by a change of affections; to change the heart and affections from natural enmity to the love of God; to implant holy affections in the heart. Robinson's Calmet says: "Regeneration is used in two senses by the sacred authors of the New Testament. (1.) For that spiritual birth received from grace; (2.) for that new life we expect at the resurrection. Properly speaking, there are but two places where the term occurs; Matt. 19: 28, and Titus 3: 5. The first refers to a change of state (or condition); the second to a change of profession. The term is compounded of palin, again, and genesia, generation, or origin"; (i. e., to originate again). Schleusner applies it to "a renovation of the minds and characters of the Jews and Gentiles by means of the gospel." Others refer these words in Matt. to "the grand renovation of all things at Christ's second coming (comp. Acts 3: 21), and particularly to God's children being born again, as it were, from their graves; that is, resurrection is regeneration (comp. Acts 13: 33). Either way, the passage is metaphorical." "The second place (Titus 3: 5) alludes, beyond all question, to the rite of baptism."—R. C., p. 781. "But in John 3: 4, 5, the term is very different from that in Matt. and Titus, being gennetheanothen and gennethenai, born again, or, as some prefer, born from above."—Same.

The term used in 1 Pet. 1: 3, where he thanks God for his abundant mercy, by which he regenerates us (anagennesas), in a lively or life-giving hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, seems to come very near to the import of palingenesia, regeneration; but in either of these cases, John 3: 5 excepted, so far from any of them reproducing us, which is necessary to our being "born again," or anew, the idea in all of them seems to be that something is reproduced in us, which is in perfect harmony with both Old and New Testament teaching, concerning the regeneration of the Holy Spirit of God in us, through faith and obedience to God's word under the gospel. Hence to speak of the Spirit being born anew, or of a new birth of the Spirit in us, would be entirely proper and correct; but to apply that work of God's Spirit wrought upon us, in our reproduction, by which the Spirit brings us forth the second time, to the work of God's grace which is now going on in the heart of every true follower of Christ, seems to me like an utter confusion of terms, that carries us into an inextricable labyrinth of difficulties, as connected with our teaching that man is a unit, instead of a duality or triplet. Of the passage in John 1: 13, Griesbach notes a different reading. Instead of "who were," he reads "who was," making the entire connection thus—"He came to his own domains, and yet his own people received him not; but to as many as received him, he gave authority to become children of God, to those believing into His name, who was begotten not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God"; thus referring it directly to the physical generation of the Messiah by the Spirit of God, rather than to the moral regeneration of believers.—Diaglott.

There are other Bible reasons for being called sons of God, than those of birthright. There may be, and I understand there is, such a thing as an adoption to sonship, on the conditions of faith.

Dr. James Macknight, who was for forty years President of the Westminster Assembly of Divines, says in his comment on the epistles—and Dr. Adam Clark endorses his declaration—that "there is not in the whole Bible, strictly, such a phrase as born of God; but in every instance it should have been translated, begotten of God." I may not have given a verbatim quotation, as I write from memory, not now having the work before me, but such is the substance of his stricture.

COMING OF CHRIST.

That Christ is coming soon we have no doubts. The great event must be near—even at the doors. The last pencilings of the prophet—the jots and tittles—are now fulfilling. The night of weeping is nearly completed, and the morning of joy will soon be welcomed by the faithful bride of the Lamb. Her garments of mourning will be forever laid aside for the bridal robes provided by the Bridegroom King. It is truly sublime to be living so near the glad hour of deliverance.

Is the reader ready for the opening of the glorious morning of the eternal day? Is the lamp trimmed and burning? Is the heart clean? Is the old man put off, and does Christ dwell within? It is time to have every sin-spot removed, and to be fully clothed with the righteousness of Christ.

RYE.—Our meetings in Rye, N. H., Friday and Saturday evenings, Dec. 8th and 9th, and on the following Sabbath, were seasons of special interest. Large and attentive audiences were present. The meetings were held in the Christian meeting-house. At the close of the Saturday evening meeting, the pastor, Bro. Dunn, gave us a public invitation to occupy his pulpit all day on the Sabbath. We accepted the invitation, though arrangements had been made for us to preach in another house. At the close of the Sabbath evening meeting he stated that it had been one of the best days of his life; and indorsed what we had said in relation to the speedy coming of Christ, exhorting the people to be ready. We were much pleased with his kind, christian spirit. Several Bro. and Srs. came from Portsmouth, Greenland, and Hampton, who assisted in the conference meetings. The prospect looked encouraging.

AFFAIRS IN ITALY.

The Italians are now determined to be entirely free from all Papal authority, and make a complete divorce of Church and State. This is a wonderful change for that priest-ridden country, where for more than a thousand years Popes and Cardinals have exercised absolute sway. Every month brings increased evidence that the power of Pius IX. is fully broken. His political dominion is completely taken away, and we may soon expect to see some important change in his programme. His position is becoming very critical, and he knows not which way to turn. He is hammed in on every side. All he can do is to submit to the control of those over whom he has ruled with an iron hand. Master and slaves have changed places. The Pope has renounced his temporal sovereignty over the States of the church.

It is said that Jules Favre (of France) is now "the most popular man in all Italy." Should he visit that country, he would meet a warm reception. He has just published a work entitled Rome et la Republique Française, which has greatly increased his popularity among the Italians. A Roman correspondent says the essence of the book is simply this:—

"It gives to the world an official document reporting the exact words of Pope Pius IX., to the effect that he is satisfied with a little corner wherein to exercise his spiritual functions, and would not accept his States if they were given back to him. Now, that is a precious acknowledgment for the whole nation of Italy, immediately concerned. It is precisely for such a little morsel of announcement that Italy has fought so long and so nobly. Fiat lux is now, of course, the nation's cry; and 'We are undone' is the increasing belief of the Jesuit phalanx, which, until now, although reduced to the most narrow and desperate surroundings, were yielding their ground only inch by inch. Apparently their retreat promises to change into complete demoralization, and then, at last, the Italians will fully obtain all their rights. The general hope is that the first and last of the right reverend company of Jesus may be cast into a state of condign punishment or utter transformation, and that the Pope, who is set down as no part or parcel of that sharp set, may make speedy reconciliation with Victor Emanuel, and continue to dwell in his 'little corner' for the greater splendor and attractions of the redeemed capital.

It is the heartfelt desire of this people to rebuild their old capital city—and the washers and daubers have been making it modern with a vengeance—and to improve their whole country, now that they have rid themselves of foreign and domestic tyranny. 'New Italy' is really a very significant title here to an old resident, an eye-witness of past and present events; it may sound strange to call new the land of the Cæsars, and whose monuments are hoary with age; but it is new, thanks to the great changes wrought throughout the provinces of the peninsula. The pleasant and hopeful effects of the changes are every day becoming more intensely felt and visible to natives and strangers dwelling on Italy's favored soil. As constant proof of the genuine Roman sentiment it may be mentioned that the National Guard of the city, which could never rival the Prussian Landwehr or be set down for much service by the side of the national regular troops, is cherished as if the salvation of Italian unity depended upon it alone. All classes of citizens persist in joining and doing duty in its ranks, although the novelty of uniforms and parade duties is worn off now after over more than a year's service."

The papal power is beginning to feel desperate over the state of things. Just when it hoped for great success, it finds every prop is being removed. Thus the prophecies of Daniel and John are being faithfully fulfilled. We must be near the end of the present dispensation. Let every lamp be trimmed and burning; every heart filled with the Holy Spirit.

"THE TRAIN LIGUE."

We have just received the first number of a new weekly paper, published at Omaha, Neb., called "The Train Ligue." It is under the control of that very eccentric man, Geo. Francis Train, who has nominated himself for the next President. He is terribly in earnest, and is making quite a stir among the laboring classes, the Fenians, the Catholics, and others who are dissatisfied with the present state of things in the worldly governments of Europe and America. As a motto, at the head of the Ligue we find the following:

"Down with kings,
Smash the rings."
"God save the people."

The paper is one dollar a year. It is claimed to have at the start, one hundred thousand circulation, and says it will increase to one million in the first six months. It claims that "THE PEOPLE" constitute the "editor-in-chief." Mr. Train say he is the "representative of eight millions of Spiritualists." He professes sympathy with the Communists and Internationals. He is a complete firebrand—a radical among the radicals. It is said that "Train Ligues are forming all over the country" for political purposes. One thing is certain, there is a powerful undertow at work in the different existing governments of the world, threatening a complete revolution in favor of the PEOPLE. The masses are becoming tired of submitting to the rule of the rich, and are combining against them with a strong arm. Apparently, the storm is about ready to burst, when the political "winds of the earth" shall blow with terrible fury, causing kings to tremble, and "men's hearts" to fail "them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth."

SENSIBLE THOUTHTS.

Perhaps there is no man among the popular lecturers of the day, who makes more common sense remarks than Dr. J. G. Holland. Thursday evening, Nov. 9th, he gave a lecture in the Boston Music Hall on "The Social Undertow," from the report of which we make the following extract:—

"In beginning, Dr. Holland said that he had often wondered whether a horse treading on a wheel appreciated the difference of getting over the ground and the ground getting out from under him. There were many men who believed they were really making headway and struggled hard day after day in that belief, who kept at the same point, and the world rolled out from under them and left them occupying the same place.

It was believed by many that the world grew better day by day, while others believed it really grew worse. Both were right. The world grew worse and better day by day. Great reforms came, but in their sealike sweep there was an undertow which detracted from the good accomplished. In the trail of the great tornado which swept away the system of American slavery came the carpet-bagger, Ku-Klux, and political thieves. The new Republic of France was baptized in the bloody deeds of the Commune. Every religious reform was always followed by a re-action. A Temperance movement only heralded one to be made in the opposite direction.

There was a theory among certain reformers that society only needed to be reformed to make all things perfect. But although vice might be hunted from cover to cover, the race was not changed. The world was just as bad. We preached against extravagance in the best clothes we could buy, and reformed our State abuses by putting thieves to rule our great cities.

The results of our labors in the cause of reform were not what we once expected. The drink fiend was never more rampant than now. The social evil, with all its horrors, never flourished so rankly in the community; Christian marriage was never held so lightly as now. This was the undertow of our national progress.

In regard to the temperance reformation, had there really been a reformation? Has the gain been any greater than in social refinement for which no special reformation had been planned? Was there any the less need of effort now than thirty years ago? It had been reform without improvement—change without progress. The field of reform had become a favorite place for those who loved to keep before the public eye—who found it easier to scold than to teach.

But how could reform be instituted? Formation and not reformation was the secret. It was easier to build anew than to patch the old. It would be better to let the adult life that seemed determined to go to the devil, go to the devil, if it distracted attention from the children who could be trained into useful men and women. Mind, like matter, could only be moulded to shape while it was yet plastic. The people had been too busy listening to the schemes of reformers or the calls of business to attend to the training of the youth. Society needed nothing so much just now as a better discharge of the maternal duty toward the young.

At this portion of his lecture the speaker made a bitter assault upon the so-called woman's movement, closing his remarks upon the subject as follows: "The whole end and aim of this woman's reform is to fit the laws to the weaknesses and wickednesses of unholy people and make them more unholy still. When a woman enters upon this phase of reform she steps downward, even if it be toward a throne."

ENGLISH REFORM MOVEMENT.

During the past year, and up to the present time there has been considerable agitation among the people in England on the subject of social and political reform. The laboring classes are tired of supporting the aristocracy, and seem determined to throw off the yoke of bondage imposed by the rich, and take the control of matters into their own hands. There is a loud cry for "EQUAL RIGHTS." This fire of revolution has been burning a long time, but has been kept in a smothered condition by the power of the government, and the strength of wealth and position; but many of the first class of men, including members of Parliament, begin to see that the internal heart-fires of the common people cannot be kept subdued much longer. In order to prevent scenes of bloodshed, like those that have transpired in Paris, several prominent political men, whose influence is a power in the land, have been devising plans by which satisfactory liberty may be granted to the laboring classes.

Mr. J. Scott Russell has addressed a long letter "To the Members of the Councils of Statesmen and Workmen," dated Nov. 11th, giving an account of the origin of the new Social Movement. The following are extracts from his letter:

"The precise origin of my intervention to a better understanding between the dissevered classes in England dates from the outbreak of the late social troubles in France. Returning from France at the outbreak of the war, I was led to make a comparative study of the condition and relations of the different classes in the two countries, and I thus came to the conviction that the social relations between the different classes of society in England are too intolerable to last long; they must either be speedily and timely cured, or they will suddenly cure themselves. Six months of last year I devoted to the purpose of studying the real evils which depress the condition of the workingmen. I conversed with the least educated and the most educated, the less skilled and the more skilled, with the object of learning not their imaginary grievances or their political fancies, but the real griefs of their daily life. I was soon able to reduce these by careful classification to the number of twelve, and afterward of seven; and it was thus that the seven points of our movement were not the invention of any one, but grew naturally out of the actual condition of English society. The seven evils which we thus discovered were—

1. The want of family homes, clean, wholesome, and decent, out in pure air and sunshine. 2. The want of an organised supply of wholesome, nutritious, cheap food. 3. The want of leisure for the duties and recreations of family life, for instruction, and for social duties. 4. The want of organized local government to secure the well-being of the inhabitants of villages, towns, counties, and cities. 5. The want of systematic, organized teaching to every skilled workman of the scientific principles and most improved practice of his trade. 6. The want of public parks, buildings, and institutions for innocent, instructive, and improving recreation. 7. The want of the adequate organisation of the public service for the common good.

In conversation upon another matter I dropped a few words, which induced a member of the upper house to ask from me not merely verbal but written communications on this subject. In those communications I laid before him my reasons for believing that the House of Peers was the fittest body in England to initiate the necessary legislation for our social movement, and why I thought it to be not only their highest interest but their inevitable duty to undertake the task.

The following is extracted from the first of these written communications:

'SYDENHAM, S. E., Dec. 8, 1870.

'MY LORD: When I inadvertently stated, somewhat strongly, my impressions as to the policy for a great English party, I neither dreamt of formally organising such a party, nor of forming a programme for such a policy. But, at your lordship's desire, and with the assurance that I only express some of your own convictions, I will not hesitate to indicate some wants and dangers of our English community. The circumstances that I have been long occupied in studying the conditions, social and political, of France, Prussia, and Switzerland, with reference to our own national improvement; and this further incident, that I have just returned from witnessing the results of two opposite national developments in this terrible collision on the battle-fields of France; these circumstances give the present state of society in England a serious, practical living importance, which a year ago it would not have claimed. The first great danger I see in England lies in the wide-spread growing poverty and demoralization of the poor. The second lies in the growing deterioration of the breed of Englishmen, women, and children, who are being reared in the lanes, alleys, and filth of our wealth-growing towns. Next, in the higher class of our skilled workmen, I find a fixed antagonism to the wealthy, middle and mercantile classes, of which they are the tools and the victims. Lastly, I find the aristocracy of England, which has so long maintained its standard socially and intellectually higher than that of the aristocracy of other countries—I say I regret to find that aristocracy ceasing to occupy itself with the direction, government, and well-being of the people of England, who would be only too glad to be instructed, guided, and led by educated and well-bred men, instead of being ruled by the classes whose interests are directly antagonistic equally to the cultivators of the land and the skilled workmen. I am satisfied that these feelings, little expressed, are widely and strongly felt. I am sure that the workingmen are gradually tending to some great social revolutions, and I think it has been brought much nearer by the present war of irresponsible Sovereigns. The practical question I now think is merely, whether the great social changes which are necessary and inevitable, shall now take place by means of a large and friendly organisation of the educated, wise, and refined men who form the English aristocracy, with the able, skilled, uneducated, but well-meaning workingmen who form the bone and sinew of the English nation. In that case we may expect the revolution to be wise, gentle, rapid, and peaceful. If, on the contrary, it is let alone, it will be an explosion from below. My personal opinion is, that an intimate union of the workingmen of England with a self-denying, hard-working, patriotic aristocracy, could successfully root out of England the terrible germs of political anarchy and social degradation which are now spreading social disease throughout the community. . . . .'

His Lordship not only accepted these views, but gave me his cordial sympathy, and proffered his hearty co-operation in my efforts to bring about so desirable a result. I do not mean in this statement to mention names which I have not had time to ask authority to use, but I will add that this sympathy first gave me confidence to undertake this formidable task. This brings me to the first meeting, a month later, with the representative workingmen, at which they constituted a council, accepted formally the seven points, took on themselves the responsibility of their acceptance and support by the skilled workmen and gave me the responsibility of placing the matter in the hand of such a legislative council as I should find able and willing to undertake the task. It was these seven resolutions, on the seven points finally accepted by the council of workingmen on the 4th of February, which I laid before the peers and statesmen as the basis of negotiation. There were two negotiations, which occupied six months. It happened that the Peer I have already referred to as the promoter of the first negotiation was of a distinguished whig family, and that most of his proposed associates belonged naturally to the liberal side of the House of Peers, but I am bound to say that he strongly expressed his conviction that, to achieve the good he hoped, we must absolutely deprive our movement of all party character, and I believe that for that reason he did not communicate our proposals to a single member of the present ministry.

Unhappily, after three months this first negotiation failed, and, somewhat disheartened, I was obliged to initiate a second. My thoughts turned to a statesmen who had been a Cabinet Minister, but was now out of power; he happened to be a conservative, but I already knew him to have co-operated in the most liberal manner with members of the government opposed to him in carrying through great measures for the public good, of which he had himself been the initiator, and I conceived him therefore to be a fit man to undertake our task. On proposing the matter to him, he, too, said that the undertaking was much too important to be made a party measure, and that both parties in the State must co operate to carry it into effect. He, too, cordially approving of the movement, undertook the conduct of the second negotiation, but not without strong expressions of his sense of the weight of the undertaking, and of the formidable nature of the difficulties which lay in the way. At the end of three months he presented me with a list of a council of legislators already formed, and other names likely to be added. Among these the majority were naturally conservatives, but three were to be whigs, one of whom had formally accepted the duty. This brings me down to the 4th of August, and brings me back to the council of workingmen, whom I had warned on the 4th of February that they would probably have to wait six months for the conclusion of the negotiation, and at a meeting called for that purpose on the 28th of September the Council of Representative Workingmen was finally completed and permanently organized for the purpose of preparing the measures for carrying out the seven points, in order to be laid before the recently-formed Council of Legislators in sufficient time previous to the next session of Parliament, so as to enable this Council of Legislators to undertake the preparation of such acts of Parliament as they should think fit to introduce."

The following telegram shows the aspect of things on this subject:—

London, Nov. 26, 1871. At a council of workingmen, last night, Mr. Scott Russell stated that the Lords were still anxious to perfect an alliance, and that a joint meeting of both councils will soon be held.

It will be seen that there is a deficit of $28.54. Will those who have pledged please remit as soon as convenient?

At a meeting of the Advent Christian Association, held on the camp-ground Aug. 22nd, it was voted that the present Campmeeting Committee be nominated as the committee for the coming year, and that their names be presented to the brethren and sisters assembled at the stand, for their acceptance or rejection. Bro. Hemenway, declining the nomination, was excused, and the vacancy left with the committee to fill. Subsequently Bro. Hemenway, at the earnest request of the committee, accepted the nomination; and the following names were presented to the brethren and sisters assembled at the preacher's stand, Aug. 26th: S. G. Mathewson, Geo. T. Adams, H. Munger, J. Hemenway, M. Grant, O. D. Woodruff, I. B. Potter. And they were unanimously chosen committee for the ensuing year.

WHEN WILL CHRIST COME?

This question is propounded by anxious-hearted lovers of Jesus, who love him well enough to "love his appearing," and instead of loving to have it at the greatest possible distance in the future, love to believe it is very near. Not content with knowing that we are living in the very last of the last days, they are desirous to know with greater precision when Jesus will return to earth. And who will blame them for this feeling of intense anxiety, provided they keep within the limits of inspiration?

Past failures in computation should not deter them from seeking a true application of those God-given measurements of time found in the Bible. Egotistic dogmatism should be guarded against, however, on the one hand, while blind indifference should everywhere be discountenanced on the other hand. A fear to examine, simply because some have previously made mistakes, is a feeling that is foreign either to the spirit of the gospel, or reason. Several points of time are now being looked forward to by different prophetic students, for the close of Gentile rule, to be succeeded by the reign of Messiah. Some are looking to 1878, some to 1875, and others to 1880. None of these points appear at present to be as clear as we could wish, though they all possess some features worth looking at.

While I am not prepared at present to take a stand of absolute positiveness, the arguments for '78 seem to be very plausible, to say the least. While we should not shut our eyes to any real proof on the time of the termination of the prophetic periods, we should not allow our relish for this glorious event to supersede our reason. True faith must stand on evidence. It is certainly safe to look at the earliest probable point; but it is not wisdom to convert a probability into an absolute certainty.

Two extremes in this matter should always be spurned: (1) the claim that we can know nothing about the matter; and (2) the principle which leads us to be inactive except when set on fire by definite time. I do not believe a man can be saved by this latter principle—a principle that will allow a man to live a life of inactivity except when the judgment seems dawning. True christianity will always be active, and when it sees Christ near, it will rejoice in the fact. Time fills the christian with joy, and the eye-servant with excitement.

SADDUCEES.—About B. C. 260, there lived a Jewish theologian by the name of Sadoc, who, in his aversion to the theory of life in death, which some of the Jews had imbibed while in captivity, went to an extreme in opposing it, and denied any life after death, repudiating the doctrine of the resurrection, discarding the existence of holy angels and satanic spirits, and claiming that all the advantages and disadvantages of religion, received or rejected, belonged only to this life. The followers of this man were called Sadducees. They were a strong sect in the time of the Savior.

Supposing that a resurrection would involve a return to old family regulations, they thought to confound the Savior by inquiring whose wife the woman should be in the resurrection, who had bee married and buried seven husbands? But Jesus rendered their question forceless by telling them there would be no litigation about former husbands and wives then, as the marriage arrangement would form no part of the future programme.

Some people with sour stomachs, or shallow brains, think it smart to call us Sadducees, when, in fact, we rest the whole plan of salvation on the resurrection, which the Sadducees totally denied. We place all reward for saint and sinner beyond the resurrection, while the Sadducees confined it all to this life.

THE FEELING ARGUMENT.

We are often met with an argument for disembodied immortality, based upon the alleged feeling that succeeds the amputation of a limb. As for instance, the following incident is related: a man had his ankle crushed, which produced intense pain; and finally, in order to save life, it was decided that the limb must be amputated. This being done, the limb healed up in time; but frequently the man would complain of pain in his ankle. Now if this proves the disembodied survival of a spirit-limb to feel pain, the proof is too strong for our opponents, for it just as strongly proves the wounding of the spirit-ankle; for how could it feel pain if not hurt, even after the material limb had decomposed?

And if it is true that a painful wound can be inflicted on a spirit-limb, why could not the spirit-limb be amputated, on the same principle? And why could not the entire spirit-man just as really be killed? If the spirit-ankle could be so crushed as to feel severe pain, when we crush the whole material man will not the whole spirit-man just as really feel excruciating pain as in the case of the spirit-ankle, even if it does not kill the spirit-man? And if this spirit-man is a holy person, must it go off to heaven full of pain? If not, how can the crushing of a material ankle give pain to a spirit-ankle?

Again: it is said that after amputation, complaints are often made that the foot is cold, from which fact it is claimed that the disembodied spirit-limb survives amputation and decomposition. If this is a valid argument, it as clearly proves that the entire spirit-man can suffer from cold when unclothed; and if it could suffer from cold in the least degree, in an intensely cold region, the suffering must be more intense, even if it should not freeze to death. Just think of a ghost suffering with cold on its heavenward journey, with the thermometer 40° below zero! If this is possible, I should think summer would be the preferable time to desert the body.

So this argument in favor of a disembodied existence, based on feeling subsequent to the amputation of a limb, proves too much for our friends. This feeling, however, becomes extinct in process of time, which is additional proof that it does not originate from the exposure of a disembodied limb, but owes its origin to the state of the chords, etc., that once sustained a connection with the amputated limb.

"ALWAYS PREACHING DOCTRINE."

This charge, for the want of a more serious one, is sometimes made against Advent preachers. If our enemies will allow us to amend the charge by substituting, "Always proving doctrine," we shall not demur, for we would "adorn the doctrine of God our Savior in all things"; and fully believing that the holy Scriptures are given by inspiration of God, and are profitable for doctrine," we would not cover up the doctrine of heaven.

We differ from the practise of our enemies, however, only in one particular: they preach doctrine in every sermon, such as "going to heaven at death," but do not prove it, leaving it resting on the strength of their own assertions, simply because they cannot read it from the Bible; but we preach the kingdom to come, and read the testimony from the book of God. When they, spider like, spin a web of theology out of their own bosoms, they think that is not doctrine; but when we read theology out of the Bible, of a different nature, and ask the people to believe God, the best argument they can find to invalidate it, is to raise the cry; "Why, that is doctrine!" Yes, God's doctrine; and has God no right to be heard or believed?

But let the doctrine of God be always proclaimed in the loving spirit of its author, and never in a contentious, warlike temper. Keep the heart fully baptized with love, interspersing the practical features of doctrine with the theological department, and thus earnestly "preach the word," and God will be pleased.

WILL ADAM BE SAVED?—A brother inquires—"Will Adam be saved?" That depends upon circumstances not within the range of our knowledge, for we have no information concerning his life subsequent to his fall, as to whether he repented of his act of disobedience, and found pardon for the same, or whether he plunged deeper into transgression, for which he must hereafter be punished. As the remedial scheme was introduced immediately after the first transgression, couched in the promise that the woman's seed should bruise the serpent's head, Adam might have been a sharer in the new hope offered to the race.

The death which Adam incurred by eating of the forbidden fruit, was simply a result of transgression, and not the punishment for it. God told him beforehand that the fruit would cause him to die, if he should eat of it; and for this very reason forbade his eating it. Adam sinned in eating it, for God told him not to do it; but it was the death-producing fruit that caused his death; which fate would have been warded off if he had obeyed God. Repentance could not prevent the result, but could save from the final penalty. God specified a calamity involved "till" man should die as a result of eating; but while the result of this act affects Adam and his posterity alike, the final punishment for that act, and all other acts of disobedience, either by Adam or his posterity, is due at the judgment, unless repented of. Adam might have repented; if so, he will be saved.

THE CRUSADES.

E. F. EMERSON.

A profound interest is centered in that great and prolonged struggle of Europe against Asia, of Christianity against Mohammedanism, which is described by the word Crusades. It was a conflict which arrayed in deadly hostility two systems of religion, each of them seeking to exterminate the other. In the study of their history is to be found the best means of information as to the state of Europe during the middle ages. Here we learn the nature and the power of that system of religious belief which had grown up during the dark times of ignorance, and through which the Pope of Rome became the dictator, both in temporal and spiritual matters, to all the monarchs of Europe.

The Crusades contributed perhaps more than any thing else to the growth of the vast power of the Popes. At this period, Christian Europe could be swayed as one man. All felt themselves bound alike to obey the voice of the spiritual father of Christendom—the Pontiff of Rome. His voice was regarded as the voice of God. The existence of this state alone made the Crusades possible. There were nine expeditions in all.

The origin of the Crusades may be thus briefly stated. Since the crucifixion of Christ, his followers from all lands were accustomed to make pilgrimages to the consecrated spot of his life, suffering, and death—an idolized spot, around which clustered the dearest memories. This flocking of pilgrims went on in peace until the seventh century after Christ, when Jerusalem was taken from the Greeks by the Mohammedans of Arabia (A. D. 637), who levied a tax upon all coming as pilgrims to Jerusalem. This was tolerated until about the eleventh century, when the severest persecutions followed. The gates of the city were closed against them. Weary and exhausted, the unhappy pilgrim wandered around the walls, and lay down to die of starvation and disease among the rocks and caves of Palestine. Europe was indignant, and panted for revenge. At the beck of Pope Urban III., Europe responded to the summons. Monks, Barons, Knights, and all classes, flocked to the standard. The Pope addressed them: "Go," said he, "rid God's sanctuary of the wicked, expel the robbers, bring in the pious. God will be favorable to those who undertake this expedition. Those who die will enter into the mansions of heaven, while the living will behold the sepulchre of the Lord."

Never, perhaps, did a single speech of man work such extraordinary effects as this of Pope Urban. The assembly declared itself the army of God. Those who were to become soldiers of the cross, were to assume a red cross upon the right shoulder. No government hired them, no general led them. Nothing human they resolved should arrest their progress. Selecting Walter the Penniless and Peter the Hermit as nominal leaders, they started on the first crusade, A. D. 1095. As they swept through Hungary like locusts, they gave themselves up to plunder. Crossing the Hellespont, their enemies fell upon them, and massacred them by thousands. Their history is a record of crime, misery, and destruction. Thus under pretense of delivering the Holy Land, 300,000 men perished. This was an irregular expedition, not strictly one of the Crusades.

Godfrey, of Bouillon, led the force of the first regular Crusade. The history of this one is a record of great successes and terrible reverses. After capturing Antioch, a terrible famine overtook them. They boiled the leaves of trees, the skins of animals, and military accoutrements, for food. Thousands died of this dreadful scourge. At last, they reached Jerusalem. They arrived with only 40,000 out of 700,000 men that started. They attacked it, and were repulsed. There was another famine, and a dearth of water. The brook Cedron was dry. All the wells were either filled or poisoned. There had been no misery yet compared with this. They attacked again, entered the walls, and Jerusalem was taken. The kingdom of Jerusalem was established, and the work of the Crusaders seemed completed. But suddenly a fearful reverse came. It was the fall of Edessa with a dreadful massacre of Christians. Their implacable foes never left them. Jerusalem was menaced, and was growing weaker while their foes grew more powerful. The second crusade came to their assistance. The Pope, king of France, Germany, and all warlike nations, were engaged. It was led by kings of France and Germany. The Germans reached Constantinople. Its king, pretending friendship, secured guides to mislead them; then sent word to the Turks, who fell upon them and utterly annihilated them. The French met with a terrible repulse at the river Meander. A few stragglers weak and spirit-broken reached Damascus, and attempted to lay siege to it, but abandoned it and returned home. Thus closed the second Crusade.

Next a powerful and sanguinary character, a terrible and bloody monster, stepped forth. It was Saladin, Sultan of Egypt. Marching through Syria, with severe slaughter he defeated the Christians near Galilee, also taking in turn Acre, Cesarea, Jaffa, Beirout, Tyre, and Ascalon. Jerusalem was besieged by Saladin. After suffering untold horrors, they capitulated, and Jerusalem, after a Christian possession of eighty-eight years, was given up to the followers of Mahomet. The loss of Jerusalem cost the Pope his life, so fearful was the blow. Two millions of lives had been sacrificed, rich countries impoverished to support it, and the popes and cardinals of the Roman Catholic church devoted their lives to its consummation. Against victorious Saladin, the powerful and sagacious monarch of Germany, Frederick, led the hosts of the third Crusade. This was the most military and best-ordered crusade of all, but unfortunately, as they were marching triumphantly through the enemy's land, Frederick lost his life by a a chill. The army was demoralized, hopeless, and dispirited; and by mutiny and desertion it soon broke up and was scattered and lost. Richard, the Lion-hearted, from England, now arrived and measured swords with Saladin, in a terrible contest for Acre. Saladin was defeated, and lost Jaffa and Tyre besides. Saladin made a truce with Richard, in which the Christians were to have Acre, Jaffa, Tyre, and free access to Jerusalem. Richard now returned home, not having captured Jerusalem.

Fourth Crusade. Upon the death of Saladin, Pope Celestin III. and Henry VI. of Germany, ordered another expedition against the Infidels. And, as in the case of its predecessor, just as the prize seemed within its grasp, the sudden death of its commander put an end to its operations.

Fifth Crusade. This was organized by Pope Innocent III., and as they started they learned the Emperor of Constantinople had been dethroned, and offered to give them the use of the city until they conquered the East, if they will regain it for him. They consented, as Constantinople had always been very troublesome to them. The Pope emphatically objected, as that was turning aside from their sworn purpose. Nevertheless they were determined to do it. The city was taken. Now, in view of having his power and authority recognized in the chief city of the Greek church, he gave his hearty approval. And the Latin church and ritual were formally established in the east, and the authority of the Pope superseded that of the patriarch of Constantinople. This was the "Latin Crusade."

Sixth Crusade. The Pope labored incessantly to start another crusade. He claimed that, according to prophecy, the days of the Turkish power were numbered, and the time of its downfall was at hand. Accordingly the king of Hungary assumed command of another army, which he led to Acre. Alas! the ill fated crusade had no sooner debarked, than the sufferings of famine were upon them. By reason of severe drouth, the crops had failed, and starvation was imminent. Being led to Mt. Tabor in search of food, a sudden panic seized them, and they fled disgracefully. Rallying the remnants of his army, by order of the Pope, he sailed to attack Egypt. The Sultan opened the sluices of the Delta, and the whole level country became a vast sea; and had not the Sultan had pity on him, they must have all perished to a man. The Sultan generously permitted them to evacuate, and leave for Acre, where they arrived a wretched, discouraged, and ruined army. End of sixth crusade.

The king of Navarre was conductor of the seventh Crusade. The expedition encountered the Mussulman forces at Gaza, who cut in pieces and captured the entire crusading army. So this was the only event that signalized the seventh crusade. They were just returning home, when Richard of England landed at Acre with a fleet of warriors. He led them to Jaffa. The Sultan of Egypt was at war with the Sultan of Damascus, and fearing a new danger, from a powerful Christian army, he sent to offer Richard conditions of peace. These were as favorable as could possibly be desired. Jerusalem, and nearly all the Holy Land, was to be given up, and all the prisoners taken at Gaza were to be restored. The great object of the crusades seemed now accomplished. Palestine now belonged to the Christians. The faithful began to exult in the permanent downfall of infidelity. Their work was done. But ah! no, not yet. From the vast "steppes" of northern Asia an immense army of Tartars and Mongols swept down upon that doomed, ill-fated city. A new enemy, stronger and more savage, appeared on the scene. Jerusalem again streamed with Christian blood, which was shed without pity, and without remorse. They made no treaties, and gave no quarters, and amidst fire and sword the devoted city fell. History records but few more terrible struggles than this battle. All were butchered. But the barbarians, who inflicted this crushing blow upon them, were not suffered to enjoy the fruits of their victory, for the Sultan of Egypt expelled them from Palestine, and took all the spoil himself, Jerusalem, and all the territory he had ceded to him. The remaining Christians of Syria never rallied again. They were now confined to Acre and vicinity. And the only hope of rescuing the relics of the kingdom of Godfrey from utter destruction lay in another crusade.

The eighth and ninth Crusades were directed by Louis IX. of France, a kind and honest king, but no general. Putting out to sea with a powerful armament, he sailed for Damietta, Egypt, to punish the Sultan, as he was the cause of all the evils which they were now suffering in Palestine. But the disasters and misfortunes which attended this unfortunate armada, both by land and sea, are too sad to enumerate. Attempting to penetrate to Cairo, a fearful pestilence, combined with starvation, set in with such frightful ravages that soon this fine army was reduced to a mere handful of helpless, destitute stragglers. Surrounded by this omnipresent foe—the fierce Mussulmen—they were all taken prisoners together, both king and army. The heads of many were cut off and placed around on the walls of Cairo. The king was ransomed, and arrived at Acre with a few of his followers.

It seemed as though there was an arm above that fought against them. Ill-starred misfortune alighted on every undertaking, but with king Louis, the desire to overthrow the Moslem or Turkish rule in Asia, was no passing sentiment or emotion, but a firm, steadfast purpose. So he sailed again with an army of sixty thousand on the ninth and last crusade. But misfortune alighted on it more rapidly than on any of its predecessors. It was determined to attack the city of Tunis, in Africa, it being a faithful ally and supporter of the Egyptian Sultan. With this view the fleet sailed to Carthage, and captured it; but a direful epidemic broke out in the ranks of the French army. King Louis was attacked by it and died. The grief felt for the king's death was excessive. They were now discouraged, and began to desire to return. The king of Tunis purchased their departure by a truce. All this was but the beginning of sorrows. On their way home, a fearful tempest arose, wrecking eighteen large ships, and four thousand Crusaders perished in the waves. Moreover, the pestilence followed them to their own land. The king and queen of Navarre, the queen of France, the mother of the king, the Count and Countess of Poitiers, died from it. And when Philip who succeeded his father Louis entered the French capital, he seemed to be advancing at the head of a vast funeral procession.

Europe was now satisfied of the impracticability of the subjugation of the East. The crusading spirit became extinct. Though the Popes continued to make efforts to arm the nations again, yet the kings and nobles could no longer be induced to listen to them. It only remains, therefore, to relate briefly the fate of the Christian settlements which still survived in Syria. Acre was at length besieged by the furious Saracens, and, unable through weakness to keep back the foe, they entered the city and massacred them indiscriminately. In the midst of a fearful storm, which broke over the devoted city, flames were seen to issue in various places, and the great stronghold of the Christians fell by fire and sword. Tyre, Beirout, and Sidon, followed, and soon all the work of the Crusades, and the efforts of two hundred years, finally disappeared. This was the last effort of the Christians in Palestine.

These historical facts relating to the Crusades have been carefully abridged from "Perry's" work on the Crusades, by myself, to show that "the Scriptures cannot be broken"; that the arm of flesh must fail, before the "sure word of prophecy." For positively "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles [not Christians] until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled."

Correspondence

From Bro. T. Howell.

BRO. GRANT:—I am very glad to hear that you are coming here again to preach the glorious gospel of the kingdom. "The field is white already for the harvest." The people are getting more and more interested in the truth. The ministers are doing all they can to set the people against the truths we preach. Last Sunday the minister of the first Baptist church said the truth would prevail, notwithstanding the errors preached in England by a class of men like a Mr. Grant in this country.

We had a precious season last night (Sunday) in commemorating the Savior dead. Bro. Fassett preached an excellent sermon from the words—"Looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith." Jesus seems more precious to me than ever. I love to think of him and praise him for what he has done and will do for all them who trust in him.

"O could we speak the matchless worth,
O could we sound the glories forth,
Which in our Savior shine;
We'd soar and touch the heavenly strings,
And vie with Gabriel while he sings,
In notes almost divine."

I feel that we shall be soon like him and see him as he is. His advent to our world the second time is near at hand, notwithstanding the many who say, Where is the promise of his coming? The world will not be looking for him. For as it was in the days of Noah, so it will be at his coming.

San Francisco, Dec. 4th.

BRO. J. H. BULLARD writes from Payne's Point, Ill., Nov. 13th, 1871:—"How good it is to know that Jesus is soon coming, when the poor, wandering, weary saints, who are buffeted and scorned because they love his appearing, will be delivered. How the signs cheer their poor hearts, as they look forward to the day when they shall rest from their labors, and never want again. I look around me, and wonder at the low ebb of christianity. It makes my heart sad to see so many professing but not possessing. But that must not discourage us, for this is one of the signs of the near approach of our Savior. Three weeks ago, I listened to a Free Methodist minister, Bro. Noble. He spoke about thirty minutes on the coming of Jesus, and cheered my heart. After he closed, I was invited to speak. I spoke of the signs of the times,—fires, earthquakes, famines, and pestilence. Then I exhorted them to be ready for Christ's coming. After I had finished, many got up and said they never saw things in this light before, and they meant to study their Bibles more clearly. I was invited to speak the next Sunday night, which I did; and there were many 'amens.' I feel encouraged to go on in this good way, warning sinners to flee from the wrath to come. It is time for every one to use whatever talents he may have.

I have had a lot given to me in the town of Chana, on the Chicago and Iowa R. R., providing I will build a church upon it. It is a new town, and there is no church of any kind there; the nearest being about six miles. I am canvassing the country for subscriptions to build.

Dear readers, pray much that the truth may spread among the churches, and pray that we may be wide-awake christians, looking for the coming of our loved One."

THE GREAT FIRES OF OCTOBER 8TH AND 10TH, 1871.—It is impossible for us to give more than the merest outline of these terrible calamities. Whole sides of our daily journals have for weeks past been filled with thrilling details, and yet the half has not been told. No such wholesale destruction of property and of human lives by fire has occurred for centuries past, and indeed rarely in the world's history. It is estimated that even the burning of Moscow did not equal the conflagration in Chicago, and that nothing since the great fire in London in the year 1666 has rivalled it.

From three to five square miles of territory in the very heart of the city were devastated by the fire. All the main hotels, the chief mercantile and banking houses, the post office, court house and water works, and many of the finest and most costly church edifices, were consumed. The Chicago Tribune, after a careful survey of the ruins, estimates that, out of 60,000 buildings in the city, about 13,500 have been destroyed; and these were the choicest and best, averaging in value far above those which remain. The entire loss cannot fall below $100,000,000, and some place it at two or three times this sum. The Tribune also estimates that 92,000 persons have been rendered homeless. Many of these were suddenly reduced from wealth and luxury to utter poverty and destitution. It is probable that at least 80,000 persons will be mainly dependent on charity for food and clothing and shelter for several months to come.

The loss of life, also, in this calamity was absolutely appalling, reaching many hundreds,—precisely how many can never be ascertained.

Cotemporaneously with this burning of Chicago, fires were also raging on the prairies and in the pine forests of the lumber regions, both in Wisconsin and Michigan. Not only solitary farm houses, but many villages were swept away so suddenly as to cut off all escape from the inhabitants, and the loss of human life was doubtless even greater than in Chicago. Senator Carpenter estimates the number that perished in Wisconsin at from twelve to eighteen hundred.—Christian World.

MERRILL. Died in Norway, Me., Nov. 28th, after one week's sickness, Sarah Ardell, daughter of Enoch and Esther Merrill, aged nineteen years. Sr. Ardell gave her heart to God when a child, and since then she has been faithful in her attendance to our social meetings, and always ready to speak a word for Jesus. Death found her ready and resigned to the will of God. Our dear Bro. and Sr. have been deeply afflicted. Of four promising children, only one remains to cheer their hearts.

Words of comfort were spoken by Eld. Jesse Gay, from John 11: 25, 26. S. P. F.

LEAVITT. Died Aug. 30th, in Stratham, N. H., of consumption, Bro. James Leavitt, aged fifty-nine years, nine months, and seventeen days.

He died in hope of eternal life through Christ. He leaves a wife and seven children. Was highly esteemed by all who knew him. May God give consoling grace to the sorrowing family, and they be enabled to meet that dear husband and father on that glad morn when he shall come from the land of the enemy. Words of consolation were spoken by the writer, from 1 Thess. 4: 18.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

LONDON, Dec. 13. A special dispatch to the Standard from St. Petersburg states that yesterday the Czarowitz Alexander became involved in a private dispute with the Prince de Reuss, Minister of the German Empire to Russia. The passions of both were aroused, and the Czarowitz so far forgot himself as to make a personal assault on the Embassador. Friends interfered, and the belligerents were separated. Much excitement is caused by the incident.

PARIS, Dec. 15. (New York Herald's Special.) At half-past five Thursday morning another interview took place between Thiers and the Orleans Princes, which lasted an hour and a half and was of an unfriendly character. Thiers complained especially that the Duc d'Aumale had not strictly observed the terms of the previous agreement, inasmuch as he had endeavored to interest Generals in his favor. Duc d'Aumale denied this. Thiers said, "I know that you have visited many Generals who are members of the Assembly, with the view to obtain their support in case of an emergency. You had several interviews with Gen. Ducrot, to whom you have laid your purposes. You saw Gen. Billot, at whose private residence in Paris you called. You saw Generals Martin, De Paillieres, Chanzy and others. I doubt not your aim is patriotic, but to pursue it thus is not in accordance with our agreement; and I was particularly surprised and discontented, that not satisfied with these measures, you also made similar visits to many of the subordinate generals of the army of Paris, whose names I can give you, if you are ignorant of them. The Duc answered evasively, and terminated the interview with the declaration that he would now take the advice of his friends, not as to whether he shall take his seat, but only with reference as to the proper time for doing so.

Gen. Bourbaki told the Duc d'Aumale, in the presence of Gen. Ducrot, that only a Republic or an Empire was competent to restore France, and he could serve no other regime. The Orleans plan is for the Right to take advantage of President Thiers' impatience, and at the first opportunity to force his resignation, make d'Aumale President, and to follow with a declaration proclaiming Count Chambord King of France, Count de Paris heir to the throne, and Duc d'Aumale Lieutenant General of the Kingdom.

SANDRINGHAM, Dec. 16. The convalescence of the Prince has commenced and progresses slowly but steadily.

EGYPT.

THE LATE DROWNING OF 75 PILGRIMS.

NEW YORK, Dec. 14. A letter from Alexandria, Egypt, gives the details of the drowning of the seventy-five Algerian pilgrims. They had arrived in the outer harbor, on their way to Mecca, when protests from consuls against their landing were made on the ground that they would disseminate cholera and other contagious diseases. Orders were given to land them outside the city, and they were taken from the steamer on a lighter, and while being towed ashore the craft was struck by another lighter, cutting her to the water's edge. She sank immediately, carrying all down. The event caused no particular sensation in Alexandria.

FEARS OF THE CHOLERA.

The same letter says that the East is restless under the cholera scourge. Cyprus has been attacked by it. The coast of Syria is threatened. Vessels from Candia are quarantined, and unless earnest protests are made by the Western Powers, Alexandria, which is the great highway to and from India, will disseminate the cholera around the globe.

DOMESTIC,

PRISON DISCIPLINE AND REFORM.

Hartford, Ct., Dec. 14. Governor Jewell has appointed Dr. G. N. Russell and Charles J. Warner of Hartford, and Hon. Francis Wayland, Commissioners to report to the next Legislature upon prison discipline and reform. The Commissioners will visit some of the prominent penal institutions of the country, as well as the prisons of our own State, in order to suggest plans for the improvement in prison management here, if it shall be found that such improvement is called for.

THE COLD TERM IN NEBRASKA.—The Omaha papers furnish some interesting particulars of the effects of the cold weather recently experienced in the Far West. In Nebraska the cold has been intense and protracted, and the suffering unprecedentedly severe. Large numbers of persons were frozen to death; in one instance a whole family perishing from exposure. They were out of fuel of any kind, and the man started for the timber to obtain some, and froze to death beside his team. The woman burned everything she could find to burn, and finally placed her infant in the stove and burned a part of her own clothing to prevent it from freezing, but without avail. The infant was frozen to death, as well as the mother, and both were found, the babe in the oven, and the guardian mother beside it, after the storm had abated.

☞ Pio Nono comforts himself for his loss of temporal power it is said, by playing billiards, in which he has grown particularly skillful since Rome ceased to be an ecclesiastical city. Cardinal Antonelli, who is often his adversary, is easily discounted by Pio. Antonelli is reported to have declared that adversity so much improved the Pope's stroke that, if he should be driven from the Eternal City, he would be the best billiard-player in all Europe.

In Brief.

—— Jews have long been settled in the solitary Island of St. Helena, off the African coast. An account of the island was written some thirty or forty years ago by a Jewish settler, who was probably resident when Napoleon was a prisoner. For some time a Jewish gentleman has held the position of Consul there.——The question of religious corporations at Rome is evidently to give rise to very great discussion in the Italian Parliament. Some of the Cabinet Ministers are in favor of the immediate application of the law which has broken up the conventional establishments in all Italy, except Rome; others are desirous of putting off, for the present, all legislation on the subject. The Catholic party is prepared to fight the proposed law to the uttermost. ——Accounts from Persia state that the horror of the famine there has not yet reached its climax. ——In Kansas the cold has been such that the Texan cattle driven in to winter upon the prairies are dying by scores of thousands, while the wild buffalo have come up in droves to seek the shelter of fences, and even standing freight trains.—— Great events in the political world are shortly expected in England.——Not quite a third of the whole number of buildings in Chicago was burned, but the value of those destroyed was fully equal to those saved.——The printers of the country sent over $6000 to their brethren in Chicago who were suffering by the fire.——The actual saving of time by the Mont Cenis tunnel's creation in the transport of the Indian mail is very great, but the English are now talking of compressing the time so that it will be a day and a half less than now.——The English papers report that the Princess of Wales has suffered from an attack from the same poison as the Prince. It was caught at the same time, but her life has never been in danger.——Upwards of 60,000 loads of refuse material from the Chicago fire have been thrown into Lake Michigan, and yet but a trifling impression has been made upon the large amount of debris left by the conflagration.——A great commercial port is to be constructed at the mouth of the Neva. There a railway coming from St. Petersburg is to terminate, and immense warehouses are to be built.——In Siberia during the winter, milk is bought and sold in a frozen state, and can be carried for a long period in a simple bag. When required for use the requisite quantity is chopped off with a hatchet or sheath-knife, and thawed as needed.

"COME UNTO ME."

I heard the voice of Jesus say,
"Come unto me and rest;
Lay down, thou weary one, lay down
Thy head upon my breast."

I came to Jesus as I was,
Weary and worn and sad;
I found in him a resting place,
And he has made me glad.

I heard the voice of Jesus say,
"Behold, I freely give
The living water; thirsty one,
Stoop down, and drink and live."

I came to Jesus, and I drank
Of that life-giving stream;
My thirst was quenched, my soul revived,
And now I live in him.

I heard the voice of Jesus say,
"I am this dark world's light;
Look unto me, thy morn shall rise,
And all thy day be bright."

I looked to Jesus, and I found
In him my star, my sun,
And in that light of life I'll walk
Till traveling days are done.

LETTER FROM CALIFORNIA.

TO THE EDITOR OF CRISIS:—It seems to be the fate of truth—if we may so speak—to undergo a certain amount of contumely; truth discovered in science or revived in religion; truth secular and truth divine. In other words, it is of the phenomena of the earth's time, that no truth is of easy deliverance into popularity. That some have mistaken the scorn deservedly applied to new falsehoods for a very evidence or sign of a developed truth, does not take from the rule of afflictions attending genuine enlightenment which we have mentioned.

Bigotry does not appear to be the property of any sect or denomination; it belongs to all narrow-minded good people as well as to big-headed children of the devil. And many are brought into the light and liberty of an advanced dispensation, who run to and fro and denounce an "increase in knowledge" beyond a certain fixed point unto the comprehension of which they were born, or absolutely thrust by circumstances. I want to keep the little brain I have ready for "present truths." Not spiritualistic, demoniac "developments," "progressive conceptions of the immaterial soul," etc.; but developments and conceptions that are legitimately afforded or which are commended by the Word. That in the last days we are not to be in the dark concerning some things which were "hard to be understood" aforetime, is generally conceded among christians of culture. And a large company of the unlettered agree and rejoice in the acceptance of this proclamation.

A man may not care for the sneer of an opponent, with whose religious doctrines he has notoriously disagreed for a long time. But it is hard, sometimes, when it comes to the corner where you meet the cold looks and perhaps hear the severe words of your old friend, because you (as you honestly believe) have received, and have candidly avowed a latest "present truth." And to be called an "infidel," or to have it distinctly intimated to you before the congregation that you do not believe, that you reject, the plain teachings of the Bible,—this is an ordeal.

When a man looks at us with owl-like eyes of wisdom, or beams upon us with the shocked innocence of a rabbit, at the moment we chance to speak our respectful regard for or agreement in a new interpretation of certain passages of Scripture—if he is a stranger—we may pass the matter by with small compunctions; we may not expect or dread an open rebuke. But when for our inadvertent or formally intended confession of faith in any particular "reading" of the word or of science, a friend opens and empties upon us the vials of reproach, and closes his phillipic with the curse that Spurgeon is said to append to his services, then we are surely undergoing affliction.

How many have said to you and to me—"No one who believes the Bible and is familiar with its teachings can doubt the doctrine of the eternal torment of the impenitent." In one phrase or another, we have all endured this bitter private excommunication. We fancied that we should escape this trial: the test of "all men (apparently) speaking evil of us." But it was not so to be. Well: a faith that will not stand up, in all respects, in the house of one's personal friends—not for strife, but for the vindication of the right—is not of any value. And the falling away of kindred and denominational relatives and friends ought not to impair, but the rather intensify, our adherence to and zeal for that which our humble but sincere minds, after prayerful consultation with the Bible, take and approve as truth.

I have found companionship occasionally with learned men who, although they were shining lights in a sect, yet had no conceit as to their creeds or articles. They did not call me an infidel because I did not believe in many of their orthodox dogmas. And I have known it to be the case that men of such character and catholicity were denounced by persons professing the Advent Christian faith, because in the light that they had they did not receive and preach Advent truths. It don't do any good in religious controversy to call names; and truth cannot be stared out of countenance by a grave-yard full of editorial exclamation points. To club another with the term "soul-sleeper" (a misnomer, in its place) and "infidel" and "Bible-rejector" may be inflicting pain upon a friend, or exciting simple regret in a stranger. I do not like to have my friends call me a hater or spurner of God's word; and although I was once considered "first-rate" at epithet coining and flinging, I cannot see my way clear to deal in that business to-day. And as for staring a man out of all interest in the Bible, I insist the process is ridiculous; it cannot be done. If we wished to retaliate in kind—thinking that for some reason expedient and permissible—the opportunity is abundant. After all, straight talk is the best.

When we are criticised, it is of great advantage to us to have the grounds of the criticism fully set forth. Then we can judge for ourselves whether we are justly reviewed and reprimanded, or simply abused. So we like to have every preacher publicly deliver a sermon, or print a book or newspaper article, when he proposes to overthrow in one grand swamp the doctrine of eternal life only in Christ, and bring shame upon its advocates. For it may be that he (and others in similar scouting mood on other topics) quotes much Scripture only to surround it with a mass of non sequitur context.

To say merely that if such or such is not the exact case the Bible record is not true, is one of the cheap sentences of our opponents; trying to make the Bible bear the sins of their Articles. When we begin to adopt this style of writing, we shall be passing into the worst offences of intellectual bigotry. The retort is almost always convenient; and then the controversy would rapidly degenerate into challenges for truth based respectively on isolated texts, or fragments of Scripture paragraphs.

THE 1290 AND 1335 DAYS.—Dan. 12.

N. H. BARBOUR.

Brethren:—There are so many views of the above prophecy, that I am almost afraid to offer the following for publication; and only venture in the hope that for the sake of sweet charity, which not only believeth, but "endureth all things," they will be kindly looked at, at least, if not entertained.

These periods were given in answer to a single question, and seem to refer exclusively to God's people; and not, like most other prophecies, to political events. They are twin periods; for the definite article "the," in the 12th verse, implies that the thousand years belong equally to both.

If they refer to political events, why should not the world understand them, as they do that of the taking away of the dominion of papacy, and many other prophetic periods? If the 1290 days were not given to mark the beginning of the Advent movement, why are they coupled with the period which is designed to mark the end of that movement? And I might ask one more question: Why, in their fulfillment, do they apply only to God's people? Permit me to explain.

If the abomination was "set up" in A. D. 538, when the "woman" of Rev. 17 took her seat on the Roman beast, then the thousand years, to which such special reference is made, would have ended in 1538, at which time that terrible despotism was broken in upon, and God opened a door for his Philadelphian church, which no man can shut. See Church History by Charles Hase, N. Y., 1855, page 391. "In A. D. 1538 was formed the holy league against papacy, by the Archbishop of Mentz, the Archbishop of Strasburgh, the Duke of Bavaria, George of Saxony, Henry of Brunswick, supported by Frances of France, Henry of England, and other northern powers." "If those days had not been shortened, viz., the 1260 of papal dominion, by the Luthern reformation, there should no flesh have been saved, but for the elect's sake, God hath shortened them."

If the above is the correct application of the thousand years (not of Rev. 20), then the remainder, (290) ended when the Advent movement began, in 1828. Not only does Bro. Miller state in his lectures, published in 1840, that he began the study of these prophecies twelve years previous, viz., in 1828, but I have a book before me now, published in London in 1831, in which the author states that he began to look for this glorious hope in 1828. And in different parts of the world there were many who began about that time to look and wait "for his Son from heaven."

"The wicked shall do wickedly, and none of the wicked shall understand." The world will consider this beginning of Millerism a small matter to be a subject of prophecy. The movement of great men and kings may fill the prophetic page, but that so small a matter as the gathering out of a waiting people who should "go forth to meet the bridegroom," should be worthy of mention is simply nonsense. They do not understand that one of the least of God's little flock, to say nothing of his accumulated jewels, is of more importance in the courts of heaven, than a whole regiment of Alexanders. And some of our brethren in their humility, think this beginning pretty small.

If God should tell us that when the commotion caused by the falling of a certain pebble into the ocean, had reached to the uttermost drop of water, the blast from that trump which calls the sleeping nations to judgment, should be heard, we would consider the falling of the pebble an important event.

If God is gathering out a waiting people there must needs have been a beginning, however small, and the standard by which he measures, who lets not a sparrow fall to the ground without his notice, differs widely from that of the world. "Then shall the kingdom of heaven be likened" etc., began in 1828; and when the longer of these twin periods ends, it shall be said, "Lo, this is our God, we have waited for him." Amen.

"BEAR YE ONE ANOTHER'S BURDENS."

D. P. FRENCH.

We once knew a preacher, who was a good companion for christians who were always on high ground, strong, and capable of holding up their heads and advancing under any circumstances; but he had but little sympathy for poor, weak travelers, who were halting, stumbling and trembling under doubts and fears. One evening, at a social meeting, a brother spoke, who had been living away from such privileges, and consequently felt that he was a little behind, and somewhat in the dark. He confessed that he was in a low state, and mourned over his want of spirituality, but expressed a desire to get on higher ground, and asked the brethren to pray for him. The preacher arose and said, "What a fool a man is to be wallowing along in the gutter, when he can just as well have a good road to walk on." We thought that was cold comfort for a poor soul who was struggling to get out of the slough of despondency.

There are a great many people very much like that preacher. They soar aloft (or think they do), and then from their exalted, comfortable seat on a cloud, they look down with a great deal of self-complacency, and a little mock sympathy, on the toiling throng below, and say to them, "Poor, foolish creatures, to struggle along in that way! you don't enjoy anything; why don't you come up where I am? then you would know something about religion and its joys." When I am in the valley of despondency, and one of these high-mounted people come along with words of rebuke, admonition, or advice, I feel just like saying, Do ride along, if you are prospering so finely, and leave me alone; I don't want anything of you. But if a dear christian comes, and with true christian sympathy says, "My friend, I am sorry for you; I know just how to pity you. I have been there myself, and know full well how cold and muddy the waters are in the slough of Despond. I might have been there now, but Jesus in great mercy came to the rescue and helped me out. And he will rescue you. Come, give me your hand, and let us walk on together, and help each other, trusting in Him who loves us both, and who will succor us in every time of danger." I feel like joining hands with such an one and traveling on.

Professed followers of Jesus, if you would bring people up from the lowlands, you must be like the Master and go down after them. It will not do to be too afraid of getting muddy, if you want to help poor stumblers out of the gutter; and it will do no good to scold them for being there. Neither will it do to be too afraid of losing a high position, if you want to help people out of doubts and fears and cruel unbelief. You may not feel quite so light and buoyant, you may suffer a little with them; but what of that, if you may be glorified together? Where would you be now, if Christ had not left his high estate and come down to seek and save the lost and perishing? What good would it do for him to say, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, if he had not first lowered himself into the sinner's place, and gone down, crushed and broken, into the earth under the awful weight of their sins? Think of it, children, how Christ humbled himself for you, poor lost sinners. "He was rich, yet for our sakes he became poor, that we through his poverty might be made rich." Some people are not willing to go where there is poverty, or suffering, or distress of any kind, because it makes them feel gloomy. Did you never think, dear friend, that all the load you get by visiting the suffering is taking just so much from their heavy burden? Your visit, and the interest it manifested, cheered and comforted them as much as it depressed you. Are you not willing to bear a very little of their heavy load? "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ."

Sometimes, we find people who have a wonderful faculty of getting along without carrying burdens at all, either for others or themselves. If they do wrong they have the power, somehow, to transfer all the load to other shoulders; and then, stately and erect, with an air of great satisfaction, they say to the poor souls who are bending under the unjust load, "Now if you were as free from any weight as I am, how fast you could travel."

Lord, help thy children to sympathize with the suffering, to lift up the bowed down, to comfort those that mourn, and to condescend to those of low estate. One thing is certain; the more Christ we have in our hearts, the more humble we shall be, and the lower we can go to save the lost children of men.

CHRISTIAN EXPERIENCE.

MARGARET HOWARD.

BRO. GRANT:—While reading an article in the Crisis a few days since, under the title "Christian Experience," the thought came to me very forcibly, as it has done many times before, you had better write yours. I feel incompetent; but if it will be the means of bringing one precious soul out into the glorious liberty of the children of God, I shall feel amply repaid, and give God all the glory.

I was left an orphan at the early age of three years; but the Lord provided near and dear friends, who trained me up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, praying with and for me daily. From my earliest recollections, I wanted to be a christian. I loved to pray in secret when but a little child. I think it was about the year 1831, at a time when the Lord was pouring out his Spirit in a powerful manner in the town where I then lived, while listening to a sermon preached by Mr. N. F. Prime, a Presbyterian minister, from these words: "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve," that I was brought to see myself a lost sinner, without an interest in Christ. I made up my mind that as for me, I would seek the Lord with all my heart, and never give up until I found Jesus precious to my soul. My distress of mind increased for about three weeks. It became so great I could hardly endure it; but I was enabled to believe in Jesus, and accept of him as my Savior. I felt truly that my sins were all forgiven, that I was a new creature in Christ Jesus. The change was sudden, and although I was but a child, I had a clear evidence of my acceptance with God.

For some years I had very many precious seasons in trying to serve the Lord. Many times I was blest in taking up the cross, and made very happy in the love of Jesus, so that I could praise God with a loud voice for what he had done for me. But I am sorry in my heart that I did not always live as near to Jesus as it was my privilege. I began to feel that I was prone to wander from God. I would often yield to temptation, and that would bring darkness; but thanks be unto my heavenly Father that he never withdrew from me his Holy Spirit; but when I wandered from him in any degree, he would call after me by his Spirit and bring me back. Glory be to his holy name forever. I was called to pass through a severe fit of sickness. I think it was in the year 1846. Fearing I was not prepared to meet God in peace, I promised him that if he would raise me up, I would live nearer to him, and serve him better. The Lord heard my prayer, raised me from that bed of sickness, and I was enabled to keep my promise. I enjoyed more religion from that time than I ever did before. I was learning how to live nearer to Jesus, and felt much of the presence of my Savior; but there were times when I would have doubts and fears; and sometimes, when things went wrong, I would feel anger rising up, and perhaps I would speak unadvisedly with my lips; but oh, how I would mourn over it, and beg of the Lord to forgive me. I did not want to sin against the God I loved. Here I was in the seventh chapter of Romans, at times feeling truly wretched, praying to be delivered from the body of this death. I truly felt it was worse than death, my God to love, and not my God alone. O how I longed to arrive at that state of religious experience, when I should be rid of those doubts and fears, and when I would not yield to the temptations of the enemy; but I did not know this was my precious privilege. I never had heard the doctrine of holiness preached at this time, but it was the greatest desire of my heart to get rid of sin in every form.

I think it was in the year 1848, I was permitted to listen to a sermon preached by Jesse T. Peck, from these words: "Be ye holy, for I am holy." 1 Pet. 1: 16. While listening to this precious sermon (for which I thank God), I began to feel a great desire to be holy. I learned now that this was my precious privilege. The Lord begat within me such a hungering and thirsting after righteousness as I never had experienced before. My desire for a pure heart increased daily. One day, I called on a dear sister, who also was seeking the great blessing of a clean heart, or of entire sanctification, for there were others who were convicted under the same sermon that it was their privilege to be cleansed from all sin. The conversation I had with her only increased my desire for purity. The language of my heart was, "Create within me a clean heart, O God, and renew within me a right spirit." I think this was about the middle of November. I continued to hunger and thirst after righteousness. There was a prayer meeting in the Methodist church, of which I was then a member, at half-past five o'clock on Christmas morning. I went, and found the dear sister there of whom I have spoken. She arose and told us what the Lord had done for her the evening before. She had been enabled to receive Christ by faith as a perfect Savior. She felt that the blood of Jesus Christ cleansed her from all sin. She was filled to overflowing with the love of Jesus. O how this increased my desire for a clean heart. I wept like a child. I thought if I could only receive this great blessing, how willingly I would give up every thing; become a fool for Christ's sake; and be willing to have the finger of scorn pointed at me, or suffer any thing that I might be pure in heart.

They commenced a series of meetings soon after New Year's. It came to my mind one evening to invite this sister to go home with me. I did so. She said she would the next night, and did. This, no doubt, was of the Lord. I learned a great deal from this sister. She prayed with and for me, and tried to teach me the way. She told me when I laid all upon the altar, I would receive the blessing. I felt willing to give up all. I knew of nothing I was keeping back; but I felt no better, but worse.

What I had suffered up to this time was nothing to be compared to what I suffered after. I have often asked myself the question, Why did I have to suffer so much, when so many others received the blessing with so little suffering comparatively? The question remains not fully answered to my mind. But to return. The whole day the sister was there was spent in holy conversation. She was trying to teach me the way, and I was trying to get nearer to Jesus. When the time came for the evening service, we started for church. Said she, "Now, sister, don't let us talk any more, but look right to the Lord, and ask him to prepare your heart for the blessing." I did so. This was my earnest prayer every moment. Just then the agony of soul commenced, such as I never experienced before. The distress I now felt was not like what I felt before conversion, but it was an intense desire for a pure heart.

By the time we arrived at the church, my agony was so great that my bodily strength was almost exhausted. When the hymn was read, it increased my agony, it was so very appropriate. I will write the first verse:

"O come and dwell in me,
Spirit of power within,
And bring the glorious liberty
From sorrow, fear and sin."

When the text was read, no tongue can describe the distress I felt. It was almost unendurable. It was in Isa. 55: 1,—"Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters; and he that hath no money, come ye, buy and eat; yea, come; buy wine and milk, without money and without price." O how the Lord sent every word of that text home to my heart. The distress was so great, I sank under it. I do not remember any of the sermon. At the close, the invitation was given to those who were seeking for a clean heart to come forward to the altar. The Lord gave me strength to get there. They prayed earnestly for me, and I for myself, but no relief.

At the close of the meeting, the dear sister who had been with me that day wished me to meet her at our pastor's the next day. I did so. Our pastor's wife was a very holy woman, filled with the Spirit of God. The two sisters and myself retired by ourselves, and bowed before God. They earnestly carried my case to him in prayer. The Lord gave me the precious promise to plead: "I will sprinkle clean water upon you," etc. I was enabled there to make an entire consecration of all I had to God; and I knew it; but I did not feel that I had received what I had so long sought for. Just at this time, our pastor's wife came and knelt by me, and said, "Now, sister, you must believe." I said, "I have given up all." "Yes," said she, "we know you have; we felt it. Now you have done what the Lord commanded you to do. You must believe that he does what he has promised; that he accepts of you now." O, thought I, what a hard spot; but I must believe, I must venture on Christ, for I must be pure in heart in order to see God. I never can go through again what I have suffered, for it was a death, a crucifixion.

Thank God, I was enabled just there to make the venture, and by faith fell into the arms of Jesus. O it seemed as if the very heavens gave way, and salvation free and full was poured out upon me. Joy unspeakable and full of glory filled my soul. I knew the blood of Jesus cleansed me from all sin. I had the evidence just as clear as the sun shining at noon-day. I had just entered the land of Beulah, where the sun shines three hundred and sixty-five days in a year; where all is peace and joy in the Holy Ghost. I had just laid aside the weights. I could now run with delight the race set before me. I was just prepared to grow in grace.

I want to say to the glory of God, that he has kept me these twenty-three years; and many times during these years I have received still greater blessings than the one of which I have spoken. And although I have been permitted to receive such unspeakable blessings at times, yet I have had to live by faith, sometimes without joy; but at all times could feel, Jesus saves me now from all sin. My heart swells with love and gratitude to God for what he has done for me. He has kept me by his power through faith unto this present time, and I expect he will unto salvation. I would say with the apostle, "And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and I pray God your whole spirit, and soul, and body, be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ."

STOPPING A NEWSPAPER.—One of our exchanges has the following allegory, which we commend to the careful consideration of those gentlemen who, the moment they see anything which displeases them in the columns of their local journal, rush to the printing office and cry out, "Stop my paper." It is certainly a new song upon the old subject:

"A certain man hit his toe against a pebble and fell headlong to the ground. He was vexed, and under the influence of anger and self-sufficiency he kicked the earth right saucily. With imperturbable gravity he looked to see the earth itself dissolve and come to naught. But the earth remained and only his poor foot was injured in the encounter. This is the way of man. An article in a newspaper touches him in a weak spot, and forthwith he sends to stop his paper. With great complacency he looks to see the crash, when he finds he only hit his own toe against a world that does not perceptibly feel the shock, and injures no one but himself."

MAKE YOUR CHOICE.

N. S. MCMURPHY.

"Choose you this day whom ye will serve."—Josh. 24: 15.

God, in his arrangement, has given man the power of choice in regard to his future interests. Men choose their own occupations in this life, and they select with an eye to the greatest pecuniary benefits. It is not always a question what occupation will cost the least labor, but what will bring me the most wealth. This power is a gift of God, and the same power of choice is given them in regard to that mode of life that affects their eternal interests. Choose you whom ye will serve, says the Lord, by the mouth of his servant. On this choice hangs man's eternal destiny, and this destiny is clearly revealed in the Scriptures.

When the great and glorious plan of redemption and salvation was given, and revealed to the world, this same power of choice was left to man, either to accept and become a part of the plan, or in other words workers with God, praising and glorifying him here, and reigning with him hereafter; or rejecting salvation, freely offered, serving the world, the flesh and the devil here, and be finally rejected of God at last, and cast off into outer darkness. When Jesus came into the world, suffered and died, it was for "whosoever will,"—no compulsion. When he says, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest," it was to all that chose to come to him.

God invites all, warns all. Christ says Come, to all. He is ready to save all. The Spirit and bride says come. God's people invite all to come and go with them to the kingdom. God's grace has appeared to all men. His Spirit strives with all, but it is to those that accept and obey, that will finally reap eternal life.

Dear reader, what is your choice to-day? Do you choose to be a follower of Jesus in this sinful world, with its crosses, and reign with him in glory? or do you choose to follow the pleasures and vanities of the world, and lose eternal life at last? There is a crown of life laid up for every true follower of Jesus, and he will soon come to give it to his faithful ones. While the world is rushing on, heedless of the times in which we live, God's faithful ones are looking for Jesus soon to come and redeem them and crown them his forever. The great and coming day will be a glorious one to those who are ready, but a day of darkness and wo to them that have rejected Christ and his gospel. How sweet the hope and prospect of the coming inheritance to Christ's waiting bride. O let us be ready to hail the glad day.

CHRISTIAN REVIVAL IN SYRIA.

[The following account of a most wonderful work of God will be read with deepest interest by all who look and pray for the universal triumph of the kingdom of Jesus.]

During the last three years a very singular movement towards Christianity has been going on among the Moslems of Syria. Until now, when its consequences threaten to become serious, it appears altogether to have escaped public notice in this country. According to a writer in "The Tablet," the movement commenced at the close of 1868," with certain of the Shadili,—Sufis or Mystics,—esoterics from El Islam, settled in the vicinity of Damascus. In the Maydan suburb of that city resided one Abd-el-Karim Matar, a leader of the sect in question, who was wont to assemble his disciples around him to the number of sixty or seventy, and to "spend days and nights in praying for enlightenment, before the throne of grace." The striking result of these persistent supplications is thus described by the writer in the Tablet, to whom we refer:—

"Presently after, persevering in this new path, some of them began to be agitated by doubts and disbelief: the religion did not satisfy them; they anxiously sought for a better. They became uncertain, disquieted, undetermined, yet unable, for fear of being betrayed, to declare even one to another the thought which tormented them. Two years had been spent in this anxious, unhappy state, each thinking himself the only one thus subject to the tortures of conscience. At length they were assured by a vision that it was the religion of Christ which they were seeking. Yet such was their dread of treachery, that none could trust his secret with his neighbor till they had sounded one another and had found that the same idea was uppermost in every mind. One night, about forty of them, headed by Abd-el-Karim Matar, met for their usual prayers; and, after prolonged devotional acts, all fell asleep, and our Lord was pleased to appear to each one separately. They awoke simultaneously, frightened and agitated; and one, taking courage, recounted his vision to the others, when each responded, 'I also saw him!' Christ had so consoled, comforted, and exhorted them to follow his faith, and they were so filled with a joy they had never known, that they were hardly dissuaded from running about the streets to proclaim that Christ is God; but they were admonished that they would only be slaughtered, and rob the city of all hope of entering the same fold. They wanted a guide, director, and friend, who would assist their tottering steps in the new way which they were now treading; and they heartily prayed that God would be pleased mercifully to provide them with the object of their desire. One night, after a meeting for acts of devotion, as before mentioned, sleep overcame them, and they saw themselves in a Christian church, where an old man with a long white beard, dressed in a coarse brown serge garment, and holding a lighted taper, glided before them, and, smiling, benignantly, never ceased to cry, 'Let those who want the truth follow me.' On awaking, each told his dream to the other, and they agreed to occupy themselves in seeking the person who had appeared to them. They searched in vain through the city and its environs for a period of three months, during which they continued to pray. One day it so happened that one of the new converts, H—— K——, now at J——, entered by chance the monastery of the RR. Fathers of the Terra Santa, near Bad Huma, the northeastern gate of Damascus. What was his astonishment to see in the superior, Fray Emanuel Forner, the personage who had appeared to him in his dream."

They all desired to be baptized, and instructed in the doctrines of Christianity. After some precautionary delay, Fray Emanuel Forner complied with their request. The forty were received into the church; and in a short time after had increased to two hundred and fifty converts, who held regular meetings in each other's houses, which in due time did not fail to attract the attention of their Moslem neighbors. The Ulema of Damascus were thrown into a state of the utmost consternation; and at last a meeting was held in the town-house of the Algerine Amir, Abd-el-Kadir, at which a resolution was passed, pronouncing sentence of death against the converts. Fourteen of them were cast into prison by order of Rashid Pasha, where they remained for three months, when, at the solicitation of the Russian Consul, M. Macouf, they were temporarily released. Twelve of them were subsequently re-arrested, and transported to the dungeons of Hanak Kalessi, the Dardanelles fortress; their wives and children being left in a starving condition at Damascus. Finally, they were landed on the coast of Barbary, and banished to the distant interior settlement of Murzuk. But these severities have by no means, as it appears from the statements of "The Tablet," suppressed the movement they were designed to crush. It is affirmed that there are now five thousand neophytes in Damascus alone.

To this account we have to contribute something of our own information. We hear of Syrian villages en masse voluntarily offering themselves for conversion to Christianity; and among the converts are not only the poor, but many of the richest Moslems about Damascus. And we have reason to apprehend that this "revival" will lead to a collision between Christians and Moslems in Syria. It is true, that, as a rule, there is absolutely no ill-feeling between Christians and Moslems in Syria except where it is engendered and fostered by the authorities upon the old principle "Divide and rule." During the massacre year of 1860, in many villages the Moslem peasants fought against men of their own faith to defend their christian brethren.

The plea against carrying out the grant of complete liberty of conversion to "all renegades," as the late Fuad Pasha phrased it when writing to Lord Stratford de Redcliffe, is, on the part of Turkey, fear lest Moslem fanaticism should disturb the tranquility of the empire. But in reality, the only disturbances are caused by the local authorities, and then they are invoked by them as a reason for withdrawing toleration. Under these circumstances, it is clear that in a place like Damascus, subject to the direct action of the authorities, such a movement is fraught with danger, not only to Europeans and to European protected subjects, but to the whole Christian population. The latter, according to the last government census, numbered 14,215, out of a total of 108,619; but the figures must be increased in round numbers to 20,000 and 120,000. During the massacre year (1860), some seven thousand perished, and we do not want to see that again. We are indeed by no means bound to protect the sultan's subjects; but it is our duty as well as our interest to see that treaties are respected.

MINISTERS' SALARIES.—"The ratio of salaries to the cost of living is less than it was ten years ago. The former has increased about fifty per cent., and the latter full one hundred. Our city ministers receive large salaries in many cases, but they are all absorbed, and more besides, by enormous rents and the enormous cost of living, and the extra benevolent calls made upon them; while in the country, not only in parts adjacent to cities, but throughout the rural districts, the general extension of railways and other causes have greatly and permanently increased the necessaries of life and more nearly equalized the cost of living. In numerous instances the country pastor now needs as large a salary as the city, and in the majority of cases as large as would have sufficed for the city thirty years ago. . . .

'There is no other class of men among us so poorly paid as our clergymen. Their average pay is only a little more than half the pay of skilled mechanical labor. According to Commissioner Wells's report, the price of trained mechanical labor ranges from $3.50 to $8 per day. Average it at $4, and the mechanic receives for 313 working days $1,252, while the clergyman, who has expended from five to eight years, and from $3,000 to 5,000 on his education, and who works 363 days in the year, gets $700 or less!'"—Ex.

INDUSTRY.—Man must have occupation or be miserable. Toil is the price of sleep and appetite—of health and enjoyment. The very necessity which overcomes our natural sloth is a blessing. The whole world does not contain ergo a briar or thorn which nature could have spared. We are happier with the sterility, which we can overcome by industry, than we could have been with spontaneous plenty and unbounded profusion. The body and the mind are improved by the toil that fatigues them. The toil is a thousand times rewarded by the pleasures which it bestows. Its enjoyments are peculiar. No wealth can purchase them—no indolence can taste them. They flow only from the exertions which repay the laborer.

NEWSPAPER TRAINING.—We can safely recommend a graduate of a newspaper office for almost any station in life, at least for all such as require a pretty good knowledge of the peculiarities and characteristics of the human family. A man who can preserve the serenity of his temper, the sweetness of christian disposition, and an unflagging perseverance amid all the obstacles and difficulties which newspaper publication presents, deserves to be ranked with Job for patience, Baxter for goodness, and the Iron Duke, for instance, for nerve power and obstinate determination.—Christian World.

Gems.

— Sophistry is like a window curtain,—it pleases as an ornament, but its true use is to keep out the light.

— All Christians ought to be humble, but the minister of the Gospel especially so.

— In many places the moral power of the pulpit is waning, because of the pride taken into it.

— None talk so loudly of benevolence as those who subsist upon it.

— We must win as well as enlighten, or, as the apostle would say, "speak the truth in love."

— If Loyola had sent out as persistent and zealous reformers as he did Jesuits, long ago the simple cross would have conquered the world.

— Truth is served, not by coercion, by forcible suppression, but by the liberation and enlargement that agitation invites and secures.

"Stillest streams
Oft water fairest meadows; and the bird
That flutters least is longest on the wing."

— What an incentive to holiness, to purity of life and conduct, lies in the fact that the body of a saint is the temple of God. A truer, nobler temple than that which Solomon dedicated by his prayers, Jesus consecrates by his presence.

— When wisdom reigns in the head, and love in the heart, the man is ever ready to do good; order and peace reign around, and sin and sorrow are almost unknown.

— To whom you betray your secrets you betray your liberty.

— God calls men to special work. When the call is clearly understood, and promptly obeyed, the man works with a zeal and directness utterly incomprehensible to the drone or the masses of "word and tongue" lovers of God.

— Christ is real power, and when the conditions are complied with by which he becomes identified in heart and life with the christian, little else is needed for a life of happiness, and nothing more to make us successful in winning men from error to God.

— Handle rough-sided men carefully. It pays to take a little time when you are opening chestnut burs.

— Holiness is a heart-rest in Jesus.

TOUCHING DEVOTION.

One of the most tearful cases ever told on paper is this, of a little boy, a mere child, who traveled one thousand four hundred miles, taking care of the body of his dead mother all the way:

An expressman upon reaching his office early one cold morning in January, observing on the sidewalk a long, heavy box, which his practiced eye at once identified as containing a corpse. Upon the end of the box, shivering with cold, sat a little half-clad boy, about seven or eight years of age. Addressing him kindly, he said,

"My lad, don't sit there, you will freeze. Come in and sit by the fire."

Bursting into tears the little fellow replied.—"No, I can't come. My mother is in this box, and I promised her that I would not leave her until we got home."

Deeply affected with the touching devotion of this brave little fellow, he finally succeeded in convincing him of the entire safety of his precious charge, and taking him to a neighboring restaurant, gave him a warm breakfast and then learned the particulars of his story.

His father died about a year previously, in a remote village in Minnesota, leaving his mother in poor health and nearly destitute. She died but a few days before the boy's sad journey, charging the little hero with the sad duty of conveying the remains to a distant State, and furnished him with (all she had) a sum of money barely sufficient to carry them both by freight cars to their destination.

The little fellow had actually ridden day and night in a freight car with his melancholy trust, never for a moment losing sight of it.

THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN.

Jerusalem will come, all light and love,
Down from the clouds of heaven above;
Beautiful mansions, glistening bright,
Home of the saints, all pure and white.

There no tears will come, no care, no strife
Will ever shade our immortal life;
There is peace and joy, and bliss untold,
And angels harping on harps of gold.

There the crystal river, upon whose banks
The ransomed will walk with praise and thanks,
There are shining streets, and wondrous light;
O, kingdom of heaven, bright, all bright!

HOME MANNERS.—Young folks should be mannerly. How to be so is the question. Many good boys and girls feel that they cannot behave to suit themselves in the presence of company. They feel timid, bashful and self-distrustful the moment they are addressed by a stranger or appear in company. There is but one way to get over this feeling, and acquire graceful and easy manners; that is, to do the best they can all the time, at home as well as abroad. Good manners are not learned from arbitary teaching so much as acquired from habit. They grow upon us by use. We must be courteous, agreeable, civil, kind, gentlemanly and womanly at home, and then it will soon become a kind of a second nature to be so everywhere. A coarse, rough manner at home, begets a habit of roughness which we cannot lay off if we try, when we go among strangers. The most agreeable people we have ever known in company, are those who are perfectly agreeable at home. Home is the school for all the best things, especially for good manners.

THE SQUIRE'S INDIGESTION.

Old Squire H—— was a very successful and substantial farmer in an interior town of Massachusetts, and a more amazing eater never lived in any town anywhere. And especially much did he eat when fresh pork was to be his nourishment. Well, at a certain time one of his hogs had been killed. The next morning there was fresh pork for breakfast, and the old man ate most wondrously. In the course of the forenoon he ate his luncheon, consisting of bread and butter, mince-pie, and cheese. At noon his dinner consisted of fresh pork, pickles, mince-pie, and the usual accompaniments. His afternoon luncheon was like that of the forenoon. When he came home to supper, his favorite dish had not been prepared as part of that meal. The old man fretted and scolded till fresh pork was added to the substantials. He ate voraciously as usual. In the evening he toasted some cheese, buttered and ate it. Just before going to bed he roasted a couple of apples and ate them. In the night he was taken with a severe colic. The doctor was with him till morning, and nearly wrought a miracle in the old man's life. The next day, Bolles W., one of his neighbors, went in to condole with the old Squire.

"Faithful Bolles," said the old worthy, "I like to have died last night. I'll never eat another roast apple as long as I live. I never did love them very well; and last night I ate only two, and they nearly killed me."—Ex.

THE Syracuse papers tell of a child in that city who lately swallowed a quantity of corrosive sublimate, which had been prepared to kill bed bugs, and whose life was saved by the prompt administration of the whites of eggs, about a dozen of which were given within an hour. After absorbing the poison, they were ejected from the stomach, and the child was out of danger. This is a simple remedy, always within reach, and should not be forgotten.

MORTALITY vs. IMMORTALITY.

No. 1.

O. R. FASSETT.

"Thou shalt surely die."—Gen. 2 : 17.
"Ye shall not surely die."—Gen. 3 : 4.

Here are two positive averments. The one is a positive affirmation; the other is as positive a negation. The one affirms the mortality of man; the other the immortality of man. One is the declaration of God; the other is the declaration of the devil. The first is the doctrine of God; the second the doctrine of the devil, and of devils. Both cannot be true. Which is true? Who told the truth; God, or the devil?

It would seem that we need not be at a loss in determining nor long in deciding that God told the truth. Yet it is almost universally believed that the devil did. A Methodist Presiding Elder, to my knowledge, affirmed before a large, intelligent audience, that "the devil told the truth, inasmuch as the soul is immortal." There are but few christian ministers who will so boldly defend the devil's doctrine, but thousands maintain it, and preach it unwittingly and ignorantly, while they declare "the soul's immortality"; and that "the soul is the man."

If this matter of the mortality or immortality of man is to be determined by majorities, "the devil told the truth"; for he has on his side all heathendom, Mohammedanism, Roman Catholicism, Mormonism, the whole body of Spiritualists of every phase, and the greater part of the Christian church, both in her ministry and membership. A clergyman in this State (California) said that "the Advent doctrine could not be true because there were so few believers." If such argument be valid, then Christianity itself is condemned; for the time was when all the christians known to the world were the Founder of christianity and his chosen Twelve,—and one of them had a devil! And to this day the number of christians on the earth is comparatively few to the number of the heathen world, and considerably in the minority of the whole population of the globe.

I maintain God told the truth. He is a God of truth. He cannot lie. "He is not man that he should lie." He also is a God of holiness, and with this attribute of his being he could not lie. If he should lie he would cease to be God, and become a devil; and the greatest devil in the universe, since he is omnipotent. He, too, is a God of justice; but what justice in consigning to "the second death" "all liars," if he himself should be a liar? I affirm, therefore, that God told the truth when he said—"Thou shalt surely die."

I maintain, then, that the devil did not tell the truth. Jesus says "he is a liar and the father of it." And the father of all lies, and of all liars, invented this first of all lies. Moreover, the devil is "a murderer from the beginning," and it was by this first lie he murdered the human family. The race lie in death to-day, and under sentence of death, because in our federal head man disbelieved God, and believed Satan's first lie. "By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." Rom. 5 : 12.

Earth is a vast charnel-house—a golgotha; because Satan murdered the race. Go to the catacombs of Egypt, Rome, and of Paris, and see the countless piles of human remains. Visit the innumerable cemeteries and burial places of the dead the world over, and witness the race in ruins; and then tell me if Satan is not a liar and murderer by his declaration—"Ye shall not surely die."

And he who negated the penalty of the Adamic law, and thereby murdered the race of man, negates also the penalty of God's moral law since revealed, and seeks to murder the race a second time, in "the second death." God has affirmed—"The soul that sinneth, it shall die." The devil, through Platonic philosophy, declares—"All souls are immortal"—"they cannot die." Men believe the devil's lie, and lose eternal life.

How can we account for the fact that almost the whole world believe the doctrine of the devil? By this: that "Satan ruleth in the hearts of the children of disobedience"; and that "the whole world lieth in the wicked one." Of course he will teach them his doctrine. Christians ignorant of the Scriptures, and led away by tradition, unconsciously receive heathen philosophy for gospel truth. "Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy"; beware of the wiles of the devil! "The God of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ should shine unto them." 2 Cor. 4 : 4.

Cotton Mather used to say there was a gentleman mentioned in the 19th chapter of Acts to whom he was more deeply indebted than almost any other person, and that was the town clerk of Ephesus, whose counsel was to do nothing rashly.

THE PENALTY OF GOD'S LAW.

No. 5.

R. H. HALL.

We proceed without giving further definitions, to notice other passages and facts connected therewith, confirming our position that the wicked will be destroyed, and that death is the penalty of the law. Christ taught most emphatically their utter destruction, when in speaking to the Jews he pointed to gehenna (hell, in the valley of Hinnom) where originally the Canaanites offered their children in sacrifice to the idol Moloch, and where afterwards the inhabitants of Jerusalem cast the offal and dead carcasses of the city to be consumed—as the place where, and manner in which the wicked should be destroyed. Every thing thrown into gehenna was consumed or burnt up. Nothing was thrown there to be preserved; people do not throw things into the fire to preserve them, but to destroy them. The wicked, then, are not to be cast into gehenna fire to be preserved and tormented, as we have been so erroneously taught; but to be consumed, burnt up, destroyed, annihilated.

To suppose that Christ, in order to illustrate and enforce the doctrine of eternal life in torment, would make use of such a figure as gehenna, where every thing was destroyed, is to charge him with ignorance and folly. But if he would teach the total destruction of the wicked, a more forcible illustration could not have been employed.

It is very strange, to say the least, if God intended to keep the wicked alive as long as the righteous, though in misery, he should compare them to the most combustible materials—that they should be burned up as chaff, as tares, as dry branches, as thorns and briars, as stubble fully dry, as the fat of lambs, etc. But if he intended to teach destruction, annihilation, what could be more appropriate and forcible than these comparisons? The Psalmist says (104 : 35)—"Let the sinners be consumed out of the earth, and let the wicked be no more." And in view of this destruction of sinners and sin, he cries out in the same verse—"Bless thou the Lord, O my soul. Praise ye the Lord." Again he says (21 : 8, 9)—"Thy hand shall find out all thine enemies: thy right hand shall find out those that hate thee. Thou shalt make them as a fiery oven in the time of thine anger: the Lord shall swallow them up in his wrath, and the fire shall devour them." "For behold the day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble: and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch. But unto you that fear my name shall the Sun of righteousness arise with healing in his wings; . . . and ye shall tread down the wicked, for they shall be ashes under the souls of your feet in the day that I shall do this, saith the Lord of hosts." Mal. 4 : 1-3. And Rev. 20 : 9, tells us when this event shall transpire—"And they [Gog and Magog—the wicked, with the devil leading them] went up on the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city: and fire came down from God out of heaven and devoured them." Devour means to eat up, to annihilate.

What honest mind can believe, in view of the most significant and most positive language employed in these Scriptures, that God intended only to represent the destruction of happiness, or the abstract principle of sin; or that all these passages, and such like, only refer to the judgments of God upon nations and people in this world, and previous to the day of judgment? It requires a great stretch of the imagination, we think, to come to such a conclusion.

John says (Matt. 3 : 10, 12)—"And now also the ax is laid unto the root of the trees: therefore every tree which bringeth not forth good fruit, is hewn down and cast into the fire." We all know what the effect of the fire is on trees, and John tells us what the effect will be on sinners. "Whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor, and gather the wheat into the garner; but he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire." We are often told the idea of unquenchable fire is always burning; thus men catch at straws, though a palpable contradiction is the result; for if their idea be correct, how could the chaff "burn up"? But chaff does burn up, and the fire goes out. A building is on fire so that you cannot quench the flames; it is then an unquenchable fire. What is the result? The building burns up. This is simply what unquenchable fire is. God says (Jer. 17 : 27—"Then will I kindle a fire in the gates thereof, and it shall devour the palaces of Jerusalem, and it shall not be quenched." Here is the same unquenchable fire that burns the chaff, and that will devour the wicked, the same that Christ speaks of (Mark 9 : 43)—"And if thy hand offend thee, cut it off: it is better for thee to enter into life maimed, than having two hands to go into [gehenna] hell, into the fire that never shall be quenched: where their [gehenna's] worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched." This language of Christ twice repeated refers to gehenna—hell, where worms as well as fire preyed upon the carcasses thrown therein to be consumed; and Isaiah (66 : 24) alludes to the same when he says—"And they shall go forth and look upon the carcasses [not immortal souls] of the men that have transgressed against me: for their worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched."

The true idea of undying worm and unquenchable fire we now see is, that whatever they prey upon will be consumed; for it is certain that if the worms should die, and the fire should be quenched, the carcasses would not be consumed. With this correct understanding of these terms, how plain and forcible the language of Christ—"It is better for thee to enter into the kingdom of God with one eye, than having two eyes to be cast into hell-fire; where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched." You had better save one hand, one foot, one eye, and thus enter into life, or the kingdom of God, halt and maimed, than to have two hands, two feet, two eyes, and be cast into the unquenchable fire of gehenna, where your whole body will be consumed and soul and body destroyed. "For it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into [gehenna] hell" [and perish]. Matt. 5 : 30. One member is here put in opposition to the whole body; if so, then the argument is—if one member is diseased, it will cause the whole body to perish, unless that member is removed; it is better, therefore, for sinners to cut off right arms and pluck out right eyes, and let these perish, than to let the whole body perish in hell-fire. The word "perish" here applied to the members of the body by Christ means, as all will admit, to come to nothing; so it means precisely the same when applied to the whole body. For Christ is "able to destroy both soul and body in [gehenna] hell"; and his language implies that he will.

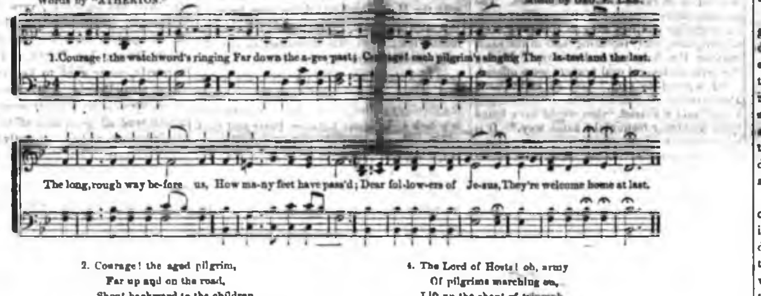
In speaking to the Scribes and Pharisees he says—"Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of [condemnation of gehenna] hell?" Who can answer this question—how escape? Can Universalists tell us? The question of Jesus implies that they cannot escape; and if they cannot escape the fire of gehenna, they cannot escape total destruction. The Psalmist (9 : 5) with prophetic eye looks forward to the time when the wicked are destroyed, and exclaims—"Thou hast destroyed the wicked; thou hast put out their name for ever and ever." "As the whirlwind passeth, so are the wicked no more; but the righteous are an everlasting foundation." Prov. 10 : 25. "For yet a little while, and the wicked shall not be; yea, thou shalt diligently consider his place, and it shall not be." Ps. 37 : 10. If the wicked are to live for ever, how could such language be used? But Christ settles this matter most emphatically in the following passages, and it is a marvel that divines do not see it. Matt. 10 : 39; 16 : 25, 26; Mk. 8 :35-37; Lk. 9 :24,25; Jno. 12 : 25. The last quotation reads as follows—"He that loveth his [psukee] life shall lose it; and he that hateth his [psukee] life in this world shall keep it unto [zoeen aionion] life eternal." Mark records it—"For whosoever will save his [psukee] life shall lose it; but whosoever shall lose his [psukee] life for my sake and the gospel's, the same shall save it. For what shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own [psukee] soul? Or what shall a man give in exchange for his [psukee] soul?" Why the translators used the word "soul" four times in Matt 16 : 26, and Mark 8 : 36, 37, when they had used the word "life" ten times in connection (the same Greek word psukee being found in the fourteen places quoted), is hard to tell; for it could not be to avoid repetition; and if we believe, with some, it was to make it appear that psukee has a different meaning in the places named, we should be obliged to charge them with dishonesty; for every Greek scholar knows that psukee in these places has precisely the same meaning; and every intelligent English reader knowing that the same Greek word occurs, can see the same.

Now what did Christ mean when he said, "Whosoever shall love his life [so much as to deny me, thereby saving his life in this world], shall lose it"? If life is saved, it is saved from death; if life is lost, it is absolutely extinct. But Christ continues—"And he that hateth his life in this world [or is willing to lose it for the sake of Christ] shall keep it unto life eternal." The one losing it unto death eternal, the other saving it unto life eternal. "For whosoever will save his life shall lose it; but whosoever shall lose his life for my sake and the gospel's, the same shall save it. For what shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own life? or what shall a man give in exchange for his life?" Who dare say, in the light of the above, that losing life for Christ's sake in this world means literal death, but losing life in the world to come means torment, or losing happiness?

— Religion is the guide of all other virtues.

COURAGE. 7s & 6s.

Words by "ATHERTON." For the "Crisis." Music by Geo. E. LEE.



1. Courage! the watchword's ringing Far down the a-ges past; Courage! each pilgrim's singing The la-test and the last.
The long, rough way be-fore us, How ma-ny feet have pass'd; Dear fol-low-ers of Je-sus, They're welcome home at last.

2. Courage! the aged pilgrim,
Far up and on the road,
Shout backward to the children,
Just taking up the load;
And to the weary, fainting,
Half way the journey o'er,
"Bear up," comes ever wafting
Above the stormy roar.

3. O, tossed with pain and anguish,
Oh, bleeding feet, press on,
He sees us as we languish,
He beckoneth on, still on.
The Captain gone before us,
Heareth our wailing cry;
The smallest whisper reaches
The Lord of Hosts on high.

4. The Lord of Hosts! oh, army
Of pilgrims marching on,
Lift up the shout of triumph,
The gates are almost won.
The darkness fast is waning,
And rougher though the way,
Our feet are surely gaining
Upon the glorious day.

5. Shout gladly one to other,
Brethren, upon the way,
Jesus, our Elder Brother,
Cannot be far away.
We see th' advancing banner,
The waving of his hands,
And high above the clamor
The voice of angel bands.

A SERMON ON SPIRITUALISM.

C. B. BARNES.

"For there shall arise . . . false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect."—Matt. 24 : 24.

These words of our Savior are a part of an answer to a question propounded to him by his disciples—"What shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?" said they; and in reply, we have the remaining portion of this chapter.

In the prophecies of the Bible we have predictions of all the great and important events which have occurred, or shall occur, which in anywise affect the welfare of the people of God. In the prophecies we find plainly revealed the rise, supremacy, and decline of the Romish apostasy. There, too, we find the false principles of all Mahometanism foretold; and besides predicting these anti-christian powers, they foretell the rise of another system equally false, namely, Spiritualism.

Said Paul—"Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils." 1 Tim. 4 : 1. When the sixth angel poured out his vial, John said—"I saw three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet. For they are the spirits of devils, working miracles." Rev. 16 : 13.

One of the signs of Jesus' coming is, that false prophets shall arise, "and shall show signs and wonders;" and "in the latter times," "the Spirit speaketh expressly" that some shall depart from the faith, and give heed to "seducing spirits;" and under the pouring out of the sixth vial, which is next to the seventh and last, which ushers in the judgment-day, John saw "spirits of devils working miracles." From this we may know that whenever such a system arises, Jesus' coming is near at hand. But, it has already arisen—then Jesus' coming is near at hand.

Now I affirm that Spiritualism answers the above description exactly. Through the agency of Spiritualists, wonders are done. It is useless to deny it; those who are best acquainted with it know this. Indeed, were it not so, the Scriptures would not be fulfilled, at least in Spiritualism, for they declare these "seducing spirits" and "false prophets" "shall show great signs and wonders;" hence, when they claim to do wonders, we admit their claim. But as among men wonders are done both by the good and bad, and are prompted also by good and bad motives, the mere fact that wondrous feats are performed by them is no proof that their source is good, or tendency either. Hence, in this discourse I shall endeavor to show the true origin of Spiritualism, and the principle of action which underlies all its phenomena.

I. Its origin. In showing from whence it is, I shall prove

1. That is is not from God.

If it be from him, we are bound to receive it; but if it be not from him, whatever may be its claims or wonders, we are equally bound to reject it. That it is not from him, may be proved from the following facts:—(1.) It denies the moral guilt of man, and the atonement of our Lord Jesus Christ. The atonement is the grand, underlying doctrine of the Bible. On this our only hope of pardon and redemption rest. God has declared Jesus' blood only, and all-sufficient to cleanse from sin; therefore we may be assured that whatever system denies this, is not from the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. Now you that are at all acquainted with Spiritualism, know that this truth is wholly denied. From their leading paper, the Banner of Light, the following is taken:* "In answer to the question, 'Did not Christ die, that through his death we might inherit eternal life?' a spirit answers, 'No! Christ did not die, that through his death we might live. . . . His death has no more to do with the remission of sins than the death of any of your martyrs.'" In a tract (No. 12.), published by the Am. Lib. Tr. Soc., the following language of a prominent Spiritualist lecturer is recorded: "Christianity—a fraud from its beginning until the present day, hourly becoming more detestably dishonest—is the one gigantic nuisance of civilization, to abate which is the highest duty of all who have intelligence enough to know the facts, or courage to speak the truth. . . . Christianity, making inspiration a special gift, and proclaiming man's perfect moral depravity and rottenness by nature, claims as the result of its influence all the humanity, goodness, and decency any christians may manifest. . . . The doctrine of vicarious atonement offers an immunity for crime."

Do such utterances sound like the teachings of heaven?

(2.) It denies the divinity of our Lord and Savior. This might be presumed from the foregoing, for both denials generally are found together. Christ's divinity is that which makes his atonement so valuable; is what makes his condescension so great, and is a doctrine of which the Bible is full. But this claim is not allowed by Spiritualism; it would bring him down from his place of honor and dignity at God's right hand, and place him on the low level with themselves. "Gibson Smith, a prominent Spiritualist, and one of the earliest believers, in giving a synopsis of his belief, says:—'I do not believe that the person who is called Jesus Christ was, or is, God's only Son. . . . He . . . is no more the Son of God than was John Howard or George Washington.' Said Mrs. Henderson, a noted Spiritualist, when speaking at the Melodeon in Boston: 'Jesus . . . had natural parents. . . . We cannot believe that there was any thing marvelous either in his birth, his life, or in his death.' . . . Says a spirit, whose communication was published in the Banner of Light: 'If Jesus Christ was the Son of the Most High God, so are you, every one of you.'"

In the tract quoted above, these words occur: "Christianity for eighteen centuries has really had no more regard for the fabulous Jesus of Nazareth on the cross than for the insane Nebuchadnezzar seven years 'gone to grass.' In the first place, the whole absurd story of Jesus, from the 'immaculate conception' until the lying account of his ascent into heaven, is, taken literally, a tissue of falsehood. . . . Jesus was as much an historical character as the Indian 'Leather Stockings' of Fennimore Cooper's novels, or 'Little Nell' in the prose poetry of Dickens,—no more."

Does this sound like the voice of God? Nay, verily; God would never send spirits to teach that his Son is a myth, or a bastard!

(3.) It is hostile to the entire Bible. The Bible is from God, though it contains a record of the devil's lie, which is being repeated by Spiritualists to-day, namely, that there is no death. The manifestations of God will always be in harmony with his revealed truth; hence, whatever does not agree with this, comes not from him. "Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation; and every city or house divided against itself shall not stand." Matt. 12 : 25. This charge of hostility to the Bible hardly needs to be proved, it is so manifest.

The extracts quoted above are sufficient to sustain the charge, but that its true sentiments may be more plainly manifest, if possible, the following extract from the above mentioned tract is also given: "Christianity, with its 'inspired' Bibles, its mercenary or fanatical ministers, and demoralizing dogma of vicarious atonement, is the great imposture of the age; the one monstrous hindrance to progress, either social, civil, or spiritual."

Enough has been said to prove my proposition, that it is not from God. It is opposed to God, to his Son Jesus Christ, and the volume in which he is made known, and wherever it may have its origin, Christians may be assured it is not from the God of the Bible.

2. It is not from the spirits of the dead.

I shall sustain this proposition by showing

(1.) That true philosophy teaches that man has no spirit which survives death as a conscious personality. I do not say man has no spirit, but that he has not such an one as the Spiritualists claim for him. With them the spirit is the real man, and the body its temporary residence, which it leaves at death for another sphere; this, I affirm, is not true.

This belief that the real man escapes death is the foundation of every false system of religion. Pagans worship their dead heroes, and why? Because they believe they are immortal, and hence escape death. Roman Catholic worship of saints and the Virgin Mary is based upon this same notion that the dead are alive. And what is the chief corner-stone of Spiritualism? This same belief in the natural immortality of man. Remove this, and Paganism, Romanism, and Spiritualism fall together, for if the dead be dead, they cannot receive homage from, neither can they converse with, the living.

The future life brought to light through the gospel, is based upon the resurrection of the dead at the last day. Beholding the child of earth struggling through the darkness, battling with the opposing elements, it cheers him onward with promises of a better future, not assuring him of his present immortality and exemption from death, but promising him that if he be overcome, and fall asleep in death, he shall live again in the resurrection at the last day.

But it is said the longings and yearnings of mankind for immortality prove man has it, as God would not have given him these desires were they not to be gratified; and to this sentiment a hearty Amen is given. As we stand by the grave of the near and dear, there is a something springing up in the heart telling us we shall meet again; that we are not parted forever. The brute is not capable of these emotions, and we rightly conclude when we infer these longings will be gratified—but they do not prove our immortality. Man yearns and longs for what he has not. Happiness is longed for by the disconsolate; riches are desired by the poor; food is solicited by the hungry, and immortality is yearned for by man, because he is mortal and liable to death.

Whatever may be the desires of the holy angels, I think it may be safely concluded that yearnings for an endless life are not among them, for that they will have, as they are immortal; and so too, when Jesus comes again to earth, and bestows the "crown of life," by immortalizing his people whom he redeemed from sin and death, their longings and yearnings will forever be hushed in the glorious possessions which will then be theirs.

Again, it is sometimes said man's intellecectual powers demonstrate his immortality. A favorite claim of immaterialists is that "matter can't think," which is true to a certain extent. It is unnecessary to argue that a lump of lifeless matter cannot think, for no one ever claimed it could; but to prove that matter organized and vitalized with the "breath of life," is incapable of thought is what our Spiritualistic friends can never do. Notwithstanding all claims to the contrary, it still remains a fact that man's "intellectual powers" lie in his brain. As is its size and quality, so is his intellect or mind. It is evident that without eyes he could not see; without ears he could not hear; without lungs he could not breathe; and the analogy carried out, leads us to the conclusion that without brains he could not think. When it can be proved that man can see without eyes, or hear without ears, or breathe without lungs, then, and not before, can it be proved that man can think without brains.

Does not the brute often give remarkable instances of sagacity? Are there not many instances on record where they have exhibited unmistakable powers of reasoning? There certainly are. If then the brute be capable of evolving thought without the aid of an indwelling, immortal soul, cannot God so arrange matter in man that he too can think without one? Nor let it be sneeringly said that this is proving man to be no higher than the brute; it is not so. Man is the greatest and most wonderful of all earthly beings, but this superiority is not to be sought for in our inner, immaterial entity; his superiority consists in his having a more perfectly developed brain and general organization than the animal beneath him. Where this is possessed by him, we see marked intelligence; but where it is lacking, we see inferiority; in some cases, much inferior to the brute. We may search nature throughout, but never will we find evidence of such a contradiction as that the dead are alive.

(2.) The Bible teaches that the dead are asleep and unconscious.

Said Job—"Man dieth, and wasteth away; yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where is he? As the waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up; so man lieth down, and riseth not; till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep. . . . His sons come to honor, and he knoweth it not; and they are brought low, but he perceiveth it not of them." Ch. 14 : 10-12, 21. From this passage we learn that the dead are asleep and will not be awakened until the heavens be no more; and further, that while in this condition, they know nothing of what transpires relating to them they have left behind.

From David we hear the following—"Consider and hear me, O Lord my God; lighten mine eyes, lest I sleep the sleep of death." But why this anxiety, David? Do you not know that the righteous dead, in this sleep, have lively remembrances of God? No, said David, "in death there is no remembrance of thee; in sheol who shall give thee thanks?" Ps. 13 : 3; 6 : 5. If in death there be consciousness, surely the righteous would have some remembrance of God, even if oblivious to what transpires on earth; but as they have "no remembrance" of God in this condition, we may justly conclude they have no remembrance of any one or any thing else.

On this passage let us base this syllogism; Abraham, Job, and David have passed into that state or condition called death; but "in death there is no remembrance of" God; therefore Abraham, Job, and David have no remembrance of God.

On the passage quoted from Job, let us found this one: Abraham, Job, and David are dead; but as in death man's sons come to honor or dishonor, and the dead perceive it not; therefore Abraham, Job, and David, know not the condition of their descendants; and if these three men of God have no remembrance of Him and no knowledge of transactions on earth, we conclude they are "in the land of forgetfulness" (Ps. 88 : 12), where "there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom" (Eccl. 9 : 10), and where "their love, and their hatred, and their envy is now perished" (v. 6), and where "the dead know not any thing" (v. 5); and let him refute the argument who can. Thus we see why it is that the manifestations of Spiritualism can not proceed from the dead.

Spiritualism is the foremost of all the antagonists of Christianity, and it should be met by christians and resisted. To most completely overthrow it, its foundations should be taken away. Its basis is the belief in man's natural immortality; remove this, and the superstructure falls. Let men know that immortality is a gift of God, conferred on them that believe on his Son Jesus Christ, and they will not be led away by the seductions of Spiritualism; but as long as the mass of christians are upholding them in this doctrine which is the main plank in their platform, how can they successfully dispute with them?

GOSPEL SANCTIFICATION.

J. COUCH.

The term sanctification, as used in the Scriptures, clearly represents the idea of appropriation, and not a change of moral condition. It means exclusive use for a specific, holy purpose. As moral agents are required to be in a certain moral condition, before they can be employed to accomplish any holy purpose, therefore all unholy beings must experience a moral change, before they can be appropriated or sanctified to such use.

An uneducated person cannot wisely be appropriated to school-teaching until he has changed his literary condition; so God never employs men in his vineyard or sanctifies them for his work, until they are converted or morally changed. We convert corn into meal before using it for bread; so a rebel against the government of God must be changed to a loyal citizen, before he can be trusted in any responsible position.

Christ experienced sanctification, yet he never experienced a moral change, for he was holy from the beginning. Speaking of his disciples, he said, "And for their sakes I sanctify myself, that they also may be sanctified through the truth." John 17 : 19. He being holy could appropriate himself to the holy work of making provision for the conversion of unholy men; "that they also might be sanctified through the truth;" that is, that they also might be employed in the work of saving the perishing.

Paul expressed this idea when he said, "For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works;" that is, Christ prepares us so that we can perform good works. There might be lumber enough in a ship-yard to make a ship, but it could not carry merchandise across the Atlantic until it was "created" into a ship. So a sinner cannot do christian work until his moral nature is changed.

Conversion, sanctification, and holiness are distinct subjects, but so intimately connected that many lose sight of their distinctive features. Conversion is changing a man from a sinful to a holy state. Sanctification is employing the changed man in a holy work. Holiness is the principle which demands and produces wholeness in every part of the renewed man, so that he may be fully prepared to do his appointed work.

Sanctification commences at conversion. The sinner is converted on condition that he has a fixed purpose to sanctify himself to the service of Christ. It is voluntary obedience, chosen service, performed by love and not by fear. It is like the sunlight, dependent upon constant renewal. Every new act of obedience requires a new act of volition; because the volition which produces voluntary service to-day, cannot qualify for the service of to-morrow. Sanctification is that which passively and actively yields everything to the control and disposal of God. It suffers no reservation to be made of person, time, talents, property, reputation, or friends. All must be cheerfully yielded to God, as the only one having a right to control and dispose of all according to his will.

If sanctification is a perfect submission to the will of God, an understanding of that will is necessary for sanctification. It is impossible for an intelligent being to comply with any rule of government, without first understanding that rule. Therefore, it is impossible to be sanctified in advance of enlightenment, by which we learn the will of God. As we are dependent upon revelation for a knowledge of that will, it follows that the word of God is a necessary medium through which, by the aid of the Holy Spirit, we are sanctified. Jesus testified to this when he said, "Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth."

To be a sanctified minister of the gospel, a man must submit to the divinely revealed rules by which he is to be governed in that holy office. To be perfectly sanctified, is to perfectly submit to all the divine rules given for the government of man made known to him, in all his relations and positions in life. Its perfection is continued only by continuing to submit to every new development of God's will.

This principle applies not only to personal but to dispensational experience. Abel was sanctified when he offered blood upon his altar; but if Noah had done that, and refused to build the ark, he would have perished; for his sanctification, being imperfect, would have failed to produce salvation.

The Jews were accepted when they faithfully offered bleeding victims upon their smoking altars, until the type was fulfilled in the offering of Christ, when new duties were presented in the divine plan, calling them from those altars to follow the despised Nazarene. Those who refused to take the advance step lost their acceptance with God; for he does not accept men for what they have done, but for what they are willing to do.

Saving sanctification is not that happy emotion which can be obtained under certain circumstances and retained for future enjoyment, but it is an abiding and never-failing willingness to do and be just what God may will. It is introduced by conversion, produced by grace, controlled by revelation, associated with holiness, yielding happiness, and ending in eternal life.—Gospel Banner.

THE CLOSING YEAR.

The year now closing has been a very eventful one; but we think the coming one will witness still more remarkable changes in political, religious, social and physical things. It is an age of revolutions, upheavings, and marked changes, introduced by the most radical men and women, who are impatient of all restraint or wholesome laws.

Worldly-wise men think they see heavy storms arising in the political atmosphere; statesmen look serious, and talk gravely concerning approaching events. They are preparing for a crisis of no ordinary nature; but they may find their plans of safety as weak as was the defence against the fires of Peshtigo and Chicago. There is security only in Christ.

In harmony with what far-seeing worldly men are expecting, the students of prophecy, and the observers of the signs of the times, as laid down in the word of the Lord, see with a clearer vision that we have truly come to the last days of the present dispensation, when we must look for just such things as have been developing during the year; and that heavier waves of perplexity and distress are about to break upon the approaching shores, where all the saints will soon be safely landed in the harbor of eternal rest, while the wicked will be dashed upon the rocks of destruction. We are truly living

The grandest of grand events is at our door The mighty King of kings is about to appear in all his glory. Praise the Lord for the bright prospect of soon seeing our best friend, who is coming to give us eternal life in the beautiful new earth. O, he is coming. He is coming. Let us all be ready, with clean hearts, filled with the Holy Spirit, clothed with Christ's righteousness, waiting, longing for the glad hour to arrive when "our eyes shall see the King in his beauty."

In looking back on the closing year, we see some bright religious tokens. Our great camp-gatherings have been seasons of special interest. We have never enjoyed more precious refreshings from the Lord. The conviction has been greatly deepened in many hearts that the time has arrived to make special preparation for the jubilee of jubilees. There is clear evidence that the Spirit of God is working with unusual power upon the most devoted in all denominations, leading them to consecrate their all to Christ. This work is rapidly progressing in all directions; while the great mass of professors are plunging deeper into the spirit of the world, aping its fashions, follies and amusements. This is in harmony with the teaching of the sacred prophets. The one class is being led on by the Spirit of the Most High, the other by the powers of darkness. Both are ripening for the harvest.

LOOKING BACK.

It is sometimes well to review the past. Birthdays, and the last days of the year, afford favorable seasons for review and reflection. Eminent christians have found this very profitable. The examination should be thorough, like the spring house-cleaning, when everything unclean is thoroughly cleansed and set in order. Unless we are very watchful some unholy thing may be concealed in the heart. Some root of bitterness, hatred, or variance; some evil thoughts, pride, covetousness, or selfishness—something unlike Jesus; or some other bad habit of acting, speaking or thinking, that will prevent an entrance into the kingdom of God.

In view of our nearness to the coming of Christ, special care should be taken to have all that is evil removed. As we are about to cross the line that divides the old from the new year, let us have a most thorough heart examination; and whatever is found wrong, let it receive an eternal farewell. Allow no hatred, no variance, no hardness or grudge towards any one to have a home in the heart in 1872. Jesus will not allow any such things in his kingdom. They must be overcome, or eternal life will be forfeited.

This is a good time to break off from all bad habits,—all fretting, scolding, backbiting, and evil speaking. It is also a good time to destroy the tobacco pipes, empty the snuff boxes, and abandon for ever the filthy weed; throw away the opium and morphine, and begin to live on a plain, simple diet; thus preserving health, and promoting purity and happiness of mind. Is it not time to break off from every thing that tends to hinder our progress in divine life, if we expect to be ready for the coming of our Savior? Temperance holds an important place in the christian character. It consists in total abstinence from all that is unhealthy, and a moderate use of what is healthy. We are most fully satisfied that a large proportion of the sickness and suffering in the world arises from an abuse of the stomach. This indulgence leads many to backslide from christianity. When Satan has a control of the appetite, he has a strong hold upon a man; and will not give up his grasp without a struggle. But let every christian soldier strike for a complete victory, and no longer be in subjection to any bad habits. Let them all die with the old year, and never have a resurrection. Let it be remembered by all that the Bible says, "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." Why not have it done?

"A FRIGHTED GHOST."

Our attention was recently called to a hymn (No. 2) in Watts' Collection, relating to the death of a sinner. It reads as follows:—

> "My thoughts on awful subjects roll,
> Damnation and the dead;
> What horrors seize the guilty soul
> Upon a dying bed.
>
> Ling'ring about these mortal shores,
> She makes a long delay;
> Till, like a flood with rapid force,
> Death sweeps the wretch away.
>
> Then, swift and dreadful she descends
> Down to the fiery coast;
> Amongst abominable fiends,
> Herself a frighted ghost.
>
> Here endless crowds of sinners lie,
> And darkness makes their chains;
> Tortured with keen despair they cry,
> Yet wait for fiercer pains.
>
> Not all their anguish, and their blood,
> For their old guilt atones;
> Nor the compassion of a God
> Shall hearken to their groans."

After considering the theology of this hymn, we thought how different it is from the teaching of the sacred Scriptures. Why did not the poet tell us the locality of that "fiery coast" where "darkness makes their chains"? He says of the soul, "She descends down" to that place. Down where? Does he mean down into the earth to the fabled "infernal regions" of the ancient heathen? But they believed that good souls went also down into the earth to another department. The wise man says "all go unto one place." Where is that? To sheol, the grave, where "there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom." We do not see how a "frighted ghost" could "cry," and feel "pains," and utter "groans" without any body. No organ, nor any part of a man, perform, any of its natural functions when separated from the living organism. The eye does not see when taken out of the man, the ear does not hear, the tongue does not talk, the feet do not walk, the hands do not work, the nerves do not feel, the brain does not produce thought when separated from the living being; by what law, then, does any other part of man, when taken from its legitimate position in the human constitution, become a living, talking, walking, seeing, thinking, nervous being, uttering "groans," a "frighted ghost" on some unknown "fiery coast"? Who will give us light on the subject? Let those who know these things, give us the benefit of their researches. Again we inquire, where is that "fiery coast" to which is sent the "frighted ghost"?

WINE.—In another column will be found some valuable facts in relation to the wine used by the Israelites, Christ and the apostles. We hope those who prepare wine for the communion will avoid fermented wine. Reformed drunkards cannot use it with safety. When unfermented wine cannot be obtained, get raisins and steep them till soft, then mash them, and strain through a cloth.

A REMARKABLE WORK.

From the following, it will be seen that there is a remarkable religious interest among the Quakers. In seems that the Spirit of the Lord is moving in power upon the hearts of the people, to arouse them to prepare for the life to come. The subject of holiness has a prominent place in the meetings. This is the work of the Lord, and is indeed marvelous. These are bright omens.

THE FRIENDS' NEW DEPARTURE.

One of the most remarkable religious movements of the age is now going on in Brooklyn. It is a protracted meeting held by the Friends. It has been in session over a week and continues with unabated interest. Three services are held a day, and the plain brick meeting house is crowded. No revival meetings and no camp meeting—not even Round Lake—exceed in interest, in fervor, and in enthusiasm, this staid sect. On Sunday there were elegant coaches, with drivers and footmen, in front of the church, which in number and style have not been exceeded by any fashionable church in New York, indicating not only the wealth of the people, but the excitement that could draw from a circuit of tne miles round.

WHAT THE MOVEMENT MEANS.

The leader of this movement is J. Henry Douglas of Indiana, the most eloquent preacher of the society, a man of fervid eloquence and learning, about forty years of age, wearing flowing hair and a Van Dyke beard, with a tall and manly form and an impassioned utterance.

Feeling that the Orthodox friends were dying out, unwilling that the Orthodox portion should stand like a mountain of ice girdled by a sea of fire, he resolved to put the society in harmony and fellowship with Evangelical christians. He began his work in the South and West, and met with a success that Whitefield and Wesley hardly equaled. Old societies were revived and new ones formed, and intense enthusiasm awakened in the cause. Revivals, Sunday schools, oral prayers, rising for prayers, and all the paraphernalia of a revival, with impassioned appeals to sinners, mark the new movement.

THE TALENT OF THE MEETING.

The most eminent ministers, both of men and women, have had charge of these meetings. Mr. Douglas leads. He has been invited to half the pulpits of Brooklyn. He could preach to crowds for a month, if he would stay. The most eloquent preachers from the South, the West, from the North and from Europe are in attendance. The elders' seats—not unlike the bench of a judge—will hold about thirty, and is crowded. A few brethren are dressed in Quaker costume. The most of them are in the garb of the world. The lady preachers wear the Quaker cap, and with few exceptions, wear no ornaments. Some of the lady preachers are eloquent and dramatic beyond description. They work the audience to such a pitch of excitement that some cannot contain themselves, but screech and scream, cry amen, and groan. It would take but a slight stretch of imagination to suppose one's self in a red-hot glowing camp meeting. The foremost preacher is Mrs. Smiley. She is chaste, learned, fluent and impressive. Anna Dickenson never controlled an audience as Mrs. Smiley does. She wore the Quaker cap, but had on black gloves and allowed a golden ornament to dangle from her neck. The dramatic speaker is Esther France. She is the Gough of the assembly. She stirs up her hearers like a trumpet. She is about forty years old—tall and commanding—with a sonorous voice. She was a Methodist, became a convert to the Friends, and brings the fervor and intensity of her old faith to her new field. Mrs. Lucas is a sister of John Bright, and is a visitor from England. Caroline Tabbath, Esther Tuttle and others make up the force.

A SPECIMEN MEETING.

On Thursday night I looked in on this remarkable movement. The house was crowded, aisles and all. The service began at half after seven, and continued till ten. There was no singing, no change of posture, yet the interest never flagged one moment. A brief Scripture was read, and Mrs. Smiley occupied nearly an hour in a sermon, and was very eloquent. She was followed, one after another, till five or six spoke. Esther France—on the two roads, the broad and the narrow, with their terminations—with her impassioned gestures and fervid descriptions of heaven and hell, actually thrilled the audience. The meeting was then thrown open to all christians present. At least a dozen persons participated. Persons desirous of salvation were called on to rise. Several arose. A morning inquiry meeting was appointed for all who wanted to be saved or wanted holiness. The meeting was closed by the rising of the whole congregation and repeating in concert a verse of Scripture, and repeating also in the same manner the long meter Doxology. During the services several oral prayers were offered.

"I wanted to sing," said an enthusiastic Presbyterian elder at its close. "If thee had sung," said a Friend, "thee would have found quite a number feeling the same way." It is proposed to hold an immense meeting at the Academy of music Sunday night, with which to wind up the services, at which all the eminent preachers, women and men, will speak. Looked at from any stand-point this movement is a very remarkable one.—Cor. Boston Journal.

DUKE ALEXIS.—Much ado has been made in the States and Canadas over Duke Alexis, who is making a pleasure trip through the country. He is a fine specimen of manhood, and has won the esteem of the American people. But there is a Prince far higher than him, or his honored father, the Emperor of Russia, one above all kings—the King of kings, who is about to make a visit to our planet on business of the most important character. Indeed, he is coming to judge the inhabitants of this world, decide who of them shall have eternal life, set up an everlasting kingdom, and share it jointly with the saints.

We have been thinking, would the people in New York City give him such a hearty reception as they did the Duke? Would he receive honor from the city officials equal to that bestowed upon Alexis? It is to be feared that a large proportion of the honored ones of this world will be found among the kings, mighty men, rich men, great men, and chief captains, who will call for rocks and mountains to fall on them when earth's great Prince shall come in his glory.

Let us be found among the pure-hearted, the meek and the lowly, who will hail his coming with shouts of joy triumphant.

MONTREAL SCHOOL.—Dr. McVicar, a prominent man in Montreal, recently delivered a lecture on Materialism, at the opening session of the Presbyterian College in that city; and after his lecture was accused of copying largely from a work of Dr. McCosh. The Montreal Evening Star has published some spicy things in relation to the matter. The latest we have seen is the following:—

POPULAR EDUCATION.—School Examination.

TEACHER. Stand up, children, I wish to ask you a few questions. Tommy Brown, step forward. Who or what is this Fabrique, which is troubling the public so much?

TOMMY B. They are grave-diggers in Cote des Neiges Cemetery.

TEACHER. Who is this Dr. MacVicar who is accused of plagiarism?

T. B. A teacher of materialism in Erskine College.

T. Do you know algebra?

T. B. Yes, Sir.

T. What is the answer to this sum: The Fabrique—MacVicar?

T. B. That is a sum in simple equation, and the answer is that they both expropriate other men's property.

T. Whose property do you say the Fabrique expropriates?

T. B. Mr. Tait's the farmer.

T. Whose property does MacVicar expropriate?

T. B. McCosh's words and thoughts.

T. Very good, Tommy. Now, James, I should like to hear what you know of this subject; step forward. How do the Roman Catholics view the doings of the Fabrique with Mr. Tait?

JAMES. They are ashamed of them.

T. What do the Presbyterians think of Mr. MacVicar?

J. They are all hanging their heads.

T. Tell me which of the two are considered the most guilty?

J. The Fabrique.

T. Why so?

J. Because the Fabrique expropriates land, while MacVicar only expropriates words and thoughts.

TEACHER (to the class.) Do you all agree on that?

SEVERAL VOICES. No! MacVicar is the most guilty of the two.

T. Explain why.

S. V. 1st, because Dr. Mc.Cosh's words and thoughts are better than land. 2nd, because the Fabrique offered Mr. Tait one-third of a cent per foot for his land, but McVicar pays Dr. McCosh nothing for what he takes from him. Therefore, the Fabrique is the best of the two.

T. Step forward Frederick. What is at the bottom of this mean work?

FREDERICK. The object of the Fabrique is to make money out of Mr. Tait's land.

T. What is the object of MacVicar?

F. MacVicar's object is to make to himself a name and honor as a profound materialist.

T. Can you tell me to what school MacVicar and the Fabrique belong?

F. To the school of Elder Miles Grant, of Boston.

T. How do make that out?

F. Because they do not believe in the soul's endless torment, otherwise they would not be such sinners.

T. What can we do to them so as to bring this bad work to an end?

THE CLASS. "Add phosphorus to them."

T. Why, children?

THE C. To put thought "in the pulpy substance called brain."

A MODEL SERMON.

It may be safe to conclude that the effective sermon preached by the apostle Peter on the day of Pentecost, which resulted in the ingathering of about three thousand souls, was a model sermon, as Peter "preached with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven." We may be profited by looking at the fundamental features of this discourse, in contrast with modern sermons; for although the sermon of Peter is not fully reported, the prominent points are given, and they disagree with the theology of the present day. Where there is a lack of harmony between Peter and modern theologians, who will object to our giving Peter the preference, even if it involves the repudiation of modern theology? As truth never suffers by being contrasted with error, we will compare the principal features of Peter's model sermon with the preaching that now passes current as gospel.

1. Peter took the position that the strange operation then being witnessed was the predicted outpouring of the divine Spirit, which was due "in the last days," and that consequently the "last days" of earth's sinful history had commenced, during which the signs in heaven should be seen, heralding the day of God, as well as the outpouring of the Holy Spirit, which they were then witnessing. "Be this known unto you, and hearken to my words; for these are not drunken as ye suppose, seeing it is but the third hour of the day. But this is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel; and it shall come to pass in these last days, saith God, I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams; and on my servants and on my handmaids I will pour out in those days ["the last days"] of my Spirit; and they shall prophesy; and I will show wonders in heaven above, and signs in the earth beneath; blood, and fire, and vapor of smoke; the sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before that great and notable day of the Lord come." Acts 2: 14.

Peter did not affirm that these signs had been witnessed, but he did proclaim the fact that they had already entered "the last days," in which they were to be seen, and that one part of the prediction, relating to the pouring out of the Spirit, had commenced being fulfilled, proving that "the last days" had already commenced. As the middle days of a period of time must end before the last days of that period can commence, so the middle days of the world's mortal history had expired before Peter commenced preaching, and its last days had begun. And if eighteen hundred years of the last days have already rolled away, we must now be very near their close, as this period cannot comprise more than the last third of time. Certainly, in this respect, Peter's sermon does not agree with the claim that the world is now only in its infancy, and that thousands of years must yet expire before the day of judgment dawns. If Peter was right, modern theologians are in the dark, and crying "peace," when "sudden destruction" is at the door. And if we are really in the closing hours of the last days, this truth should not be concealed, or kept in a corner, but be made prominent in our preaching. The preaching which repudiates the fact of our nearness to the day of the Lord is antagonistic to Peter's model sermon.

2. Peter also preached the resurrection of the "flesh" in the person of Christ, instead of the resurrection of a deathless soul from a dying body, as many now do; and as Christ is the resurrected "first fruits" of the holy dead, a resurrection of the "flesh" in his case involves a resurrection of the same nature in the case of all the saints. Peter thus speaks concerning the matter: "Whom God hath raised up, having loosed the pains of death, . . . for David speaketh concerning him, . . . my flesh shall rest in hope; because thou wilt not leave my soul in hell [hades—the state of the dead], neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption." Acts 2: 24–27. The future resurrection of the saints will be as literal as the past resurrection of Christ; for "if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised" (1 Cor. 15: 16); but Peter affirmed that Christ was raised "according to the flesh," and so will the saints be raised. Christ obtained a life subsequent to death by a resurrection of the flesh, and we shall obtain a future life on no other principle. Indeed, if a future life could be secured without a resurrection, what need of having a resurrection? If Christ was really more alive after death than he was before death, why was his flesh ever raised? The grand fact of Christ's fleshly resurrection involves a fleshly resurrection of his saints, and contemplates a fleshly salvation for them—not salvation in a disembodied state.

3. In this model sermon, Peter proclaimed Christ to be the predicted heir to David's throne,—the very heir specified in Jehovah's oath—"Men and brethren, let me freely speak unto you of the patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is with us unto this day. Therefore being a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne; he seeing this before, spake of the resurrection of Christ." vers. 29–31.

The throne referred to in that oath of Jehovah, to which Christ was heir, according to Peter's sermon, was not the throne of heaven, but "the throne of David" (and prior to his elevation thereto, David's royal children were to occupy it for a time on condition of obedience (Ps. 89: 29, 30); and they did successively reign upon it till their apostasy led the Lord to decree, "It shall be no more, until he come whose right it is; and I will give it him." Ezek. 21: 27. That very throne once occupied by David himself, and by David's descendants, and which was finally overturned, to "be no more" for a space of time, is finally to be occupied by Christ as David's "seed," referred to by Peter; and according to Jehovah's oath, he is to possess it "to all generations"—through all coming cycles of time—or, as long "as the days of heaven." Ps. 89: 3, 29, 30. But ministers of the present day extensively ignore this item of Peter's sermon, and in opposition thereto they preach Christ a King upon the throne of heaven, and deny that he will ever reign on any other throne. Did Peter err in making Christ the heir to David's throne? or are not theologians rather mistaken?

4. Peter preached that although Christ had ascended to heaven, he was only to remain there for a limited time—merely till his foes should be given over to destruction—while he also preached that David had not gone to heaven at all. "Therefore being by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, he shed forth this which ye now see and hear. For David is not ascended into the heavens: but he saith himself, The Lord saith unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand, until I make thy foes thy footstool." vers. 33–35. He is in heaven, not to sit on the throne promised in the oath of God, but to officiate as our High Priest; but David, if Peter preached correctly, never went to heaven. In this respect, also, Peter's model sermon is out of harmony with the popular sermons of the day, which send all good men off to heaven before the judgment, and consequently in an unjudged state—thus making earth the nursery from which heaven is constantly being replenished with these unjudged souls, from whence they must come again, if ever judged.

The preaching of the present day is out of harmony with Peter's model sermon in every fundamental feature. Now it is preached that we can know nothing about our proximity to the judgment day; but Peter preached that the "last days" were entered over eighteen hundred years ago, thus giving us now a chronological standing very near the day of judgment, in spite of theological speculations. Now it is preached that the reign of Christ is taking place on the throne of heaven, before the arrival of the judgment; but Peter preached that it would be on the throne of David, after his enemies should be made his footstool, which will occur at the judgment. Now all good men are preached into heaven at death, regardless of judgment; but Peter singled out one of the best of good men, one who had "died in faith," and affirms that he had "not ascended into the heavens." How striking the contrast between the sentiments set forth by Peter, in this model sermon, and the theories that now pass current for gospel. Now the doctrine of the resurrection is either ignored, or perverted, or else belittled, and made a theme of no consequence. Now theology denies to Christ the throne Jehovah promised him under solemn oath, and substitutes another which he was never heir to. Now the "until" which limits the stay of Christ in heaven is overlooked, and his reign located in a realm and on a throne where his father David never reigned. Rather let us be found preaching a gospel in harmony with Peter's great revival sermon, recognising the fact that we are in the last days, and near their termination; that there is to be a resurrection of the "flesh"; that Christ is ultimately to reign on David's throne; that although Christ is now in heaven, he is to remain there only till his foes are given over for destruction; that saints have not gone to heaven; hence, a judgment is necessary.

These words were "gladly received" by Peter's hearers, and a wonderful revival was the result, and they were baptized; and baptism did not hurt the revival in the least; nor will it hurt any true revival, though it may hurt some of the emotional revivals of the day that consist more in the excitement of the surface strata of human nature than in an enlightened obedience to God's revealed will. There is no cause why similar preaching should not produce similar results in our day, provided the message is "gladly received" as then; but we read of a class of whom it is affirmed, "The word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard"; and so it is with many at the present day. The truth must be believed and obeyed to save men. A substitute for truth will not suffice. W. S.

ANCIENT FAITH.—The exhibition of true faith is not confined to the Christian era. Faith leads to obedience, and thus secures the divine approval. Faith believes God in the face of seeming impossibilities. Faith trusts God where we cannot walk by sight. The workings of faith are seen in the following instances:

1. "By faith Abel offered unto God a more acceptable sacrifice than Cain." Heb. 11: 4. The sacrifice of Cain might have possessed more lucrative value than that offered by Abel, but it did not exhibit faith; but Abel's offering expressed faith in a remedial scheme, by pointing to the Lamb of God to be slain, being there slain in type.

2. "By faith Noah, being warned of God of things not seen, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house." (v. 7.) Faith will build a ship on a dry prairie, if God says it will be needed there to save men from a flood.

3. "By faith the walls of Jericho fell down, after they were compassed about seven days." (v. 30.) It took faith in God to march around that city seven successive days, without witnessing any results till the last round. Unbelief would have reasoned thus; since God is to do it all at last without our help, why need we march around? Why not let that power be displayed without our efforts? So unbelief reasons to-day; since God knows our needs and wishes before we pray, why need we tease God? God says pray, and faith obeys God because it believes him, and secures the blessing. W. S.

SOUTHERN MISSION.—By the blessing of the Lord I have been permitted to reach the State of Alabama in safety. I am now putting up with a Baptist minister living on Sand mountain, in Jackson Co., where I am to preach to night (Dec. 15th), and onward for a time. Other doors are opening. Pray that the Lord may bless our effort to the good of the people. We intend to report items of interest from time to time, as briefly as we can justly do it. W. S.

CORRECTION.—In Crisis of Dec. 6th, in article "Hope of Israel," I am made to say: "In order to preach Christ as a King in such a manner as to interfere with the rule of Cæsar, he must have preached him as a future ruler in heaven"; whereas the last part should read,—"he must have preached him a future ruler on earth, instead of a present ruler in heaven." THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield Camp-ground, August 23d, 1871, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

A. A. MISSION REPORT.

DEAR BRETHREN OF THE BOARD:—I have now closed my first quarter on this mission, and I suppose it is my duty to make a report of my proceedings.

I have preached every Sabbath, mostly twice on the same day, at points from five to nine miles apart. Having no meeting-houses, and the churches of other denominations being closed against us, I have had to preach in school or private houses, or in the open air. The winter now setting in, I have contracted my regular preaching to three places, at which I preach once every other Sunday. At one of these places I have organized a society of twenty-six members, at another twenty-one, and at the third five, making in all fifty-two members during the quarter. We number among these some of the best and most reliable men and women in this county. The prospect now is, that this number will gradually increase, as our views on Bible truth are making deep impressions on the minds of all who investigate them. The reading and thinking men who do not belong to any church, say our exposition of the Bible is the plainest, most reasonable and consistent of any they have ever seen.

There has been and still continues to be a great demand for our tracts and books. Those who read them say they get more light on the holy Scriptures from their perusal than from any works they have ever read. I have scattered a great many of these in every direction, always gratis. Two or three houses of worship would greatly enhance our prospects, and if we cannot obtain some assistance from abroad, the brethren and friends will make an effort to erect some sort of shelter in which to hold our meetings. But surely those who believe we are living in the last days of this dispensation will not hesitate another day to assist us in our poverty and persecution.

Glory be to Jesus! does not this "black year" of 1871 presage others still blacker until the Son of God shall come in the clouds of heaven to banish darkness and blackness from this sin-cursed earth forever, and bring that bright morning that shall never be succeeded by another night? Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus. Yours truly,

PEYTON G. BOWMAN, Missionary.
Lydia, Darlington Co., S. C., Dec. 4th.

The Mission Board would remind the friends, that they are forwarding supplies, cash, tracts, etc., to Bro. Bowman, to sustain and aid him in his mission work; and they hope that you will continue to send in funds, that there may be no lack in this and other fields. G. T. A.

Correspondence.

From Bro. J. Wendell.

Bro. Grant:—I left home for Norwalk, O., Thursday, Oct. 19th, where I arrived the same evening, and had the privilege of attending their weekly prayer-meeting. I found it good to be there: preached to them every evening, and three times on Sunday; also Monday and Tuesday evenings. On Saturday and Sunday was their regular quarterly meeting; hence we had the privilege of meeting brethren and sisters from the surrounding churches. The Lord blessed us in our labor of love: the church was strengthened in their faith and hope, and the Lord added to their number such as we hope to be saved when Jesus comes. We were earnestly urged to remain longer time with them, but we had engagements we felt in duty bound to meet.

Wednesday, Oct. 25th, in company with Bro. Alling, Jefferson, and Judson, left the dear friends of Norwalk, and went to Fairfield, where we had the privilege in the evening of meeting a good congregation in their commodious new chapel, and speaking to them on the subject of our "blessed hope," and the time of its realization. May the Lord bless the word to them.

Thursday, Oct. 26th, left Fairfield for the Ohio State Conference, Nevada, where we arrived on Friday. Here I met many who sought the Lord a few years ago, during one of the most extensive revivals I ever witnessed. God bless them. I had the opportunity of speaking to them five times on the "present truth." May they with me be ready to meet the Bridegroom when he shall return.

Sunday, Nov. 5th, met with the church in Pittsburgh, Penn., and remained with them about four weeks. We had meetings three times during the week, and three times on Sunday. After I had been there two weeks, Bro. G. W. Stetson of Ohio came to my help, and is to remain till the 17th inst., at which time (if the Lord will) I am to return, and remain with them for a season. The meetings thus far have resulted in great good. The church in Pittsburgh have been like sheep without a shepherd. On the last Sunday I was with them, the church unanimously invited Bro. Clowes to be their under shepherd, to which he consented. Bro. Clowes was until recently a minister of the M. E. church of Pittsburgh. Last summer (as was noticed at the time in the Crisis) he was tried for what they called heresy, and expelled from their conference. God bless Bro. Clowes. He is a true man, one who loves the truth of God more than the praise of men.

Edenboro, Pa., Dec. 6th.

From Sr. S. A. Ingham.

Bro. Grant:—Will you please insert in the Crisis the following names of those who have remembered us in "temporal affairs" in the States since last February? Eliza Davis, Lake Village, N. H., Jan. 12th. M. C. Philbrick, M. Garland, D. Philbrick's wife, E. Tuttle, and S. Smart, Feb. 12th. R. P. Buswell, Haverhill, Mass.; I. Moody and D. Churchill, Lowell, Mass.; C. Greene, Busche, and Sr. Stokes, Philadelphia; B. Spaulding, Chelmsford; W. Pullen, Boston; E. J. Ripley, Pleasant Valley, Ct.; D. D. Reed, and R. Henderson, Santa Clara, Cal.; E. Tuttle, Rye, N. H.; W., Worcester, Mass.; I. Damman and Ford, Abington, Mass.; R. Haskins, Boston; Bro. and Sr. Smith, Kennebunk, Me.; S. Chute, L. Farnsworth, Libbey, Thomas, and others, Lynn, Mass.; R. Walsh, Lawrence, Mass.; A. I. Dow, Machiasport, Me.; M. C. Philbrick, E. Owen, and E. Tuttle, Rye, N. H., Nov. 12th. Eliza Davis, Lake Village, N. H., Nov. 22d.

To the few that I have not written to, will you accept our grateful thanks for all favors received; and to one and all I ask an interest in your prayers for my sad-hearted and desponding companion. Almost four years encircled in gloom, how long the time seems to me; and how much longer I must hope on, until the day dawn and the shadows flee, I cannot tell. The "perfect" day may be ushered in much sooner than we dream. How refreshing to know that in "eternal life" all disease, anguish, and disappointed hopes will end. No pain, or sin, or marring of friendship there to make life seem a burden. May we all be found ready at the "last day" to enter into that perfect rest, is my prayer.

Clementsport, N. S., Dec. 19th.

Sr. A. M. Barnes writes:—"We are doing well here in Clinton. The Lord is at work. Souls are being converted, and others are inquiring the way to eternal life. To God be all the glory. How it rejoices our hearts when we have evidence that our labor is not in vain in the Lord. We learn from the Crisis that you are to leave New England again to win a bride for your Master. May the good Lord go with you, be all round about you, and the angel of the Lord protect you, and bless your labors abundantly."

Obituaries.

Tefft. Died in Cold Spring, Mass., Dec. 13th, Sr. Minerva Tefft, wife of Eld. E. W. Tefft, aged sixty-seven years.

For more than thirty-four years she and her surviving companion walked together life's rugged way, sharing each others' joys and sorrows, and enduring privations, hardships, and persecutions for the cause of God; but, alas! the tie is severed, and he is left alone on life's toilsome journey. Two sons will have no longer a mother's prayers. Those lips which were wont to speak words of love and affection, and those hands which have performed so many kind acts, are now cold in death. Her work is done; but she sleeps in hope of a resurrection to immortality. Words of comfort were offered at the funeral by Bro. D. Bates. C. A. Waterman.

Sears. Died in Savoy, Mass., Dec. 9th, of diphtheria, Gertrude Maria, only daughter of Dennis and Olive Sears, aged five years and seven months.

Funeral discourse by the writer, from Eccl. 9: 5.

Also of diphtheria, Dec. 13th, Elmer T., aged nine years and four months, only son of the above.

Funeral discourse by the writer, from 1 Thess. 1: 13.

Thus twice within one short week have these afflicted parents been called to yield up to the demands of death their lovely talented children, whose voices always blended with theirs around the family altar, whose sweet voices of praise filled every ear and heart with joy; but while their hearts and home are desolate, they sorrow not as those without hope. E. A. Warren.

Bro. Sawyer was born in Barnstead, N. H. Was converted when quite young, connecting himself with the Freewill Baptist church in that place. He had removed to this city previous to the first preaching of the Second Advent doctrine here in 1842, was an early convert to the faith, has consistently lived it all these years, and died in its triumphs. He had suffered from paralysis nearly seven years. A widow and three daughters survive him. E. O.

Kimball. Died in Cabot, Vt., Nov. 27th, of paralysis, Sr. Nancy K., wife of Daniel Kimball, aged forty-two years.

Sr. Kimball leaves a husband and four children to mourn their loss. Words of comfort spoken by the writer, from 1 Cor. 15: 26. A. A. Hoyt.

Perry. Died in Waterford, Me., Nov. 1st, 1871, Chandler Perry, aged eighty-seven years.

Thus another early pioneer in the forest of Waterford, and in the service of God in that place, has fallen. We endeavored to offer comfort from the word of God. J. Gay.

The Withdrawal of Minister Catacazy.

St. Petersburg, Dec. 21. The Messenger (official organ) announces for the first time the removal of Minister Catacazy from Washington, owing, it says, to personal difficulties which might prejudice the good relations existing between Russia and the United States.

Russia and Germany.

The same authority, in an article on the present aspect of Europe, says that other powers should see no danger to themselves in the friendship of Russia and Germany. Their common interests suffice to explain their mutual esteem, but no State should so far count on Russia's forbearance as to think of absorbing another.

A Compulsory use of the Russian Language in Polish Schools.

An Imperial ukase makes a compulsory use of the Russian language in the schools of Poland.

Religious Equality to be Maintained.

Paris, Dec. 20. A deputation of French Protestants had an interview with Thiers to-day, who received them with affability, and promised that religious equality should be maintained.

Bismarck Threatens the French.

Berlin, Dec. 21. Bismarck has sent a dispatch to Von Arnim, the German representative at Paris, setting forth the state of exasperation caused in Germany by the outrages perpetrated on her soldiers in France. He threatens to seize hostages in the future if those who escape into neighboring provinces are not delivered to the German officers by the French authorities, and declares that unless these horrible outrages cease the army of occupation will be increased and the expense and burden of its support, which is paid by France, doubled.

Demoralized France. In order to account for the recent misfortunes of the French empire, Mr. Jolly, a distinguished member of the Academy of Medicine in Paris, makes some statements that are startling. It appears that the use of spirits and of tobacco has been frightfully increased, and that a mixture of both brandy and tobacco is working an amount of deteriorization which will go far to account for the miserable display which the French soldiers made during the late war. Tobacco, it is said, costs Paris 500,000 francs a day, or enough to find bread for 2,000,000 people, and Mr. Jolly believes that the double intoxication of alcohol and nicotine abundantly explains the wild saturnalia of blood and destruction which was lately held in Paris. French soldiers were so often muddled when wounded that they could not be cured like those of sober habits. The increase of insanity is rising in exact proportion to the use of narcotics and stimulants.

☞ Advices from Chiselhurst say Napoleon is in the very best of health and in moderately good spirits. He takes much pleasure in the society of his son. Chiselhurst itself is a village composed mainly of the aristocratic residences of merchant princes of London. Scarcely a poor person dwells in the neighborhood. The only people of the working classes here are the servants of the rich, whose mansions stud the landscape. The scenery is splendid, including every variety of hill, dale, wood and running stream, while the sandy nature of the soil and its sheltered position make the climate dry and genial.

The Recent Triumph of King Emanuel of Italy in opening the Italian Parliament in emancipated Rome, and with the consciousness that the—

"Italy free
From the Alps to the sea,"

were now true, seems hardly credible. So tremendous and overwhelming has been the march of events that one can hardly follow them. Twenty-two years ago the father of Victor Emanuel left his country, heart-broken because he was convinced that Italian unity was put back a century. To-day the whole edifice which he fancied he had seen toppling to the ground is crowned, and Rome will henceforth be the capital. Cavour used to say that a capital city was not determined by its climate, its topographical or stratagical importance; but simply by the sentiment of the people. This is eminently so in the case of Rome, and the Italians would fight desperately against any nation which should endeavor to force them to give up the queen city to a false temporal power, whose wavering imbecility has awakened a rebellion even in the breast of its own church. The Pope cannot make up his mind to leave a place which is associated with so many grand and thrilling epochs in his own peculiar history, and will doubtless totter to his grave, amid the ruins of the pseudo-government which he had established in modern Rome. The period of Popedom in Rome ends with him, although the children of the church are taught to believe that the temporal power will again flourish in the city, and increase and multiply its already wide-spread influences. But the clerical party in Parliament does not seem to come forward as strongly as was expected; it finds the opposing forces altogether too strong for it, and can certainly do nothing against the King's policy this year.—Journal.

In Brief.

—— A poor minister, who knows all about it from personal experience, utters this cheerful word of invitation: "Now is the time to rally to the festive donation party. A donation party is a cheerful gathering, where a poor clergyman's flock overwhelm him with bead watch pockets, and eat up about $112 worth of his winter provisions."——For over one hundred miles the Hudson River is now closed by ice.——The Connecticut Western Railroad is fairly open for business and trains are running regularly.——The new coins struck by the French Government bear the device, "Liberty, equality, fraternity."——It seems that the Pope is thoroughly decided to remain at Rome, and seems to contemplate with horror any removal therefrom.——The Italians generally believe that the Pope and King Victor will finish by understanding each other, and making a reconciliation.——Heavy storms prevail all over the Plains. There is much rain and snow there. The Mormons say it is the severest weather for many years.——Robert M. Baskin has been employed by the Attorney General of the United States to assist in the prosecutions against Brigham Young, Wells, Sear and others.——It is stated that eighteen persons passed through the secret initiation ceremonies of Mormon endowment, at a house on Monday night.——Great inundations are reported from the Banats, the "corn chamber" of Hungary. The rivers Bega, Temes and Theiss are flooding thousands of acres of cultivated land. The harvest has been bad. Typhus fever is making serious havoc. In the commune of Michaly, near Temesvar, numbering a population of only nine hundred, three and four persons die per day of fever and starvation.——Five Armenian bishops have expressed their sympathy with the "old Catholic" reform movement in the Catholic church.——The illness of the Prince of Wales has brought to light the fact that of the children born in Great Britain during the year in which the Prince was married, three thousand boys were named Albert Edward and half as many girls Alexandra.——The Pope has nominated bishops for nineteen dioceses, comprising fourteen in Italy. His Holiness said: "If the means of upholding the dignity of your office are taken from you, the mercy of God will not fail you. Go to your sees, and exercise your ministry with energy."——Dr. Isaac Bartlett of Hope, Me., over sixty years of age, and weighing over two hundred pounds, says he never tasted of a bit of meat of any kind in his life. He lives almost entirely on bread and milk.——The First Presbyterian Church in Elizabeth, N. J., was organized in 1664, and for two hundred and seven years has not missed a service. It is still strong and vigorous.——The recent address of the Bishop of London comments on the alienation of the masses in consequence of high pew rents, and recommends that half of every church be set aside for the regular parishioners, and the other half be left wholly free to all.

Explosion in the Sun.—According to the astronomers, there has been a tremendous outbreak in the sun. An enormous protuberance, which the wonderful appliances of modern science soon ascertained to be composed of hydrogen gas, was suddenly projected from its body, and floated at the height of some 15,000 miles above the cromosphere, although still connected with it by three or four bright vertical columns. About half an hour afterwards the whole of this was blown into shreds by some inconceivable rush from beneath, and in ten minutes the space above the solar surface was filled with the flying debris to to the height of more than 200,000 miles.

A CHRISTMAS CAROL.

BY CHRISTINA ROSSETTI.

I.

In the bleak mid-winter
  Frosty wind made moan;
Earth stood hard as iron,
  Water like a stone;
Snow had fallen, snow on snow,
  Snow on snow,
In the bleak mid-winter
  Long ago.

II.

Our God, heaven cannot hold him
  Nor earth sustain,
Heaven and earth shall flee away
  When he comes to reign:
In the bleak mid-winter
  A stable-place sufficed
The Lord God Almighty—
  Jesus Christ.

III.

Enough for Him whom cherubim
  Worship night and day,
A breastful of milk
  And a mangerful of hay:
Enough for Him whom angels
  Fall down before,
The ox and ass and camel
  Which adore.

IV.

Angels and archangels
  May have gathered there,
Cherubim and seraphim
  Thronged the air;
But only His mother,
  In her maiden bliss,
Worshiped the Beloved
  With a kiss.

V.

What can I give Him,
  Poor as I am?—
If I were a shepherd,
  I would bring a lamb;
If I were a wise man,
  I would do my part,—
Yet what I can I give him,—
  Give my heart.

—Scribner's for January.

ODDS AND ENDS.

Rome the World's Ruler.—Brain Organization always similar.—The "Christadelphians."—Immortal Soulism in the Y. M. C. A. and the Baptist Churches of San Francisco.—Mrs. Fassett's Preaching.—Prophetical Lectures needed.—"What Next?"—The Pope's Farewell.—Concerning Diaries of the Preachers.

Oftentimes when discussing the universal Kingdom prophecy, I have been met with the challenge on history—"Rome has not for many centuries [usually the denial extends to thirteen or fourteen centuries] been a universal monarchy, in any sense." I have insisted that all respected profane history—in other words, all respectable profane history—has concurred in the affirmative. And now I accidentally glance at the opening article on Rome, in Harper's Monthly for December, 1871, and find in the first three paragraphs the following: "So was established, with no dream of its future greatness, the city which for so many centuries made itself the mistress of the world. Its first conquests were by its arms. Extending gradually its boundaries, it embraced at last almost the entire civilized world. 'I am a Roman citizen,' was passport and safe-conduct in every tribe and province. Falling to pieces, corrupted by its own greatness, the Roman empire lost not its sway, but only changed its sceptre. The emperor gave place to the pope. The supreme authority was transferred from the palace of the Cæsars to the Vatican. The legions of vanquished soldiers gave way to hordes of invincible monks, the tyranny of a Nero, and a Caligula to that of the Inquisition and the Jesuit fathers. And again for centuries Rome ruled the world, which seemed by the irruptions of the Northern barbarians to have broken the yoke, which was really only changed not lightened. Thus Rome has a double history," etc.

I know these are only passing words, in a popular magazine; but they are of a piece with ten thousand inadvertent and yet in one sense regular testimonies to the character of the Roman power, considered as a prophesied universal monarchy. These are among the expressions of a prevailing acknowledgment, certainly not prejudiced to suit Adventist views. In the usual order of narrative and descriptive writing, the concession comes up, to support that which it does indeed seem hardihood to deny.

In the same magazine (Dec. No., '71), on page 148, under the caption—"Mind in lower animals," there is support for a portion of the argument necessary to be made against the spiritistic infidel—such as Eld. Grant contended against while in this city. The paragraph referred to reads—"Dr. Lander Lindsay, in an essay just published, which has excited some attention, takes the ground that the mind of the lower animals does not differ in kind from that of man, and that they possess the same affections and capacity for education, and are liable to the same kinds of mental disorders."

One of our local papers recently had an article on the "Christadelphians," in which it remarked that the people who hailed under this denominational title were also of "the annihilation school of humbugs." And then came the sneer—"The more sects, the more liberty for thinking people who have no faith in anything of any of them"; a correct statement, perhaps, but said not for its simple meaning, but for the scorn of religion which it involves. But it was further remarked—"It is said that the Second Adventists are going over to the new sect in large numbers." Is not this "it is said" untrue?

I attended a week-day noon prayer-meeting of the Young Men's Christian Association of this city, a short time since. The conductor of the meeting had for the burden of his interjections—"Think of the necessity we are under to work for the salvation of our immortal souls";—perhaps the least offensive way of stating the heathen dogma; the urging to piety being commendable in a proper and impressive line. But from these repeated textwords the people assembled took their cue, and the assumed immortality of man by nature, and the eternal torment of the unbelieving, were dwelt upon with a vengeance of warning that was fully Calvinistic. A young man of the party, who inadvertently prayed, after the Scripture pattern, that all present might sincerely seek for honor, glory, and immortality, was followed by an aged deacon who made the atmosphere fairly blue with "the flames of a hell that should never cease to burn the deathless souls of the impenitent," and who three times in his not lengthy prayer spoke of "the worm that should never die, but forever and ever feed upon the sinner, who could never, never forget his crimes or receive the pardon of an angry God." The Young Men's Christian Association of San Francisco is orthodox.

I attended a Baptist conference or prayer-meeting a few evenings since in this city, happening to pass to the church when the introductory singing was heard. The leader was in a very complacent, sectarian mood. The Baptist church had got the truth, according to his belief, up to the full measure of the Bible. Moreover, it was, notwithstanding aspersions to the contrary, the ideal Ritual of Protestant orthodox [illegible]—speaking for the Free-will open-communion Baptists, I presume. And yet this same Baptist church excommunicated brethren for holding non-inherent immortality views such as are avowed, accepted, or considered most probable, by nearly one fifth of the clergy of the Church of England—acknowledged there without consequent discipline or censure of any kind.

I declare I did not go into either of these places named to carp or criticise; but having gone in, as invited, I must (or may) note what was necessarily a prominent feature to me. These things are said in promiscuous gatherings and social sect meetings; but since the Dr. Scott failure no one in San Francisco has announced an eternal torment discourse.

Mrs. O. R. Fassett had over two hundred persons for her audience last Sunday evening. She preached on—"Whosoever believeth and is baptized shall be saved; and whosoever believeth not shall be damned." She spoke at length of that which is to be believed—the word believe being duly defined. The gospel of grace, the gospel of the beginning of Jesus Christ, the gospel of peace, the gospel of salvation, the gospel of the kingdom, and the everlasting gospel, being the six sections into which she divided her discourse. Showing that belief in error (with illustrations) would not save, she proceeded to dwell upon the matters of a religious faith in the paragraphs, if not in the order, given above.

I heard some of the strangers say, while walking from the chapel, that they had attended at the Mission St. house several consecutive Sunday evenings in hope of hearing a distinctive Advent sermon. A new series of prophetic chart discourses, by a competent preacher, would gather great congregations in this city,—larger even than when Elder Grant opened the campaign.

We are just reading the news of another town-swallowing conflagration—Carson, Colorado. And accompanying is an account of a Kansas Pacific railroad train snowed in. People gathered about the newspaper bulletin boards to inquire of one another—"What next?"

I notice the subjoined item in to-night's paper, which also contains telegraphic assurance of the intention of the Pope to leave Rome when Victor Immanuel's parliament assembles in the "Eternal City":—"The Pope has directed to be entered in the records of the Vatican the whole of his correspondence with foreign Courts, and with his bishops in all parts of the world. This is usually done after the death of a Pope."

I have seen objection raised lately—somewhere—to the practice of publishing in Advent papers the journals or diary-notes of traveling Elders. Undoubtedly there is sometimes too much fulness of detail about hospitalities extended and enjoyed, and little kindnesses are made an occasion for wearisome comment and commendation, sometimes. Probably a word of caution will work the cure that is needed. But I do not think that these journals grow out of the conceit of the writers, as a general thing. As private memoranda, they could not be laid to the door of vanity. And it is to show a recognition that is really grateful that much of this recital is made. Yet the mention of the names of entertainers must be often helpful to those who propose to follow in the same circuit; and we must remember that the weekly paper is in part a vehicle for communication between the moving evangelists. There may be egotism and puffery in many of the letters that have been called in question; but as a rule the public notice of a helping attention from Smith or Jones does not injure the intellect of the uninterested reader, and does gratify and encourage some old or new workers in the cause. It is a species of family introduction that is not to be cut short or blamed without due consideration. It may be said in all truth and propriety, that a sinner starving for the word of life does not care about knowing who took you from the depot to his house and made you welcome and comfortable for the night. But a hungry Elder, on a (to him) new circuit, may be glad to know that there is an entertainer in such or such a place, anxious to supply the temporal wants of a journeying preacher. And the Elder is not to be condemned for being hungry, or for enjoying the cheerfully-given food; and may be expected to preach to more edification if his physical being is duly nourished. And any individual entertainer can stop mention of his welcome if he desires. Paul mentioned with thanks those who entertained him, his opportunities of this kind being part of the Book; and in many letters not published it must be presumed he made similar acknowledgements. All these things must in great degree depend upon circumstances, and exact the exercise of good taste. It is essential or advantageous sometimes to name names of hosts and of liberal-minded ministers of the popular denominations who open their church doors. If the published acknowledgment operate to stimulate repetitions of the generous, or, if you please, the godly conduct, is that a cause for neglecting an apparent duty of gratitude?

There are some helpers in the Advent ranks who do not wish to have their names known at all. They can signify this desire easily and quietly, vouchsafing just so much explanation as they see fit; and their inclinations will be respected and obeyed. There are some powerful helpers in the Advent ranks who have an infirmity which takes the form of a chronic anxiety to have their own names paraded as often and conspicuously as possible. These latter often seem unconscious of their own failing; and their weak points must be noted for private admonition, or altogether passed over in that large-hearted charity which has neither disposition nor time for picking out the little motes in their neighbors' eyes.

A MOTHER'S LOVE.

J. W. THOMAS.

There is no love in this world so true, and pure, and deep, and lasting, as that of a true wife and mother. Brothers and sisters often dearly love, and the life of the father is frequently bound up in the life of the child; but a mother is the greatest and most tender lover. What will not a mother suffer, and sacrifice, and endure, for the comfort of her own dear offspring? How many sainted mothers have worn themselves out and found an early grave in watching over and caring for their children? And how many there are to-day whose furrowed brow and emaciated countenance bespeak a life of trial and anxiety! Little do children realize the deep solicitude and anxious care of a mother's heart, when with tireless vigilance she watches over, and with ceaseless love provides for them. If a child has wandered away into the paths of sin and iniquity, the mother does not give him up, and refuse to own him as her son, but weeps, and prays, and entreats him to return. My heart is moved with tender emotions when I see such affection manifested toward the erring ones.

Not long since, I called to see a dear saint, with whom I was acquainted, and whose son it had been my privilege sometime previous to baptize. I found her sick with a very painful and distressing disease, but her mind was calm and clear, and she was happy in the Lord. Yet, there was one thing which rested upon her mind with great concern, and which moved me to tears as she spoke of it. Her boy had wandered far from the Lord, and was pursuing a dangerous pathway. "Oh," said she, with tears streaming down her face, "that boy, that boy, if I could only see him come back before I die." Ah! thought I, if her son only knew how much his mother loved him, it seems to me he would come back; and I resolved that if I could see him, I would beseech and entreat him for the sake of his mother, to retrace his steps and return to the fold of God.

O how can children be so stubborn and hard-hearted, when parents love them with such a deep and tender love? How can sons and daughters be cross and fretful, and grieve the heart of her who gave them birth, and whose loving bosom shielded them in helpless infancy? How can they resist her gentle persuasions, and turn a deaf ear to her godly council? A mother's love is constant and perpetual. It goes with her to the grave.

"Hast thou sounded the depth of yonder sea,
And counted the sands that under it be?
Hast thou measured the height of heaven above?
Then mayest thou mete out a mother's love.
Hast thou talked with the blest, of leading on
To the throne of God some wandering son?
Hast thou witnessed the angels' bright employ?
Then mayest thou speak of a mother's joy.
There is not a grand, inspiring thought,
There is not a truth by wisdom taught;
There is not a feeling pure and high,
That may not be read in a mother's eye.
There are teachings on earth, and sky, and air,
The heavens the glory of God declare;
But more loud than the voice beneath, above,
He is heard to speak through a mother's love."

NEW YORK A. C. CONFERENCE.

SECRETARY'S REPORT.

The second quarterly session of this conference, for the current year, met according to appointment with the church in Rochester on Thursday evening, Dec. 7th, and closed the following Sunday evening. A good delegation was present at the first meeting, and we had an interesting social season,—warm testimonies from warm hearts that love Jesus and his appearing. After which Bro. M. R. Miles gave the opening discourse.

Friday evening a business meeting was held in which by vote Pres. Cogswell appointed as devotional committee, N. McCullock, B. F. Brownelle, and W. E. Brown; to prepare business, J. H. Whitmore, A. C. Newell, and R. C. Brown. The following delegates with their quarterly offerings were received:—R. C. Brown, So. Butler, $10; Robert Staff and Lauren Grinnelle, East Shelby, $8.75; A. Biggs, Lockport, $7; N. McCullock and D. T. Cooper, Rochester, $6.25; James Morris, Springwater, $4.07; J. S. Beeman, Honeoye, $3.15; A. Bowers, Alton, $1.50; B. W. Keith, Dansville, $6; B. F. Brownelle, Brockport, $5; Sr. St. Clair, Knowlesville, $3.05; A. E. Bowe, Darien; D. R. Miller, Conquest;—fourteen delegates, twelve churches, and $54.77.

The following resolution was passed:—Resolved (1) That we earnestly request each church or society co-operating with this body to hereafter take timely measures to be constitutionally represented at each meeting. (2) That the interests of our increasing mission work imperatively demand that each church be prompt to send in the quarterly collections, and that as liberal in amount as the Lord hath prospered them.

The following ministers gave interesting and in the main encouraging reports of their labors the last quarter:—Bro. Miles, Whitmore, Gove, Greenman, Wells, Sweet, Newell, Hobbs, Moore, Stevens, Blain, Barbour, Vreeland, Ingmire, Cogswell, and Srs. Stoddard and Jennings. A letter was read from Bro. W. A. Fenn, and a resolution was passed as follows:—Resolved, That this conference deeply regret the apparent necessity that has led Bro. W. A. Fenn to engage in secular pursuits for a season; and that we still cherish towards him that brotherly love that will warmly welcome him back to our councils and to our active labors in the promulgation of gospel truth.

This amount was raised by collections and the delegates' sums, and the above bills paid, besides paying $28.80 for the Hall and advertising, and a balance (too small to be divided among the preachers, as usual) of $18.27 left for the treasury. On motion, the President appointed a committee on ordination, viz.: B. P. Stevens, A. C. Newell, and M. R. Miles.

The following joint resolution was passed: Resolved (1), That the Secretary be requested to collect and arrange for publication the statistics of this conference, and present the same for the consideration of the next quarterly session. (2), That, in order to assist the Secretary in carrying out the foregoing resolution, each church co-operating with us be requested to forward to him the name of its minister (or ministers), the number of its (living) members; its services, how, when, and where held, and such other information as may be of interest or necessary to carry into practical effect the tabulation of our conference statistics. Bro. I. E. Wells was appointed to fill a vacancy in the protracted meeting committee, occasioned by the absence of Bro. Fenn from the State. Bro. A. C. Newell was appointed to give the opening address at our next meeting—B. P. Stevens alternate.

We had preaching from the following brethren and sisters during the session: Bro. Greenman, Sr. L. M. Stoddard, Wm. Ingmire, B. P. Stevens, C. F. Sweet, D. Cogswell, N. H. Barbour, Sr. E. S. Jennings.

There were eighteen ministers present during the conference, but the time did not admit of so many sermons. All, however, took part in the singing, praying, and exhortation. There was much good feeling and joy in the countenances of all the lovers of Jesus and his coming at the increasing evidences of its nearness. We had several excellent social meetings, some earnest prayers, good singing, and general good cheer. We were glad to meet Bro. J. C. Smith and Bro. Haines from the east, who also love the appearing of Jesus, and wait for his coming kingdom.

The meetings on Sunday were in Corinthian Hall, which was half or more filled, even that being a large audience. Two were baptized at noon, and two hundred and forty-seven partook of the Lord's supper in the afternoon. At the close of the evening meeting six arose to confess Jesus, and to start in his service. The brethren in Rochester have been greatly encouraged, and it is believed great good was done in the name of the Lord. The place of the next meeting was not decided upon in the press of other matters. Let the invitations be sent in to the President early. Respectfully submitted.

WM. E. BROWN, Secretary.

JESUS A COMPANION.

A believer should make his Savior a perpetual companion, everywhere, and at every moment. Christ offers to walk with us. He says, "Lo! I am with you always." What companionship so sweet as his? What so bracing, so instructive, so purifying? Who else can so make "our hearts burn within us" by the way?

Christ's presence with believers is one of the best dissuasives from sin; one of the best protectors under temptation—one of the best stimulators to duty. Jesus is "made unto us sanctification." His spirit is a spirit of holiness. And when we live in daily communion with him, we cannot but grow holier ourselves.

The sense of Christ's immediate presence is a constant check upon our appetites and sinful desires—as well as a constant spur to our spiritual indolence. Does the tinder of our tempers catch fire? Are we provoked to a cutting word or an irritating retort? One look from the gentle, forgiving Jesus should be enough to seal the lip and to smooth the ruffled brow. Are we ever tempted to overreach our neighbor in business? Selfishness whispers, "Other people do so; it is all fair; it is the custom in our trade." But what will Jesus say? How will our account books look to him when he audits them? A christian who does not keep Jesus with him in the counting-room will hardly dare to meet him at the communion table.

And so on through all the circle of daily life with its varying occupations, and its ever-rising temptations. If my loving Master is always at my side, how can I consent to play the coward, or the cheat, or the trifler, or the trickster? How can I wound him in the house of his friends? A low, sweet voice seems to be often saying to me "Don't do that!"

Nowhere is the presence of Jesus more real, or more comforting, than in a sick chamber, or in the room that has grown suddenly dark under the wing of death. "Christ comes to me in the watches of the night," said a ripe old saint who had lain for months on a bed of torturing pain. "He draws aside the curtains and says to me, 'It is I; be of good cheer; be not afraid.' Then there is a great calm. Here I lie, pained without pain; without any strength, and yet strong."

The man who locks arms with Jesus will never be deserted. When the last hour draweth nigh, and when the last farewells have been spoken to the sobbing wife or child, this never failing friend will sweetly whisper—"Fear not; I am with thee. Where I am, ye shall be also. Having loved my own, I will love them to the end."—T. L. Cuyler.

TWO KINDS OF WINE.

The statement has frequently been made by those who claim that Christ made intoxicating wine that "the endeavor to prove that the wine was not properly wine" savors of "unworthy puerility," and is "as audacious as it is baseless." We have produced a host of scholars and divines—men who rank as high as those who utter the above statement—who have presented the most unanswerable arguments, statistics, and authorities to prove the existence of the two kinds of wine. Dr. Patton's new book on "The Law of Fermentation and the Wines of the Ancients," is full of them. We copy the following extract from the Herald of Health for May, giving the views and statements of a Jewish rabbi upon this question, familiar with the subject, and fully competent to give testimony. The writer says:—

"In a recent conversation with the eminent Hebrew savant and Jewish rabbi, Dr. S. M. Isaacs, of this city, he stated some most interesting facts as to the customs of the Israelites, both ancient and modern, which corroborate fully the conclusions of Dr. Patton. The learned rabbi made one remarkable general assertion which will challenge some scrutiny. He said that, of the seventy thousand descendants of Abraham in this city, he does not know one confirmed drunkard, and that they seldom, any of them, drink to intoxication. In the Holy Land, they do not commonly use fermented wines. The best wines are preserved sweet and unfermented. In reference to their customs at their religious festivals, he repeatedly and emphatically said, 'The Jews do not, in their feasts for sacred purposes, including the marriage feast, ever use any kind of fermented drinks.' In their oblations and libations, both private and public, they employ the fruit of the vine—that is, fresh grapes—unfermented grape-juice, and raisins, as the symbol of benediction. Fermentation is to them always a symbol of corruption, as in nature and science it is itself decay, rottenness.

"No higher authority can be given than Rabbi Isaacs as to the practices of the Jewish people. This testimony settles conclusively the question so often mooted, 'What was the "best wine" made by Jesus Christ for the marriage feast of Cana?' And not less decisively does it show what was that 'fruit of the vine' used by him at the institution of the Lord's Supper. This sacred christian feast was confessedly a substitute for (and immediately followed) the Jewish feast of the Passover, from which all fermented things are carefully excluded. The pretence that the drunkard's drink was in any form provided or encouraged by Him who 'came to save that which was lost,' must be utterly abandoned before one can hope to banish drunkenness entirely, even from the pulpit, the pew, or the communion-table. Let 'judgment begin first at the house of God.'"

RELIGION IN FRANCE.—The Rev. Mr. Robertson, a well-known Scotch clergyman, writes an interesting letter to the Scotsman on this subject. He says: "It is now twenty-seven years since I began to study attentively the state of religion in France, and I am much struck, not merely with the way that the new Ultramontane party has gained in extent, but also by the steady growth of its opinions. I have no hesitation in saying that there are heathen tribes that are practically nearer the truth than the new Ultramontanes in France. All worship of God seems to have disappeared, being replaced, by a devotion to the blessed Virgin; the Holy Trinity is superseded by a new one, 'J. M. J.'—that is, Jesus, Mary, Joseph,' who are put quite on a level. When our blessed Lord is alluded to, it is only as a man, and generally as an infant, but never as the God and Judge of all. A Catholic priest said to me the other day, 'These gentlemen have certainly simplified matters greatly. They have reduced the creed to a single article—"I believe in the Pope;" the Bible to a single verse—"Thou art Peter;" worship to a single observance—"Thou shalt worship the blessed Virgin;" and duty to a single rule—"In every difficulty consult the Sacred Congregation at Rome, and obey it exactly." And really there is not much exaggeration in this.

AT HOME.

Night may come down on pinions fleet,
Bring hail, or rain, or snow, or sleet;
But in my soul there dwells a calm,
Sweeter than summer's air of balm;
  Peace and I are at home.

I heed not wind, or storm, or night,
One presence makes my fireside bright;
My heavenly guest dispels the gloom,
Pervades and hallows all the room;
  Peace and I are at home.

I shut the busy world outside,
Its turmoil, want, and woe, and pride;
And bid those vexing foes go by—
Envy, and strife, and vanity;
  Peace and I are at home.

I banish all my cares and tears,
I e'en forget the grief of years;
That friends are false, that life is sad,
Sitting with one so calm and glad.
  Peace and I are at home.

Like glowing sunlight after rain,
Is peace that follows pain.
She comes from God, she gives me rest;
She makes me so supremely blest.
  Peace and I are at home.

O blessed Peace! she folds her wings,
And sits within my heart and sings,
O song so sweet! O song so clear!
O song that I alone can hear!
  Peace and I are at home.

At home, at home with holy Peace!
The conflicts end, the murmurings cease.
Laden with calm, the hours go by;
We smile and sing, dear Peace and I.
  Peace and I are at home.

O Spirit, lovely and divine!
I joy to know that thou art mine;
I joy to know his words are true,
Who said, "My peace I leave with you."
  Peace and I are at home.

LIVING HOLINESS.

Many are deterred from a profession of the experience of Christian holiness, by the idea that it is exceedingly difficult to conform the outward life to such a state of mind. It is assumed that "entire sanctification" involves such an elevated and extraordinary outward exhibition of purity, that but few can hope to attain it. It is also frequently urged as an objection to the doctrine, that those professing the experience do not present any greater sanctity of life than those who simply make a profession of justifying grace. It may properly be asked, why should they be expected to do so? What particular item or mode of religious conduct, depends upon the state of grace we may enjoy? In what respect, as to the outward life, are the requirements of those who enjoy the blessing of justification below those made of persons who have attained "perfect love?" Is it not as necessary to live a holy life to keep our position in one state as in the other?

The common and prevalent opinion that persons may and do maintain their justification, and at the same time indulge in sin, is a most pernicious error, and has done inconceivable damage in the world. True religion in the heart, even in its incipient stages, will develop in a holy external life. Hence, St. John, in speaking of the immediate privileges and results following the new birth, says, "And ye know that he was manifested to take away our sins; and in him is no sin. Whosoever abideth in him sinneth not; whosoever sinneth hath not seen him, neither known him. Little children, let no man deceive you; he that doeth righteousness is righteous, even as he is righteous. He that committeth sin is of the devil; for the devil sinneth from the beginning. For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil. Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him; and he cannot sin because he is born of God. In this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the devil; whosoever doeth not righteousness is not of God, neither he that loveth not his brother." John 3: 5–10.

It is, therefore, apparent, that those who are "born of God" may and do live without sin. This being their privilege, it is of course their duty; and failing to improve this privilege and perform this duty, they must fall into condemnation. Let none say, then, I could not live sanctification if I could attain it; for all who are "born of God" are required to conform their lives to all the the demands of true holiness. The difference between the regenerate state, and that of entire sanctification, is not in the life or conduct, but in the experience. In both states outward holiness is required. In a state of complete purity, compliance with this requirement is easy and pleasant.—Advocate of Christian Holiness.

THE OLDEST TREE IN EUROPE.—The oldest tree on record in Europe, is asserted to be the cypress of Somma, in Lombardy, Italy. This tree is believed to have been in existence at the time of Julius Cæsar, forty-two years before Christ, and is therefore 1,911 years old. It is 106 feet in height, and twenty feet in circumference at one foot from the ground. Napoleon, when laying down his plan for the great road over the Simplon, diverged from a straight line to avoid injuring this tree.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

DEAR CHILDREN:—I suppose all of you who can, attend regularly some Sunday school, and consequently are more or less interested in the same, according to the prosperity of the school you attend, and the amount of love in your heart. Hoping to benefit as well as interest you, I will state a few facts about Sunday schools, which may not be familiar to all of the children.

While the Christian church is more than eighteen hundred years old, it is less than a century (one hundred years) since the first Sunday school was organized. Goodrich, the historian, says Robert Raikes, of Gloucester, Eng., commenced the first school in his native town, in 1781. That you will find, by a little mental calculation, to be ninety years ago. Ten years after (1791) a Sunday school was gathered in Philadelphia, but it did not meet with much success for a time. As early as 1810 a school was collected and organized by two young ladies in Beverly.

The schools are very few that reach back further than fifty years. In the last twenty-five years, thousands of schools have been organized, and millions of scholars taught in them. Now they exist in every state and territory in the United States, and are scattered throughout the civilized world; and even in heathen countries schools are collected by the missionaries, and much good is being done. How much? Who can tell? The amount of good that they are doing is inestimable. It may never be known until all schools shall be merged into one great school, of which Christ will be the Superintendent and Teacher.

That Sunday schools are an auxiliary to the church I firmly believe, and should be attended by all, old or young, who would "grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ."

I am persuaded that the first juvenile school for religious instruction was organized in Judea by the Master himself, the disciples not assisting. When Jesus took little children in his arms and blessed them, I think he left an example for the church to follow.

I have told you a little of the history of Sunday schools. I would like to speak of the influence they exert, and the relation of teacher and scholars, but I will reserve that for another time. Your friend,

Somers, Dec. 1871. A. L. ADAMS.

"MY OWN SAVIOR."

A little child was asked by her teacher to write down all the titles of Jesus Christ she could remember. She could not think of many, for she was only a little thing, but at the bottom of the list she put what was best of all, "And he is my own dear Savior."

Can you say, like this dear little one, "Jesus is mine; he is my own dear Savior?" Then you can say also, "I am his own child," and that is better still.

Would it be enough if you could only say, "Jesus is my own?" Why, you have many things that are your own, and sometimes you are careless enough to forget them, or lose them. But what if you should lose Jesus?"

Ah, but then, you are "his own." You can not only sing, "Jesus is my Shepherd," but you can say as well, "I am his own little lamb."

And then this heavenly Shepherd knows all his sheep by name. How many thousands of sheep he has scattered throughout the world, and yet he does not forget the least lamb of the flock!

You sing sometimes, "Jesus loves me," but you may sing as truly, "Jesus knows me." And what a happy thought it is that you have a gracious Savior who not only knows your name, but knows every thing about you—your imperfections and failings, and your little trials and troubles; you can pour them all into his loving ear, and not one will be forgotten!

"Blessed Jesus, gentle Shepherd, I thank thee that I am one of thy lambs. Thou knowest I am very apt to stray away from the fold. Watch over me, and keep me in safety, I pray Thee, and let me never perish."—Youth's Visitor.

THE DYING COLLIER BOY.—The gas in a coal-mine exploded one day, and several men and boys were buried in the ruins. When the dead bodies were dug out, a painted tin box was found by the side of one of the boys, and the following words, scratched with a nail, were seen on one side:

"Fret not, dear mother, for we were singing while we had time, and praising God. Mother, follow God more than I did."

On the other side he had scratched the following words:

"Johnny, farewell! Be a good lad to God and thy mother."

Noble little fellow! You see that he had three loves in his heart while waiting for death in that awful coal-mine, to wit, love for his brother, love for his mother, and love for God. These three loves destroyed all fear of death. Happy is that child in whose breast dwell these three holy loves!

A LAZY LAD, who did not go to church until the congregation were coming out, asked, "Is it done?" "No," was the reply. "It is all said; but I think it will be some time before it is all done."

THE APPETITE.

We see a wonderful adaptability in all the works of God to the accomplishment of the ends of their creation and to the perpetuity of their existence. This is especially noticeable in all living beings. How beautifully has the Creator designed all the different parts of the frame-work of each to fulfil its particular office and subserve the especial purpose of its being. Indeed, we see in these things a mighty argument to prove the existence of an intelligent creative mind of infinite wisdom, with corresponding power to carry out its conceptions of what was fitting and necessary.

His creatures would want to see different objects, behold the light of heaven, and gaze upon the beauties of nature; so eyes of wonderful construction and ingenuity are furnished. But in such places as the Mammoth Cave in Kentucky, where no ray of light penetrates, the fishes have no eyes. His creatures need to listen to nature's sounds; so ears of wonderful workmanship are given them. So also of the senses of smell and touch, the proper organs are provided. And as the wonderful machinery of life wears and wastes with use, and consequently would need replenishing, and as many of the substances with which they would come in contact would be unfit for the system, nature's Creator implanted taste with which proper substances could be discerned. The gratification of this taste lies at the foundation of the appetite, and it seems evident that this sense was to exercise a most important influence in deciding what should enter the stomach and be incorporated into the system. When man was pronounced "very good" at his creation, no doubt all his senses and tastes were in harmony with what would be for his well-being. He would naturally love those things that would be for his benefit; and yet, in man's case, reason was also to have a voice in deciding what should be eaten.

Man was led astray through the appetite. The forbidden fruit seemed "good for food" and would not have been rejected merely by the taste. Reason had an important part to act in deciding whether to take it. In fact, the whole moral nature was deeply interested; and had the appetite been obedient to these, far happier had it been for our first parents and the race. No, it never has been the exclusive province of the taste to determine what should be eaten. And especially is this true since it has suffered such terrible abuse. No reasonable person will deny that the appetite is a creature of education. As a general rule, it will crave those things to which it has been accustomed in early life. It seems a wise provision of nature that we can learn to love what we have provided for our food. Were it otherwise, man, in many circumstances under which he is placed, would find it difficult to accommodate himself to them. But now, while there are national peculiarities of diet as well as individual, by means of this power he can place himself in almost any position and put up with it. The Creator evidently foresaw the contingencies under which man would be placed and gave him this accommodating power. But oh! how terribly it has been abused. When we see the abominable perversions to which the appetite has been subjected we can but wonder at its capacity in this direction. It seems strange to a person that has never been perverted that man can ever learn to love the taste of tobacco or alcohol. And yet it seems that those things most distasteful, naturally, get the strongest control in the end, until the most powerful effort is required to abandon them. Nature at first turns aside with loathing and abhorrence, then submits and becomes fully enslaved. Can any sane man say that appetite thus abused and enslaved should be the sole judge, and we submit reason and judgment to its dictation? But how reasonable that this power of accommodation should be used for good purposes, to overcome bad habits and establish good ones, instead of the contrary.

Thus the moral and intellectual element in our nature can work in harmony with the appetite and the whole man receive benefit. Man must be happier thus to have all the elements of his nature in harmony with each other. Let us then use our reason, look around us, and break up our bad habits, bring the appetite into proper subjection to the higher nature, and thus find true enjoyment in life, and answer the end of our creation.—GEO. I. BUTLER, in Health Reformer.

ENTERIC FEVER.—The new term, enteric fever, denotes a disease that, though commonly attended with typhoidal symptoms, may exist without them, and is characterized especially by an ulcerated condition of the intestines. It is recognized as being strictly zymotic in its origin, and the poison which produces it is derived from stagnant water and decaying vegetable matter. It never originates, as does typhus fever, from overcrowding and insufficient nourishment, but from poison in the atmosphere.

THE best and safest tooth-wash in the world is tepid water. There is not a tooth-powder in existence, or a tooth-wash, that does not inflict a physical injury to the teeth, and promote their decay. Each dentist has a powder of his own, which he imagines will do a positive good without any injury whatever, but he is mistaken.
